Dr. Herty criticized this statement and said in substance, although I find myself unable to turn to the citation, that it was not reliable, and that the amount of dyestuffs in storage in Germany or under Germany's control amounted to something like 250,000 tons. Other statements of similar import were submitted to us, doubtless in good faith, but with an apparently reckless disregard of easily ascertainable facts, carrying the impression that this vast accumulation was the result of the activities during the war of these huge institutions, anticipatory of the return of peace, and designed for the recapture of the American and other markets which Germany had lost, temporarily at any rate, because of the war. Dr. Herty went to the Rhine, where one of these large establishments is situated, and insisted, although he was not permitted to enter it, that it was engaged in the manufacture of dyestuffs at the time, the assertion being based upon the fact that he saw smoke coming out of 14 chimneys. Well, that is some evidence, it may be, of activity; it is some evidence of the existence of a resumption in part of peace-time conditions; but it is a very poor basis upon which to found the assertion that production was continuing in Germany as heretofore.

A number of quotations supporting the doctor's theory was introduced during his examination, and also by others; but the significant thing about the Herty visit is that, although he made arrangements for a very considerable quantity of dyes for American consumption, being dyes not manufactured at present in America, or, at least, not manufactured as yet in quantity, not one pound of those dyes has been delivered or could have been delivered from that good hour to this; not one ounce of which has been available, largely because of the scarcity of materials. I assert deliberately that the informants of the committee in making these representations, both as to the surplus accumulations of dyes in Germany and as to the reestablishment of operations in German factories, must have been almost totally unacquainted with industrial conditions in Germany, besides being totally unfamiliar with the economic features of the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. President, it has been established, as I shall show later on, that the maximum amount of dyes stored in Germany does not exceed 22,000 tons, being 8,000 tons less than the amount annually demanded from Germany by American manufacturers prior to the war. Germany has scarcely enough for her own consumption, assuming that her textile manufacturers should resume operations; she has by no means enough to meet the requirements of France, of Germany, or of Italy. Her labor market is demoralized beyond description; her Government is sadly insecure; her people are still suffering from those sinister and unfortunate consequences of a long-continued struggle which tend to idleness, to discontent, and to discouragement; she has been overwhelmingly defeated, and faces the future with a burden of indemnities imposed upon her which no nation in all the history of civilization was ever before called upon to bear. She is torn by strife and dissension; contending factions struggling for and against the government have involved many parts of the former empire in conflict and bloodshed. She still maintains a huge army for the purpose of protection and for the defense of the government against its own people. The passions engendered by the war are still acute and the animosities of the Allies as vindictive toward her as they were at the close of the war on the 11th day of November, 1918. Her merchant fleet has been surrendered and a very large percentage of the boats used upon her rivers for domestic traffic has been wrested from her. She has lost 35 per cent of her coal resources, and, if the plebiscite in Upper Silesia shall go against her, she will have lost practically 50 per cent of such resources. She is required by the terms of the treaty to deliver to Italy up to 1924 from 4,500,000 to 8,500,000 tons of coal and for each of the following 5 years 8,500,000 tons, and she is required to deliver two-thirds of this enormous amount of coal overland. She must deliver to France 7,000,000 tons of coal per year for 10 years, and in addition, "annually for a period not exceeding 10 years an amount equal to the difference between the annual production before the war of the coal mines of the Nord and Pas de Calais, destroyed as a result of the war, and the production of the mines of the same area during the years in question, such delivery not to exceed 20,000,000 tons in any 1 year of the first 5 years, and 8,000,000 tons in any 1 year of the succeeding 5 years." She is also required to deliver to Belgium annually for 10 years 8,000,000 tons of coal.

All this means that from the mines yet remaining to her Germany is obliged to yield to her former enemies annually somewhere between twenty-five and thirty million tons of coal. Coal is the foundation of the dye industry, the primitive raw material from which come all the ingredients essential to that highly specialized industry.

The other day, Mr. President, France, acting under the treaty, moved her legions from the Rhine to the city of Frankfort and holds that historic German city to-day, because, among other things, Germany has not complied with her coal delivery requirements, her contention being that it has been absolutely impossible for her to do so.

Austria's only source of coal supply has been Germany, but Austria has neither money nor goods to exchange for coal, while Germany, under the onerous provisions of the treaty, has not the coal to deliver. Therefore the Austrians have suffered from cold during the winter just past to a degree of which we can hardly conceive. Her impoverished people have turned upon the forests of that ancient empire, and those surrounding the beautiful city of Vienna have disappeared, the Government limiting the supply to each person to 60 pounds per week. That once proud people have been beggared.

Tell me that a country like Germany is to-day, deprived of nearly 50 per cent of her coal resources and 75 per cent of her iron resources, compelled to contribute for the next 10 years at least one-half of the output of her coal mines to her ancient enemies, is about to deluge the world with a cheap supply of dyestuffs, to guard against which we must depart from every course of previous legislation and introduce the embargo system in the industries of America!

But, Mr. President, I have told but part of the story. Germany is required to do something more than this. Bear in mind that the dye industry consumes products distilled from what are called intermediates. The first extracts from coal are crudes; the extracts from the crudes are intermediates; and the extracts from the intermediates consist of those essentials needed for the manufacture of dyes, medicines, perfumes, and explosives. I read another condition of this treaty:

Germany undertakes to deliver to France——

And, mind, this is in addition to the coal requirements—and to transport to the French frontier by rail or by water the following products, during each of the three years following the coming into force of this treaty—

These are partly intermediates:

	Tons.
Benzol	35,000
Coal tar	50,000
Sulphate of ammonia	30,000

A total of 115,000 tons of coal tar or its products and essential to the prosecution of the dye industry. It is further provided that—

All or part of the coal tar may, at the option of the French Government, be replaced by corresponding quantities of products of distillation, such as light oils, heavy oils, anthracene, naphthalene, or pitch.

That is to say, Germany can pay—to use a fairly good illustration—either in gold or in silver, but she must pay. She must give practically 50 per cent of her coal-tar product. In addition to that, she must furnish France for three years with 115,000 tons of coal tar and some of its by-products, notwithstanding, which it is here contended, that unless we virtually continue economic war conditions the poor, unfortunate Americans, inspired by the spirit of patriotism, who came forward in the hour of their country's need and invested in this business, will go into bankruptcy.

Mr. President, I can not conceive of a more cold-blooded proposition. Germany is down and out for the present and the heel of the conqueror is upon her prostrate form. She is where she deserves to be. The Allies have imposed upon her indemnities the amount of which she does not know and can not know until the reparation commission shall have taken an inventory of the Empire and determined how much blood can be taken from her without resulting in dissolution. We know of specific sums amounting to one hundred thousand million marks in gold, which is the equivalent of twenty-five thousand millions of dollars, twenty thousand millions of marks to be paid on or before the 1st day of May, 1921. She can pay these sums provided her industries are resuscitated, thus giving her articles of merchandise which she can exchange with the other nations, or the reparation commission may take whatever in their judgment can be made to realize this enormous sum. She never will pay these indemnities in the latter way. She must pay them in gold, which she has not, or merchandise, which, under the onerous terms of the treaty, she can not manufacture.

You say it serves her right. I shall engage in no quarrel upon that subject, although I do not think so; but the brutal fact is that having imposed these indemnities we propose to cut off the possibility of her reengaging in international commerce by passing a series of drastic enactments which under no circumstances would we ever have passed if there had been no war, in which case they would have been far more important and essential than they can be at present.

Mr. President, I have not yet told the whole story. It is necessary for me to recite other clauses from the treaty. The first section of Annex VI of Part VIII reads as follows:

Germany accords to the reparation commission an option to require as part of reparation the delivery by Germany of such quantities and kinds of dyestuffs and chemical drugs as the commission may designate, not exceeding 50 per cent of the total stock of each and every kind of dyestuff and chemical drug in Germany or under German control at the date of the coming into force of the present treaty.

This option shall be exercised within 60 days of the receipt by the commission of such particulars as to stocks as may be considered necessary by the commission.

Under this provision, whatever the amount of the accumulated dyes may be, 50 per cent of them, together with 50 per cent of all drugs in German possession, pass to the reparation commission for the use of the Allies. I have said that 22,000 tons represent that accumulation. Eleven thousand tons, or one-half of that amount, can not be disposed of by Germany at all under the treaty. She may dispose of the other half, but only by the consent of the reparation commission, which is required, by the terms of the treaty bringing them into existence, to take account of all of the material resources of Germany, and then to determine what the amount of her reparation should be. Can we suppose for a moment that this commission, representing great competitive nations, will not insist upon handling this valuable product so that the proceeds may be utilized for the purposes of the treaty?

Mr. President, if Germany had 250,000 tons of dyestuffs, and if she were manufacturing as much more, she could not enter into competition with the United States, or with any of the other manufacturing nations, except under conditions to be fixed by this commission, which to-day exercises a greater power than any potentate or president in existence. Under the terms of this treaty they are the receivers for the German Empire, and except as to matters of life and death they are the real rulers of that unhappy country, and they are created and empowered to enforce the duties of their office because of the enormity of the injuries inflicted upon the Allies by Germany during the war, and the need for compelling her to disclose every item of her resources and then be governed by the action of this commission. If I thirsted for power, I would rather be a member of that commission than be President of the United States. If authority is the ambition of any man, he can find its personification to a greater degree in the powers of the reparation commission than he can in those of the Kaiser before the war, or of the President of the United States at this time.

I have not yet, however, with regard to this feature of the treaty, told the whole story. I have called attention to Germany's loss of about 50 per cent of her coal resources; to the treaty requirement of delivery for the next 10 years of large quantities of her output; to the requirement that she shall, in addition, for three years deliver 115,000 tons of coal tar and two of its derivatives to France; to the fact that 50 per cent of her dyestuffs are to be taken over absolutely by the reparation commission; and that leads me to section 2 of annex 6 of part 8, which reads:

Germany further accords to the reparation commission an option to require delivery during the period from the date of the coming into force of the present treaty until January 1, 1920, and during each period of six months thereafter until January 1, 1925, of any specified kind of dyestuff and chemical drug up to an amount not exceeding 25 per cent of the German production of such dyestuffs and chemical drugs during the previous six months' period. If in any case the production during such period of six months was, in the opinion of the commission, less than normal, the amount required may be 25 per cent of the normal production—

Which would be more than 25 per cent of the actual production. We take, therefore, one-half of all accumulated dye products and at least 25 per cent for the next five years of all their manufactured dye products, leaving 75 per cent, or less than 75 per cent if during any year the production is less than normal, for their disposition.

In order to clinch this requirement, section 5 of annex 6 defines the expression "dyestuffs and chemical drugs," and this to my mind is one of the most objectionable and indefensible parts of the treaty. It reads:

The above expression, "dyestuffs and chemical drugs," includes all synthetic dyes and drugs and intermediate or other products used in connection with dyeing, so far as they are manufactured for sale. The present arrangement shall also apply to cinchona bark and salts of quinine—

Neither of which is a coal-tar product. In other words, in addition to the levy upon the dye product, we take 25 per cent of all the quinine and cinchona bark in Germany during these periods. Yet there are people who lie awake nights in America or dream horrid nightmare dreams of coming German competition, which, with the return of normal relations, will wipe industrial America from the face of the earth unless we heed these premonitory signals and continue the war embargo by the substitution of a legislative one therefor.

An old philosopher once said that avarice and greed were deaf to reason and blind to truth, and no truer sentiment, in my judgment, ever fell from the lips of man. The faculty behind this bill, the driving force which has put it through the House and threatens to carry it through the Senate, is the greed and avarice of man. Blind to justice, deaf to truth, intent only upon the continued and permanent enjoyment of monopoly in their business, they create specters of coming war, announce the overweening necessity of supporting certain lines of industry by drastic legislation imposing millions of dollars of taxes upon the people, using the passions and animosities, hatreds and vindictiveness, created by this war against Germany and other countries, as the mainspring of their action, knowing full well that unless this legislation can be accomplished before these passions shall have subsided its enactment will become absolutely and forever impossible.

So much, then, Mr. President, for the treaty and the provisions which were enacted by the congress of Versailles designed to permanently retire Germany and the German people from the theater of international commerce. I am not now criticizing the harshness of those provisions; I took occasion to do that when the treaty was before the Senate. I am merely applying them to the present situation because they seem to be conclusive of it.

I now call attention to the statement of Mr. Irving A. Keene, which appeared in the Daily News Record, of New York, on Saturday, November 8 last, at the very time when the committee was considering this bill, some six months ago, and conditions are worse now than they were then. This is dated London Bureau, 27 Cannon Street. The article reads:

"Far from being in a position to dump dyestuffs and other chemicals on American, British, and other markets, Germany is actually short, and when she has delivered to the Allies the quantities required by the peace treaty there will be little left to export. The acute shortage of coal and raw materials precludes the possibility of her becoming anything more than a weak competitor for at least a year."

That is the conclusion reached by Irving A. Keene, chairman of the advisory committee on drugs, chemicals, and dyestuffs of the American Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Keene has just returned from a month in Germany. He got through to the interior of the country and was given to understand in some of the places he visited that he was the first civilian to do so.

Mr. Keene left London in August for Paris. Through the peace commission and the commercial attaché to the American Embassy in Paris, and by virtue of his credentials from London, he obtained military passes into Germany. From Paris he proceeded to Cologne, where he was put through to Coblenz. At Coblenz, through the Rhineland High Commission, he was given a "high" German pass into the interior.

RHINELAND FACTORIES.

Mr. Keene first visited the Rhineland towns. Factories and plants in the district are working for private German account, but under control of the occupying military authorities. Practically none of them could offer goods for export. Up to 50 per cent of their output as in January, 1919, must be sold to the German Government for delivery to the Allies as indemnity, and little or nothing is left for export. All production is suffering from a serious lack of raw materials.

Bayer & Co., for instance, had nothing to offer excepting a few vat colors, and could not sell anything without instructions from the Government. Colors other than vat colors were very scarce, and supplies of medicinal chemicals extremely low.

NOTHING AT FRANKFORT.

At Frankfort Mr. Keene was shown every courtesy by the Chemische Verein. Such big firms as Meister Lucius & Brunning and Cassela had practically nothing to offer. The former's place had been bombed, and they were able only to fill their orders and supply their fixed percentage to the Government for the Allies.

The secretary of the Frankfort Chamber of Commerce showered every attention on Mr. Keene and was obviously desirous of establishing cordial business relations.

NOR AT DARMSTADT.

At Darmstadt such firms as E. Merck & Co. and the Griesheim Elektron had fine, large plants but few materials for sale. Raw materials for both medicinal chemicals and dyes are badly needed.

Let me say again that some of these raw materials are being exported to Germany from the United States.

From Darmstadt Mr. Keene went to Berlin, where he called on numerous manufacturers of consequence, such as Reidell and Schering, but here, as elsewhere, there was practically nothing to offer.

In Berlin is the export and import license department of the German Government, which is eager to stimulate Germany's foreign trade in every way. Mr. Keene was assured of its utmost cooperation in endeavoring to secure any goods he might wish to buy.

Mr. Keene speaks interestingly of the American Chamber of Commerce in Berlin, which, contrary to the general impression, was active during the entire period of the war at its headquarters, Equitable Building, Friedrichstrasse 59. The chamber naturally encountered difficulty at times, owing to the absence of old members and the lack of new ones, but Mr. Keene says it is now in a flourishing state and promises to be very active. The acting president of the association is Fred. W. King; the secretary is Arthur E. Dunning.

During his month in Germany Mr. Keene was treated with the greatest courtesy, respect, and kindness. All information was cheerfully given him, and his visits were made the subject of much comment in the local German press, the question often being put as to whether he was there as a buyer or a competitor. It was almost all courtesy, however, and no goods.

RAW MATERIALS, COAL, CREDIT.

The great demand is for raw materials, coal, and credit. Whenever a German business man started to talk to him he knew just what was coming, because these three subjects were on everybody's tongue.

A year's credit was asked in most cases, but some came down to six months, and a few even to three months, but no security was offered. The Germans, showing a surprising familiarity with the world's prices, sought to buy so closely that there was not sufficient profit to make the transaction a desirable risk.

There seems little prospect of immediate improvement in production, owing not alone to the lack of raw materials and coal, but to the prevalent attitude of discouragement.

I may say, Mr. President, that I know of nothing that can discourage a nation so completely as the consciousness that all that it earns must go to the payment of an indemnity due to a foreign enemy.

Employers complain of a lack of energy on the part of the workmen. The proportion of productivity per man was quoted from as low as 33⅓ per cent to as high as 75 per cent of the prewar normal. Mr. Keene's explanation of this is that the German workman, for the first time in his life, feels that he is equal to his employer. No other attitude is possible, because if he does not feel that way of his own accord it is drummed into him continually by his fellow workmen or by socialistic agitators. His trouble is to demonstrate his equality, and the only way he can do this is to refuse to work except when he feels like it; in other words, to order his own life.

Mr. Keene predicts, however, that this condition is a temporary one only, as the German workman will come to a different conclusion when he finds that his equality, as expressed by idleness, does not put food into his mouth.

Mr. Keene does not expect to see conditions improve until the hardships of the coming winter are over. The lack of coal will make great trouble.

It may be well to quote from authorities in support of my statement regarding the quantity of dyes on hand in Germany and accumulated during the war. On page 293 Mr. Herman A. Metz, president of the Consolidated Color & Chemical Co., of Newark, N. J., reads a letter from what he calls "one of the German big six," dated October 21:

We wrote you last on the 10th as per copy, etc. We can not come to any decision yet regarding the delivery of vat colors and helindone colors. Our stocks in entirety have been taken over, under the peace treaty, by the Entente, and our portion of 50 per cent has also been held until they exercise their option, which they have not done as yet. Until they do that we can not dispose of our 50 per cent. It is possible that after the option has been exercised by the English and they have taken their allotment we will then have colors for sale to America. But there are so many questions arising regarding quantities, which are small, that we can not say anything about distribution, because we want to take care of customers in other countries as well.

When we wrote you before about larger orders for helindone colors we had in mind new manufacture, but since that time new questions have risen, particularly the coal question, which has so sharpened itself that we have had to stop most of our plants. We will do our best, however, to supply you with vat colors as soon as we get your orders with your importation license.

We hope that after the coal question has been settled and after our producing possibilities have been extended we can take orders again.

This gentleman fixed the quantity of dyes on hand at this time at 40,000 tons, since shown to be considerably in excess of the actual facts.

Mr. Wood also discusses this subject on pages 243 and 244 of the record. I will not take the time to read all of these extracts myself, but will ask permission to insert in the RECORD the statement of the witness, beginning with the words "at a meeting of the American Manufacturers' Export Association," at the bottom of page 242, to and including the extract from the New York Evening Post of October 4, 1919, on page 244.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

At a meeting of the American Manufacturers' Export Association held in New York on October 16, 1919, and presided over by the vice president of the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Export Co., one of the speakers delivered an address upon "Our future trade with Russia," in the course of which he summarized the kind of Germany there will be to compete with in the world markets thus:

"In the first place, there will be a Germany whose nationally organised efficiency has been fearfully distorted, a Germany no longer united at home, a Germany whose competitors can truthfully say they love her for the enemies she has made, a Germany where wages have risen almost more than raw materials. * * * Germany has no capital, no raw material, even, to supply her own factories or her own local demands."

The New York Post, in its chemical industries section, dated October 4, 1919, published an article entitled, "This country's dyestuffs have become a world factor." This article is printed under the name of Paul Nobbee, vice president of the American Aniline Products (Inc.). From this article I quote the statements relating to the German dye industry and its comparison with ours, which I shall now read:

"One thing is certain, the old order of things has passed, never to return. Germany, once dominant in the field of dyestuffs, now has a rival, if not rivals. To be sure, Germany will continue to make dyestuffs and to ship them abroad, but she will not be able to do it on the same scale as she did before the war. Her output will be curtailed in quantity and curtailed also in kind. Many of the colors that she made before the war she will not make again, because it will no longer be profitable. Unless I should be a poor prophet, I predict that principal among the colors she will drop will be the majority of those now made in this country, the bulk of which form the backbone of the export trade.

"They are what we may call the cheaper colors, the colors of most simple dyeing method. * * * Conditions in Germany surrounding the dyestuff trade are grave, very grave. The shortage of coal of course affects all industries alike, but tenfold an industry that depends upon coal, not only as a creative force for motive power, but for the very things upon which the industry is built—coal tar. * * * The German manufacturers are now buying in the United States such raw materials as benzol, alcohol, etc. * * * I, for one, believe that it will take many years before the German dyestuffs industry will reach again that state of efficiency that made it possible to conquer the markets of the world.

"The prices of these colors and all other colors in stock, without duty, are from five to seven times that of normal, in Swiss francs; what the prices will be for goods manufactured to-day instead of in 1915 and 1916 nobody knows. For a certainty, they will not be less, but probably much higher, while at our end, with essential raw materials in abundance, increased and more economic production, prices will go lower. Even as matters stand to-day, there are certain bulk colors, such as sulphur black, indigo blue, Congo red, negrosine, acid orange, scarlet, black, and many others too numerous to be mentioned, the price level of which Germany can not possibly touch."

I have not the privilege of Mr. Nobbee's acquaintance, and am unable to state with what authority of experience and knowledge he wrote. He appears to have an intimate acquaintance with his subject, and I assume from the tenor of his article that his interest and sympathy are with the domestic industry. I venture to suggest that you can form your own opinion as to the competency of his knowledge by calling upon him to testify at your hearing.

In the Daily News Record of October 30, 1919, there appeared this article, the source of which is not given. I presume it will be attributed to German propaganda, but I present it in the belief that the assertions it contains will carry conviction irrespective of its origin:

"Keen pessimism is being expressed by German trade experts over the prospects of selling German dyes in foreign markets. This feeling is due in part to the peace terms and in part to realization of the fact that the Allies learned how to produce dyes while making explosives for the late war.

"Fear is also being expressed that foreign countries will be able to push Germany out of the market with mass production. It is further asserted that the industry has been harmed by the confiscation by France of factories for dyes and chemicals and by America's seizure of German patents and their distribution to Americans, so that Germany would be guilty of breach of patent if it attempted to sell dyes in the United States again."

Mr. George F. Sykes, of W. F. Sykes & Co., an importing firm representing dyes not made in Germany, but which have to meet whatever competition must be encountered from German dyes, upon returning from France in the latter part of October was quoted by a newspaper interviewer, thus:

"Mr. Sykes did not go to Germany, but he said a French chemist who had noted conditions in that country had brought back the report that of three dye plants visited two were shut down for a lack of fuel, while the other was working a 10-hour day."

The New York Evening Post's chemical section of October 4, 1919, contains this news item:

"HOCHST DYE WORKS TO CLOSE.

"Owing to a shortage of coal a large part of the Hochst Dye Works, in Frankfort, is to close down, according to a recent issue of the Frankfurter Zeitung. How long they will remain closed seems to depend entirely on the supply of coal available. It is said, however, that the pharmaceutical and a few other important departments will continue in operation for the present. The 1918 report of the Hochst Dye Works states that so far it has not been possible to restore the production of peace goods to any great extent. In the course of the work of renovating the peace plants it became evident, moreover, that they had suffered so severely—partly from their long inactivity, partly from their war uses—that the amounts hitherto reserved would not suffice for the depreciations effected and that additional funds must be provided. Apart from the new plant required, the restoration of the business to a peace footing will require considerable expenditure."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he knew that the importers are now sending out blank orders to the various users in the United States and urging them to order very much more than they have ever used before, and promising to supply it from Germany?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I am not aware of that; but I am aware of the fact that those dyes can not be secured under present conditions—and I mean treaty conditions—except through the reparations commission, assuming of course that they are attending to their duties, of which I have no doubt, and that it will be impossible for them to comply with any extraordinary requirements unless we have been grossly deceived concerning the actual quantities on hand. I do know, as I stated yesterday, that repressive legislation of Great Britain, France, and Italy has been repealed so as to enable them to secure such dyes as were available from the German supply, and of course they have since secured considerable amounts.

I refer now to the testimony of Mr. Pickhardt as reported on pages 398 to 401 of the hearings. Mr. Pickhardt is a stockholder and director of Kuttroff, Pickhardt & Co., dealers in dyestuffs. These gentlemen are importers, and an attack was made upon Mr. Pickhardt's Germanism, so called, shortly after he gave this testimony. Fortunately he was able to establish his Americanism, I think to the full satisfaction of any impartial citizen who is sufficiently interested to read the statements.

Mr. Pickhardt went over to England, Belgium, Holland, France, and Germany, and had just returned two days before he appeared before our committee. He went, he said, to buy dyestuffs and to find out about conditions in the market in Germany and other countries. This is an interesting statement:

Mr. PICKHARDT. In Germany I visited the Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik, at Ludwigshafen-on-the-Rhine, in the French occupied territory, to see whether any of the dyes needed by the United States consumers could be had and under what conditions. I found stocks surprisingly small, in contradiction of the estimates which were made in the United States. Many important products were entirely lacking and others were on hand in negligible quantities. Manufacture was practically at a standstill, except of a few colors. This was due in part to shortage of raw materials and in part to uncertainty of the future. With the exception of the shipments to France, Belgium, and Italy, little could be exported, as export licenses were not obtainable. On June 4 I succeeded in obtaining offers of vat dyes, anthracene, and alizarine dyes and a few other much-needed colors from the 50 per cent of the stock on hand which was not subject to requisition under the peace treaty.

Senator CURTIS. What did the 50 per cent amount to?

Mr. PICKHARDT. They refused to give me those figures in Germany, on the ground that they had handed the figures in to the German Government and that the German Government had handed those figures in to the Allied Governments, and that they were Government figures.

Senator CURTIS. What was it, if you heard anything about it?

Mr. PICKHARDT. I was told it was, approximately, 30,000 tons.

In October arrangements were made between commissioners for the allied and associated powers and for the German Government for the fulfilling of the peace treaty requirements concerning the stocks on hand in advance of ratification and a preliminary division of the reparation lot was agreed on between the United States, French, British, Italian, and Belgian representatives. The British list was presented in a few days and included all classes of dyes with the exception of indigo. The United States list had not been presented on November 27, the day I left Germany. I am familiar with the stocks of only the Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik, and may say that in the case of the vat dyes and most other colors of most interest to United States consumers the quantities which were available for this country are quite small. The manufacturers feel that they must make as fair a distribution as possible to consumers all over the world, and will not, therefore, favor one country at the expense of others. They are attempting to resume the manufacture of many products, but it is a slow process, and in some instances raw materials are lacking at present. Three of the German dye plants were closed down indefinitely while I was in Germany, owing to lack of coal.

I also found there serious difficulties in transportation, which means that it takes several weeks for shipments to arrive at the seaport from the works, and then, of course, after that it will take a number of weeks before they can arrive in this country.

Senator CURTIS. Did you see the Bayer & Co.'s factory over there?

Mr. PICKHARDT. No, sir; the only factory I visited was the Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik.

Senator CURTIS. Did you go inside that factory?

Mr. PICKHARDT. Yes, sir.

Senator CURTIS. You say it was partly shut down?

Mr. PICKHARDT. They were resuming the manufacture of some colors, and a few colors they were already making. Of course, one of the largest articles of production is fixation nitrogen, which has nothing to do direct with the manufacture of dyestuffs.

He was then asked the question, and answered that he represented that company before the war in America.

On page 401 he was asked by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] whether these factories practically stopped making dyes during the war, and his answer is:

Mr. PICKHARDT. Yes, sir; almost entirely.

Senator SUTHERLAND. They were making gases?

Mr. PICKHARDT. Yes, sir; they were making intermediates for explosives and gases. They had no raw materials, practically speaking, with which to make dyes; and, furthermore, they had no outlet for the dyes if they had made them.

Senator SUTHERLAND. Do you think any large quantities of dyes have been shipped away to the interior of Germany from the factories and is ready for export?

Mr. PICKHARDT. I think it entirely improbable, and have every reason to believe nothing of the sort was done. I might add that two factories which are in the unoccupied territory at the present time would be able to ship their entire stocks of colors away, because there is no prohibition to doing so. Trade with Germany is allowed and there is no control over their stocks, but they have decided to do the same as the other factories—that is, to keep their stock intact and to work not only in the letter but in the spirit of the reparation clause in the peace treaty.

I think, Mr. President, that if I have not demonstrated the absence of any German competition, either potential or actual, I shall be unable to do so if I occupy the remainder of the session in a discussion of the subject. I am unable to perceive, assuming these assertions to be well-founded, how any impartial mind can refuse to accept them. I have encountered nothing except general assertions and general denials in my investigation of them. If subsequent to the war specific instances of the importation of the sort of dyes in question could have been cited, we may be sure that the advocates of this bill would have been swift to inform the committee of the fact. If consignments had been contracted for by specific agreements subject to future delivery, that fact would have been known to the War Trade Board, and particularly to its chemical branch, and would have been eagerly reported to the committee, for the War Trade Board, or that branch of it having control of this subject, is absolutely and enthusiastically committed to the enactment of this bill.

Under the provisions of the House bill, creating a license system, it is that board which will probably be intrusted with its execution. That may have nothing to do with the attitude of its members upon the dye proposition; it may be merely an incident; I only wish to emphasize the fact that, being in direct touch with all matters of foreign trade connected with the dye industry, and, therefore, fully informed both of its actual condition and its potentialities, it would have given us information regarding importations if there had been any. The fact that they did not do so affords, to my mind, the strongest possible support of the contention that there are none to import which are at present available.

Mr. President, we can not afford to pass legislation of this kind upon mere speculation and apprehension. We can not afford to commit a great American industry to the tender mercies of a few corporations upon the theory that unless we do so it can not survive. In the absence of the most cogent proof of that fact, we can not afford, as a Government of 110,000,000 people, to go into partnership with this industry and command every citizen in the United States to pay tribute to its treasury, subject only to the discretion of those interested in the industry, unless they make out a conclusive case. If we do, then I am unable to perceive how we are properly discharging the trust which we owe to the people who sent us here. It becomes class legislation, pure and simple. God knows, we have indulged in enough legislation of that sort, both for capital and for labor, and have long ago begun to reap the harvest whose beginnings are ominous of what is to come.

The great industries of the United States, time after time, have come to Congress for favors and have received them. They have many times made representations like those I have been considering, which have been accepted. As a result, industry has concentrated itself more completely than in any other country in the world, yielding colossal fortunes to its beneficiaries and at the same time endowing them with a political power wholly inconsistent with the genius of self-government. On the other hand, the exemption of great bodies of men from the operation of laws designed for the public good has also encouraged a political development equally sinister and equally indefensible; both, however, resulting from class legislation of the sort we are now considering, and applications for which will increase from time to time just in proportion as we recognize and grant them as demanded.

Mr. President, I hope that my judgment is at fault when I say that the inevitable consequence of this legislation is to add one more to the many monopolies which have troubled the affairs of the Nation for many years. The tendency of the times in everything is to concentration.

That is true socially, economically, and politically; and there are many advantages of concentration under proper restraints, particularly as regards efficiency and economy. The misfortune is that both are cast aside when it is no longer necessary to observe them and when it is perfectly safe to disregard them—a fact which the experiences of the past quarter of a century amply sustain.

Let us see whether my apprehension has any basis in fact. There are two outstanding concerns in the dye industry, the one being the National Aniline Co. and the other the Du Ponts. The National Aniline Co. has already absorbed eight or a dozen institutions, and its net profits, so far as we know, in 18 months' time are the equivalent of 100 per cent of its capitalization, much of which is, in all probability, fictitious. It is naturally reaching out, and will continue to reach out and take under its wings other prosperous or promising institutions, as will its competitors.

Mr. Irenee Du Pont was before the committee, an enthusiastic advocate of this bill. He had a right to come, and it was perfectly proper that he should urge consideration of any measure designed, as this is designed, to encourage his business. The companies which he represents in part are among the most prosperous in the United States. During the war they numbered their profits in hundreds of millions. Taken collectively, I have no doubt that, with the exception of the Standard Oil Co. and the United States Steel Corporation, the Du Pont aggregation is the most formidable of all American enterprises; and I shall not undertake even to guess at the extent of its accumulated millions. It is in powder, and in all the collateral branches of the industry, and it is also in the dyestuffs business.

Mr. Du Pont, in reply to a question of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], on page 161, said:

> We must have an embargo until we learn to do it. It is up to you people; if you say two years, as the Longworth bill has it, you will prevent the very thing that you have in mind.

In reply to a question by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]:

> How much time do you advocate?
> This is for the embargo, mind you.
> Mr. DU PONT. I would say 10 years; 5 years may be enough, but the more time you give, the more capital will flow into it.
> The Longworth bill is an embargo; it is a misnomer to call it a license bill; the intention is not to license imports, except in rare cases. It is substantially an embargo bill * * * on substantially everything. There are undoubtedly a few dyes to-day that would be imported, but it is substantially an embargo bill. I think in six months it won't be necessary to license at all.

On page 166, in reply to a question of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], Mr. Du Pont says:

> I don't know that I have touched everything I may know about. But the situation is something like this: I have touched upon the fact that this is really an embargo bill, rather than a licensing bill, because I believe that inside of a year or 18 months there will not be any licenses granted.

I think he is right about that, as I shall attempt to demonstrate later on.

Mr. Du Pont continues:

> In a preliminiary hearing we had in Senator PENROSE'S office—

That was not before the committee; it was before the chairman of the committee.

> he asked a number of us to come down here and give our ideas, and asked us, "What do you want?"

That is the usual question that is put to the seeker for protective privileges.

> I say an embargo, with a permit to bring in these things we do not make for a 10-year period. I say we want, second, a tariff in addition to the embargo; the embargo may miscarry; put as high a duty as you can get behind the embargo wall. If the embargo works, it don't make any difference what the duties are.

There, Mr. President, is a wonderfully significant statement. It is true. What is the need for duties if the embargo works? Why should the Government of the United States collect duties if competition can be entirely crushed by a different system?

> But if the embargo leaks, put in the second wall, a high tariff behind; put as high tariff as you can get.
> I want, further, then, and at the risk of seeming to get a monopoly, to urge that you should provide that the Sherman law does not apply to the dye industry, if it is thought necessary in the opinion of some Government official.

Give us not only an embargo and a high tariff, but repeal the Sherman law in our behalf.

> But suppose some unexpected situation happens requiring that we get dye makers together on short notice to exchange information. Some Government officer ought to be designated to say the Sherman Act does not apply to the dye industries, because it is in the interests of the public need, if that time ever comes. The importance of the matter has not been exaggerated by what these gentlemen have told you. I am not going on to that question, though I feel strongly about it, because you are satisfied. That phase should be considered. It is a good deal to ask, but the situation is not without precedents.

Mr. President, I think that is one of the most astonishing declarations or demands ever made before a committee of Congress. A man representing the colossal combination known as the Du Ponts, with untold capital, not only demands an absolute embargo, but as high a tariff as possible, so that if the embargo should happen to leak they will still have another wall, amounting virtually to prohibition; and, in addition, he asks for the suspension of the Sherman antitrust law, not as affecting the entire country but only as affecting the dye industry.

I do not hesitate to say that if it is necessary in order to sustain this industry that we suspend a law universally applicable and designed to protect the people against combinations, plus an embargo, plus a prohibitory tariff, then we ought not to sustain the industry at all. It is the most monstrous proposition in legislation that has confronted me during my term of service. It is the most impudent proposal that I have encountered while serving upon the Finance Committee. Its end must needs be absolute monopoly; and I here predict, although I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and may not live to see it, that if this bill becomes a law within the next five years the dye industry of the United States will be entirely in the hands of the Du Ponts and the National Aniline Co.

Friday, May 7, 1920.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have heretofore elaborated the claim of the supporters of the pending bill that it is of pressing importance because of the menace of German competition. I discussed that subject, possibly, with too much detail, and I should hesitate to return to it but for the fact that my attention has just been directed to a circular letter of the Textile Alliance of date April 22, and referring to it.

The Textile Alliance, Mr. President, is a semiofficial organization, closely identified with the War Trade Bureau. As its name indicates, it is a combination of men who are interested in the textile industry, with which the dye industry is completely identified. That organization has to do with the importation of dyestuffs to the United States from Germany. Hence its circular is, for all substantial purposes, of an official nature. It is a notice to the consumer, and it is so important, as bearing upon this branch of the discussion, that I feel not only justified but required to present it to the consideration of the Senate. I shall, therefore, read it in full:

Circular No. 15. TEXTILE ALLIANCE (INC.),
New York, April 22, 1920.

NOTICE TO CONSUMERS.

GENTLEMEN: The Textile Alliance (Inc.), New York, has received from its Paris representative, Mr. Edward S. Chapin, his report covering the period from March 3, 1920, the date of his arrival in Paris, to April 7, 1920.

The following notes on the dyestuff situation are condensed from that report and supplemented by more recent cables and by the statements of Mr. A. M. Patterson, president of the Textile Alliance (Inc.), who left Paris on April 7.

The sources from which German dies are now obtainable are as follows:

1. Dyes ordered from the first distribution of dyes impounded under the peace treaty, the orders being placed through the Textile Alliance (Inc.), as the representative of the State Department, and amounting to approximately 300 tons.

2. The portion of the first distribution available for the United States not already ordered as above, amounting to approximately 1,200 tons.

3. The Herty option.

It is, perhaps, desirable that I should say, in explanation of the third item, that when Dr. Herty was in Europe he apparently secured an option from German dye manufacturers, to be furnished from the supply of dies on hand not going to the reparation commission, upon a considerable amount of dyestuffs to meet the American demand.

4. The second distribution, which is now under consideration in Paris, which will be equal in amount approximately to the first distribution, or approximately 1,500 tons.

On the 25th of March—

Not two months ago—

the status of orders was as follows:

	Pounds.
Vat colors ordered	464,700
Vat colors shipped or ready, reparation	130,765
Vat colors ready for shipment, Herty option	39,796
Total (37 per cent)	170,561

That is 37 per cent of the requirements of the American consumers of dyestuffs on file with the Textile Alliance—

	Pounds.
Nonvat colors ordered	1,242,305
Nonvat colors shipped or ready, reparation	193,347
Nonvat colors ready for shipment, Herty option	152,971
Total (28 per cent)	346,318

That is 28 per cent of the demand. It appears, then, from this official statement that the available supply for American consumers of the demand heretofore made amounts to 37 per cent of the vat colors and to only 28 per cent of the nonvat colors—less than one-half in each instance. When we recall that the agent of this alliance is in Europe upon the mission to which the circular relates, that he is charged with the duty of securing colors for the American demand, which is both insistent and persistent, notwithstanding which he has been unable up to this time to secure over 37 per cent of one part of the demand and 28 per cent of the remainder, the contention that the American dye industry is confronted with ruinous competition becomes ridiculous. But I proceed with the letter:

A cable dated April 11 and received April 13 reports that a conference was held on April 11 between Messrs. Perret and Harrold, representing the State Department; Mr. Chapin, representing the Textile Alliance (Inc.); Mr. von Weinberg, representing the Cartel; Mr. Moellnor, representing Casselia; Messrs. Bosch and Schunon, representing Badische; and Mr. Duisberg, representing Bayer.

Those, Mr. President, are the names of the dye manufacturers in Germany.

The cable states: "Badische submitted pro forma invoices additional vats 96,000 pounds, nonvats 15,000 pounds, and stated orally balance orders against Herty option, barring unexpected obstacles, would be finished inside three months. Same statement made by Weinberg for Cartel. Duisberg for Bayer, submitted additional vats 13,000 pounds, nonvats 25,000 pounds, and stated in letter:

"We hope improved state our manufacture will enable us execute remainder your orders shortly.

"Hoechst behind in filling orders. Weinberg promises to see them. Our orders now stand:

"Total vats shipped or ready, reparation and Cartel together, 280,000, equal 60 per cent poundage ordered. Total nonvats 390,000, equal 31 per cent. More coming every day."

It will be observed that the amount of importable colors ordered through the Textile Alliance (Inc.) under the first distribution was exceedingly small. The aggregate tonnage of all colors available, including those which may be imported into the United States as well as those which may not be imported, was first definitely indicated in the following cable, dated March 4, to the State Department:

"Total amount impounded stocks dyestuffs, German inventory, 15th August, in metric tons, 21,401."

The alleged enormous supply of 250,000 tons, then, has diminished to the extreme total of only 21,401 tons.

This included 790 tons intermediates and 1,300 tons mixtures at Bayer plant, Leverkusen. Net amount, 19,300 tons, also contains mixtures and doubtful colors at all other factories. Divide foregoing figures by 2 to get Allies' share. Net amount comprises over 13,000 types of dyestuffs, including duplication caused by two or more factories making same dye.

Mr. President, the Textile Alliance is the moving power behind the dye bill; the Textile Alliance is the inspiration of the dye bill; the Textile Alliance is charged with the duty of securing dyes that are absolutely indispensable to the textile industry of this country, small in amount, but which can not be furnished as yet by the local manufacturers. The Textile Alliance was, therefore, presumably behind the assumption made by witnesses before the committee that Germany during the war had accumulated 250,000 tons of dyestuffs. Yet that identical agency, on the 22d day of last month in a circular to the industry, is obliged to report, upon information furnished from Paris by its own representative, that there are 19,300 tons, of which only one-half is available to the reparation commission, out of which the United States receives only its proportion. And yet I have no doubt that the advocates of this bill will iterate and reiterate the spectacle of impending ruinous German competition in the dye industry.

But this letter is more interesting as we proceed:

It seemed to the representatives of the Textile Alliance (Inc.) in Paris unfortunate that American consumers should not receive the benefit of the large quantities of desirable importable colors, other than those already ordered, which are still available from the first distribution. There appeared to be no good reason why both importable and unimportable colors should not be taken over and dealt with on behalf of the United States Government in its own interest and in anticipation of the requirements of American consumers, in default of which American rights might have lapsed on April 15, and the colors would then have been added to the quantity available for the second distribution, thereby benefiting other countries at the expense of the United States. Both France and Great Britain proposed to exhaust their quotas in the first distribution.

Now, bear in mind that immediately after the armistice Great Britain and France imposed embargoes upon importations of German dyestuffs; that because of the conditions subsequently developed each was obliged to repeal those regulations; and that now their need is so great that they propose to exhaust their quotas in the first distribution of dyestuffs. There, too, it was represented while Germany was fighting the greatest war of her history, while she was mobilizing men, agriculture, machines, manufacturing, chemicals—in fact, all the resources of the nation—that she was at the same time engaged in the manufacture of great quantities of commercial articles with a view of deluging the world with them at cheap prices as soon as peace was declared. It was believed in England, it was credited in France, and they passed defensive legislation, when their necessities shortly after made it necessary that such legislation should be repealed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What interests compose this Textile Alliance?

Mr. THOMAS. The Textile Alliance is a semiofficial organization, as I stated. It is that branch of the War Trade Board having in charge the business of the board relating to textiles, of which dyestuffs is a part.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Are any American manufacturers represented in the alliance?

Mr. THOMAS. It is composed of American manufacturers.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Composed of American manufacturers of textiles?

Mr. THOMAS. Of textiles, yes; and representing the dye industry also.

I read again:

On account of the extraordinary short time at the disposal of the American representatives an emergency arrangement was made whereby the cost of the dyes remaining from the first distribution after filling the reparation orders should be underwritten, or in other words, the cost thereof guaranteed to the United States Government, through whom the order was necessarily placed. The underwriting was arranged almost to the full extent required by Mr. A. M. Patterson, the president of the Textile Alliance (Inc.), while in Paris in conjunction with the United States Treasury representative, Mr. Albert Rathbone. Simultaneously negotiations with the State Department by the Textile Alliance (Inc.) representative in New York resulted in a substantial ratification of the arrangements made in Paris. The Textile Alliance (Inc.) is thereby authorized to purchase, if necessary, in its private capacity in the interest of the people of the United States, the dyes remaining from the first distribution above referred to on conditions which are entirely satisfactory. It should be stated that in both the Paris negotiations and the American negotiations no private profit shall accrue to the underwriters.

Which is to say that the need for these dyestuffs in America is so great that the alliance, in conjunction with the representative of the Treasury of the United States, is authorized to purchase the dyes remaining after the first distribution.

I continue with the letter:

It is expected that more definite and permanent underwriting arrangements will be made in the near future, providing not only for the remainder of the first distribution but also the second distribution.

Now, listen:

Great difficulties have been experienced in connection with production and transportation. The output of the German plants has been very limited.

My friend, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] will recall that the subcommittee, of which he was a member, was more than once assured by representatives of the dye industry of the United States that the activities of the German plants were not only plainly noticeable, but some of them were evidently running at full capacity. I have already referred to the testimony of Dr. Herty, who, because he saw smoke coming out of 14 chimneys of the Badische plant, rushed across the Atlantic, affrighted, and hysterically announced that the only way in which to safeguard the American dye industry was to dismantle the German factories.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire what Herty that is? What is the given name of the gentleman?

Mr. THOMAS. I have it here somewhere. I will give it to the Chair later.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is his official relation to the textile industry?

Mr. THOMAS. Dr. Herty is the editor of a journal which represents and is devoted to the chemical industry of the United States. Dr. Herty was connected as an educator with the University of North Carolina for some time.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the name is Charles H. Herty.

Mr. THOMAS. Charles H. Herty; I thank the Senator.

Dr. Herty in those days when he seems to have been in a chrysalis condition was a believer in and an advocate of the doctrine of tariff for revenue only. Dr. Herty has since been converted to the protectionist principle, and he is endeavoring to make up for lost time and to cure by his present zeal the injuries which he may have inflicted upon the juvenile mind in the North Carolina University before he was fully converted. Dr. Herty, as I stated a day or two ago, is a good illustration of the reflection of Macaulay that there is no zeal like the zeal of an apostate. Dr. Herty is a most excellent gentleman, and I do not mean to reflect upon him in the slightest degree in making that comparison; but the impartial mind may judge of the value of his testimony when he is driven to declare that protection to a new American industry demands the demolition of the factories which may come in competition with them in Germany.

Other gentlemen who testified upon this subject, and who are older protectionists than Dr. Herty, were more restrained in their assurances; but they nevertheless pictured the activities of these great dye-manufacturing establishments, the formation of a consolidated trust, as we would term it over here, by these several institutions, the increase of their capitalization, and their announced determination to recover the markets of the world for the dye industry; yet the Textile Alliance tells us that the output of German plants has been very limited.

Let me continue:

There appears to be no doubt that entirely apart from any desire of the German interests to reestablish their business in the United States, they have given assurances both orally and written of their intentions to complete the deliveries on the Herty option as rapidly as the difficult conditions under which they operate will permit. Every effort has been made by the American representatives to satisfy themselves as to these conditions and they are of the opinion that political, labor, internal transportation, and coal conditions have caused and will in the future cause great delays and difficulties to the manufacturers of dyes and will limit the output, especially on the more difficult and costly colors, which are chiefly desired in the United States.

The author of this circular would have been entirely within bounds had he said that these colors are the only ones desired in the United States from foreign manufacturers, and that is true. Their use is limited, their quantity is limited, but they are indispensably necessary to the prosecution of those lines of manufacture which require them, and consequently they must be had from Germany if they are had at all. They must be received from Germany, too, in competition with the consumers in the same industry of France and Great Britain.

I read again:

The ordinary method of transportation from the dye-manufacturing districts on the Rhine is by way of Rotterdam. Since the middle of February all shipments by way of Rotterdam have been stopped by the dock strike. The Textile Alliance (Inc.) has had at Paris as one of its representatives a competent transportation man, who has carefully considered all alternative routes, such as shipments by way of Switzerland and Italy, by way of France, by way of Antwerp, and by way of Copenhagen. Each of these routes has presented difficulties that could not be overcome. Shipments by way of France, for example, although entirely safe, are subject to extraordinary delays from labor conditions or shortage of rolling stock on the railways. Apart from Rotterdam, the most feasible route is by way of Antwerp; but the circumstances attending the inability to obtain through bills of lading rendered it inadvisable to adopt this route excepting as a last resort. As the Rotterdam strike has now continued for approximately two months, with constant disappointments as to its apparently imminent end, arrangements have been made with the White Star Line to ship by way of Antwerp, and the alliance representatives are now in Germany to initiate the new routing with governmental assistance.

I now call special attention to the concluding paragraph of this letter:

Annex 6 of the peace treaty provides that for a period of years a percentage of the output of the German dye factories shall be available to the Allies.

That percentage is 25. One-quarter of all the dyes to be manufactured during the next five years in Germany goes to the reparation commission for the use of the allied and associated powers. The letter continues:

Annex 6 of the peace treaty provides that for a period of years a percentage of the output of the German dye factories shall be available to the Allies. This section of the treaty has been somewhat modified in operation by the reparation commission. In view of the uncertainties attending its interpretation and enforcement, and in view of the conditions referred to above, it is the opinion of the representatives of the Textile Alliance (Inc.) in Paris that every effort should be made to secure promptly and use economically those dyes which are not now made in the United States and are not likely to be made here in adequate quantity. The situation is fully realized by the United States Treasury and reparation representatives in Paris, to whom the alliance is indebted for their able and energetic assistance.

Mr. President, if this Textile Alliance had been holding an inquest over the dead body of its own child, for this bill is its own child, it could not have pronounced a more fitting epitaph than its reference to the need of modifying the requirements of section 6 of the annex, thereby relieving Germany from the hard conditions of yielding 25 per cent; but because of these things every effort should be made to secure and then to economically use the dyes in question, the very articles which it is designed to exclude from this country through the operation of this bill; and I say "exclude" advisedly, because in the administration of the bill, as I shall attempt to show later on, the facilities for complicating its machinery and delaying its operation are superabundant.

I also referred the other day, Mr. President, as bearing upon the inability of Germany for many years to come to compete in the markets of the world with her manufactures, whether of dyes or of other commodities, to the various provisions of the treaty. But I omitted calling attention to certain provisions in that document, under the terms of which Germany can not practice the so-called dumping methods anywhere. If in the framework of the economic features of the treaty the Allies overlooked any commercial feature having a bearing upon future German competition, I have been unable to find it. They tied her hands and feet and laid her on her back, supine upon the ground, so that if a literal application of the terms of the treaty were made in the future Germany would be eliminated from the international trade which she enjoyed before the war, or for any part of it, as far as foresight could accomplish that object.

Again let me say, I am not criticizing the treaty. I am merely stating its contents, or, to be more precise, the conclusions which I draw from them.

Part 10 of the treaty is known as the economic clauses, section 1 of which is entitled "Commercial relations." Under article 264 it is provided:

Germany undertakes that goods the produce or manufacture of any one of the allied or associated States imported into German territory, from whatsoever place arriving, shall not be subjected to other or higher duties or charges (including internal charges) than those to which the like goods the produce or manufacture of any other such State or of any other foreign country are subject.

Then follows the assurance that—

Germany will not maintain or impose any prohibition or restriction on the importation into German territory of any goods the produce or manufacture of the territories of any one of the allied or associated States, from whatsoever place arriving, which shall not equally extend to the importation of the like goods the produce or manufacture of any other such State or of any other foreign country.

It will be noted that these various requirements are not reciprocal. There is no corresponding obligation, or the remotest hint of one, resting upon the allied and associated powers.

By article 265 it is provided:

Germany further undertakes that, in the matter of the régime applicable on importation, no discrimination against the commerce of any of the allied and associated States as compared with any other of the said States or any other foreign country shall be made, even by indirect means, such as customs regulations or procedure, methods of verification or analysis conditions of payment of duties, tariff classification or interpretation, or the operation of monopolies.

We now come to German exportations. It will be perceived that she is made helpless to defend herself against importations from whatever source they may come, the only limitation being that all the allied and associated powers shall be treated alike. It is provided in article 266 that—

In all that concerns exportation Germany undertakes that goods, natural products or manufactured articles, exported from German territory to the territories of any one of the allied or associated States shall not be subjected to other or higher duties or charges (including internal charges) than those paid on the like goods exported to any other such State or to any other foreign country.

Germany will not maintain or impose any prohibition or restriction on the exportation of any goods sent from her territory to any one of the allied or associated States which shall not equally extend to the exportation of the like goods, natural products or manufactured articles, sent to any other such State or to any other foreign country.

Article 267 is what might be called the general-welfare clause if it were contained in a statute. It certainly makes for the general welfare of the Allies. It provides that—

Every favor, immunity, or privilege in regard to the importation, exportation, or transit of goods granted by Germany to any allied or associated State or to any other foreign country whatever shall simultaneously and unconditionally, without request and without compensation, be extended to all the allied and associated States.

That would seem to be sufficient assurance to the powers in enforcing the treaty. But in order to clinch things beyond peradventure, this nail is driven through the corpse and fastened on the other side (article 281):

If the German Government engages in international trade, it shall not in respect thereof have, or be deemed to have, any rights, privileges, or immunities of sovereignty.

That is to say, it shall be treated just as one of its nationals or just as a subject of the British Empire is treated, just as any private corporation would be handled.

Mr. President, I defy the most capable champion of this bill to tell the Senate how Germany can dump goods of any kind on the shores of America without violating the terms of the treaty.

No refinement of logic, no special pleading, no ingenuities of construction, can overcome the purpose which the Allies had in mind and which they took care to incorporate in unmistakable terms in that treaty. But the melancholy fact is that the makers of dyestuffs in this country who are reaping profits equivalent, and more than equivalent, annually to their actual capitalization, deliberately come before our committee and tell us they are ruined if this bill does not pass and German dyes to the extent of some 20 per cent embargoed.

Mr. President, I thought until I investigated this bill that the officeholder anxious for reelection was the biggest coward in the world, but I have to deliver the prize now elsewhere, for a great industry which trembles with apprehension and fright in the presence of a commercial corpse and shrieks for the protection of its Government, crying aloud to the universe that without relief it will disappear from the face of the commercial world, is a greater one.

The American manufacturer is the most capable, the most enterprising, and the most successful in the world. He takes chances without hesitation; he plunges where conservatism has its sign of warning; he opens up new fields of endeavor and risks millions before he can expect to receive a cent of profit. But just mention dumping to him and he begins to shiver and shake as though he were afflicted with palsy. I think it is all pretense. It is merely designed to secure the protection of public legislation in order that if he has a monopoly it will be secured, and if he has not a monopoly he can establish one.

Mr. Du Pont, whose testimony I have had occasion to refer to, has given us an illustration of this peculiar make-up of the American manufacturing mind in a very graphic manner. Let me read it. He speaks now about the embargo:

As to the proper length of time some people have guessed five years. I do not think those fellows have been up against "the game." I think we are going to do it quicker than even Germany, but remember in arriving at the number of years that if you err on the right side no harm is done, but if you err on the wrong side you frighten capital.

What a horrible thing it would be to frighten Mr. Du Pont's capital. If some of it could be frightened right now—and I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] frightened a lot of it the other day—the public morality of the country would be greatly improved.

Mr. Du Pont continues:

If capital does not flow into this thing profusely, you will delay the result. It makes no difference to the public whether it is 8 years or 10 years, if we develop the industry and are then able to beat the Germans.

Of course it makes no difference to the public. Who cares anything for the public? The public does not seem to care much for itself. So let the public stand the embargo of eight or ten years.

Senator CURTIS. You could repeal it at any time.

Now listen to this:

Mr. DU PONT. Don't say that; you will frighten capital. Capital is more timid than a woman; it won't go out in the dark at all.

In a preliminary hearing we had in Senator PENROSE'S office, he asked a number of us to come down here and give our ideas and asked us, "What do you want?"

There, Mr. President, is the question that the Republican chairmen of the Ways and Means Committee and of the Senate Finance Committee ask, not "What should you have?" but "What do you want?"

I say an embargo, with a permit to bring in these things we do not make for a 10-year period.

Then he goes on and advocates the repeal of the Sherman law so far as the dye industry is concerned.

If this bill becomes a law, the 3-year embargo will be extended to 10, and by that time the apprehension and the fear of Mr. Du Pont will have attached itself to some other industry which that huge combination desires, to use the common expression, to take into the fold. He will have this all right, for as sure as I stand here this bill spells monopoly to the dyestuffs industry, and if any testimony were needed upon that subject Mr. Du Pont and his associates have furnished it; but there is other testimony relating to it.

I read now from page 556 of the hearings, an extract from a letter from Mr. Lansing, Secretary of State, to Congressman PORTER, about November 10, 1919, in which he enunciated the policy of the State Department upon this subject:

I instructed the War Trade Board section to accede to the recommendation of the advisory committee to the extent of permitting importations to satisfy the six months' requirements of consumers, but to inform the committee that the department, howsoever much it desired to protect the American industry for reasons of national defense, could not compel consumers to effect their importations exclusively through a designated official agency.

I pause to remark that that is precisely the policy which was adopted and which is now in force.

Continuing Mr. Lansing's statement:

—that the designation of such official agency would partake of the nature of an exclusive monopoly and that such exclusive monopoly would be repugnant in that it would be a discrimination against American citizens who were engaged in the business of importing.

Not a pound of dye can be received in this country except through the Textile Alliance, and I have already shown that even they, with all their power, are unable to supply the American demand, and are urging that we get all we can as soon as we can, and then use it as economically as we can.

I turn to the testimony of Mr. Fortner on pages 335 and following. It is true that Mr. Fortner is opposed to the bill. He is engaged in the dyestuff business and in importing. He says:

Mr. FORTNER. I appear here more particularly to confirm some statements that have been made that if this licensing bill is adopted it undoubtedly—as I think has been pretty well shown—will give a few concerns practically a monopoly of the dyestuff business in this country.

Senator CURTIS. Why?

Mr. FORTNER. Well, because it amounts almost to an embargo.

It is perhaps necessary that I should here explain that at the time Mr. Fortner made this statement the licensing provisions of the House bill had not been rejected by the Senate Finance Committee. They subsequently rejected them and substituted for them what is known as the embargo provision of the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

Continuing Mr. Fortner's statement:

In fact, some of the witnesses here for the dyestuff manufacturers have expressed the opinion that it should be an embargo. I believe, as Senator SIMMONS said the other day, human nature is much the same everywhere, and if a few men get hold of the dyestuff business in this country they will get all the traffic will bear. I would say that I think it has started a little that way already. Before the war one of the American manufacturers of the dyestuffs was manufacturing a color called direct black, which, I suppose, has the largest production of any color and is the largest used color in this country. They were making this color before the war, of the same strength and quality as the Germans were producing, and previous to the war they had a convention with the Germans, which resulted in raising the price from 18 cents a pound to 28 cents a pound.

I think he is referring to the Schoelkopfs. The Schoelkopfs before the war had the largest dye factory in the United States, located at Buffalo, and it appeared that German suppression of the dye industry in this country had sympathetic cooperators in the Schoelkopf Co., which, by an arrangement with them, confined their production to certain qualities of dyes upon which they received, in consequence of their understanding, an unusually good return.

I now read from page 337, where Mr. Fortner said:

When the war came on their plant—

Referring to the Schoelkopf Co.—

was of medium size, and they were making a color of the same strength as the Germans, direct black, a very largely used color.

That company now is known as the National Aniline Co., the profits upon which for 18 months I have read from the record.

Therefore, of course, there was a great demand, when the supply was shut off from foreign sources, for an increase of production here. They were willing to increase their plants, as they knew how to make the color, and they went out to their customers and said they would enlarge their plant, but that they wanted contracts for a certain amount of color to take care of the investment—which was perfectly right—and contracts were made on a basis of 75 cents a pound.

Lest I forget it, let me here digress for a moment and refer to the contracts which were made by dye manufacturers with their consumers during the war. Provision is made in them, or most of them, that they shall not expire until two years after the war shall have ended. You can not teach these gentlemen anything about good business. Those contracts are still in force, for the war has not ended. Hostilities ceased long ago, but you know and I know that any question that may arise regarding the construction of those contracts will fix some official date whereby the war has been determined. Like the old song:

It may be for years, it may be forever.

But it must precede the beginning of the two-year limitation; hence my poor, apprehensive countrymen, who doubtless spend many a sleepless night caused by the shuddering fear of an impending bankruptcy unless this bill shall pass, may nevertheless console themselves with the reflection that they will continue to receive good war prices for their dyes two years after the war shall have ended, and that notwithstanding Germany should suddenly reveal great hidden stores of dyes manufactured during the war and send them, by submarine or some other secret method of conveyance, to American shores.

Mr. Fortner proceeds:

I can not tell you exactly the time, but either at that time or shortly afterwards the standard of strength was reduced from the standard they made previously 10 per cent.

Adulterated, in other words. He continues:

I think when the contract was mostly or partly filled, at least—and this was for a color 10 per cent less than the standard—what did they do? Now, it has been stated here that if the manufacturers had a little time on all these things, they would be prepared to get a greater yield of colors at less cost, which would allow them to compete with European manufacturers. Either the following year or the year thereafter they asked the consumers to make new contracts. In the meantime this black had been reduced in standard of strength another 10 per cent—

making 20 per cent. They evidently were treating their product as every citizen of the United States now treats his last bottle of good liquor. He drinks a little and then adds as much water as he extracted from it. That linking of the sweetness long drawn out will sooner or later come to be H_2O, the new definition of which is said to be "Hell twice over." [Laughter.]

In the meantime this black had been reduced in standard of strength another 10 per cent. It is now about 20 per cent below the strength supplied before the war and which they were able to make. The new contracts were taken at 95 cents a pound instead of at a lesser price.

That is, the dilution of dye is compensated for in the increase of price, and, of course, that keeps the equilibrium. The weaker the dye the higher the price. That is a species of business which if practiced by a German would be denounced as petty treason, but it seems that this concern was not above it.

Mr. Fortner continues:

That is one concern which has shown an inclination to get all the profit they can.

When we consider that they made 100 per cent in 18 months upon their capitalization, both actual and fictitious, we can easily perceive the truth of Mr. Fortner's assurance. Mr. Fortner's testimony is very interesting. He continues:

Let me say that no one else in this country has made direct black in any quantity. They have no competition. At the present time there is very little being made by another concern. I have not heard of any reduction in the price.

I read now from page 338:

Gentlemen of the committee, there is one other little item that I thought might be of interest to you that will show you the tendency to take advantage of the lack of competition to secure the greatest profit. As I have said, I am an importer of Swiss dyes. There was a dye selling around about $4 a pound that I think——

Senator NUGENT (interposing). Selling now at $4 a pound?

Mr. FORTNER. It was at the time I mention.

Senator NUGENT. Before the war?

Mr. FORTNER. No, sir; not before the war.

Senator NUGENT. At what time was it selling at $4 a pound?

Mr. FORTNER. I think I will be correct if I say in 1917 and 1918 that was the price at which it was being sold in this market.

Senator NUGENT. All right.

Mr. FORTNER. An American manufacturer commenced to produce this same color——

Mr. CHOATE (interposing). What color is it?

Mr. FORTNER. Shall I give the color?

Senator CURTIS (presiding). Certainly.

Mr. FORTNER. Auramine, a color very largely used in the textile and paper trade. Up to that time it had not been made in this country. I can not tell you exactly when, but about a year and a half ago they commenced to make it, and they put it on the market at about $5 a pound. They evidently had not perfected the manufacture of this color, and they could hardly compete with the Swiss color, and finally reduced the price to $2.50 a pound.

Senator CURTIS. When was that?

Mr. FORTNER. I think in the latter part of 1918. One of the articles required in making the color was methyl alcohol. England was supplying Switzerland with a good deal of raw material, and they could not furnish them with methyl alcohol after a certain time, as it was needed in munition work, and the Swiss had to try to get it here. Our Government would not allow them at the time. For about six months the Swiss could not make auramine, and the concern here making it raised the price to $5 a pound. After a few months the Swiss auramine was again brought over here, and the price of the American product immediately began to go down, and went down to $2.50 a pound and, I believe, is $2 a pound to-day.

What would it have been, Mr. President, what would it be, if Swiss competition were again cut off? Anybody can answer that question from the record made by the company producing the article. It would, of course, be $5 a pound.

I now call attention for a moment to the testimony of Mr. MacKinney on page 599. Mr. MacKinney is an importer and manufacturer of dyes. He says:

Take the case of dimethyl anilin, which we use, and which Mr. Metz pointed out at the last hearing that I attended here that he could not get—dimethyl anilin—because certain people made it here and, apparently, did not have it for sale. Our purchasing agent got in communication with the Du Pont Co. and asked for it and they wouldn't quote him. They are our competitors, of course. We asked the National Aniline & Chemical Co.,— and they said, "We have none for sale until next March." Now, mind you, we have contracts to supply dyes made from dye methyl anilin, to consumers, and there is but one other person in this country we could get it from. We went to him, and, fortunately, were able to make a contract, and now we are perfectly safe. Suppose he had turned us down? I would like to have some recourse through German or English or Swiss importation of intermediates, for a time. I believe that the manufacture of intermediates, or of the particular intermediate I refer to, is very closely held in this country, and that it could become a monopoly very easily.

That is the Schoelkopf concern again—

Senator WATSON. Why wouldn't those other people sell to you?

Mr. MACKINNEY. You will have to ask them; I do not know. Perhaps they did not want me to make dyes against their competition.

If anyone wishes to check up my statement regarding the extension of contracts beyond the war period, I refer him to the testimony of Mr. Bernheim, which is reported on page 355 of the Senate committee hearings.

I said the other day, Mr. President, the manufacturer of dyes was now an exporter. Let me confirm that statement by referring to a table in the Senate committee hearings furnished by Mr. Wood, which is found on page 235, giving the "Domestic exports of dyes and dyestuffs from the United States by countries during August, 1919," the total of which were $761,009. On the next page he gives the exports from the United States for 1919 of sulphuric acid, wood alcohol, coal-tar distillates, and so forth, in pounds. The total annual export value is somewhere stated as being in excess of $17,000,000 in value, a value, as I have said, exceeding the highest cost of annual dye importations from Germany prior to the war.

It is not surprising, when we consider these conditions, that the farmers, or some of them, whose attention has been called to the subject, have protested against the pending bill. I am informed that their opposition now extends beyond the ranks of those for whom Mr. T. C. Atkeson spoke, representing the National Grange. He made this statement to the subcommittee:

I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that I represent in a general way the real producing farmer people of this country, and we are interested in this particular question only as the general public may be interested. Further than that we are interested in it as a question of principle, as to the general policy of the Government in dealing with the tariff question.

It has been understood in a general way that farmer people were generally in favor of a low tariff. On this particular question we are in favor of any tariff that may be necessary to adequately protect the manufacturers of dyestuffs in this country in order to permit them to develop the industry here. But we have, somehow, failed to see why the extraordinary injection of the licensing proposition into this question should occur at this particular time, when we are trying to get down to normal conditions following the abnormal war conditions.

Perhaps I might read into the record a brief statement of the policy of our people and of our organization on the general question of tariff. This resolution was adopted at a meeting of our organization, held two or three weeks ago at Grand Rapids, Mich.:

TEXT OF RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL GRANGE IN ANNUAL SESSION AT GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., NOVEMBER 13–21, 1919.

"We declare our opposition to Government ownership and to nationalization of business or industry in any form unless clearly required in the public interest. We favor the safeguarding and protection of every right of private property on the broad ground that only by the full development of the right of private property can there be perpetuated the full measure of individual initiative and emulation upon which a democracy is based and by which its future is assured.

"So long as a protective tariff remains the policy of the Government the grange demands that in whatever readjustment is made of tariff schedules agricultural products should be given the same degree of protection as other commodities."

Then, Mr. Atkeson continued:

That, in a general way, is the position of our organization. I am satisfied that if the matter was submitted to the woolgrowers of this country and they were to speak from their personal, selfish interest, they would say that no wool should be admitted into this country during the next two years, and that if a licensing system or some other scheme were adopted to prohibit the importation of wool it would go further toward developing the wool industry than anything else the American Congress could do. And it seems to me that such a position would be quite as logical as this proposition to license dyestuffs, the primary purpose of which, as I interpret the bill, is to absolutely prohibit the importation of certain dyestuffs if they can be produced in any measure in this country during the next few years.

I feel quite sure that the cotton growers of this country would like to have a monopoly of cotton production in America during the next few years; and the same thing would apply, perhaps, to the sugar producers, both beet and cane.

Now, if the protective tariff policy is to be permanent, and is to be a higher tariff than we have had in operation for a good many years, and it is a good thing, then we ought to consider other things in the way of having the good thing handed around.

The farmer people of the country are becoming more intensely interested in the tariff question than they have ever been before. They are a little skeptical about some of the recent movements to break down the tariff line between this country and Canada on the wheat question, and you people will hear from us before the end of this Congress, or some other Congress, on a general revision of the tariff law from a good many angles. So we are interested in the tariff question, in the protective tariff policy, if you will. And if this question of licensing, and a prohibition of importation of dyestuffs is to apply as provided in this bill, then you have not heard the last of this question in considering the tariff.

I am not alone in my concern as to the effect of this bill as a precedent upon future economic legislation.

I imagine, too, that the people interested in this particular prohibition involved in this bill think that now is the psychological time to get that sort of legislation, on the theory that anything that might be said against it may be misconstrued into pro-Germanism.

Mr. President, some of the witnesses protesting against this bill having German names were subject to that identical reflection; their patriotism, their position during the war, whether they were native or naturalized, whether before the war they represented German dye manufacturers—all those matters were subjects of question and insinuation. That was perfectly proper; I have no obection to it, but it emphasizes the suspicions of this gentleman that if anything said now against measures of an economic character and aimed at German importations, direct or indirect, becomes subject to the reproach of pro-Germanism. The witness continues:

I do not know how much the psychology of that enters into that feature of this bill, into the tariff consideration at this time; but we object to interference by the Federal Government, or any other Government, in private business any further than is absolutely necessary to protect, first, the general welfare of our own country, of our own people; and, second, to develop and protect our industries; and even then, only so far as may be absolutely necessary.

To state it in another way: The farmer people are individualists. We are going it alone, as individuals, very largely. At least, the farmers that I have the pleasure to represent are opposed to any degree of governmental interference or governmental injections into the ordinary individual conduct of business affairs. We are not internationalists or socialists or paternalists, or any other kind of "ists," that seem to be abroad in the world; and so we would eliminate from the tariff question in all its phases as far as possible the use of governmental power and governmental machinery to interfere with the normal and logical administration of business affairs of the country.

It seems to us that the licensing feature of this bill would tend to do that to a greater extent than is defensible. Opposition to it is a matter of policy with our people. We are opposed just as far as possible to licensing any kind of business if it can be avoided. There may be cases where it is defensible, but it seems to us that the machinery of the Government is now, and has been during the war, perhaps as a matter of military necessity, injected into business affairs quite as far as it ought to go, and that it ought no longer to be permitted to interfere with the normal business of the country. In fact, now that we are trying to get back to normal conditions, we ought to avoid the appearance even of governmental interference with private business affairs of any and every kind.

So spoke Mr. Atkeson, with a wisdom which commands respect, and which I think the advocates of this bill might well heed.

I labored under the impression that I had, and I still think I have somewhere in my collection of documents, another protest of the farmer; but inasmuch as I am unable to lay my hands upon it I shall not consume any time in making a search for it.

If I have spoken to any purpose, I have demonstrated—

First. That the tariff now existing, enacted into legislation in 1916 at the request of the dye manufacturers of the country, and upon their solemn assurance many times reiterated, that it would be sufficient for all their purposes, has been vindicated by the logic of events since the enactment of that law; that it has proven not only sufficient but more than sufficient, inasmuch as the dye manufacturers have been, and are now, supplying the American market with more material than they then thought possible within the intervening period.

Second. That the menace of German competition now asserted, immediate in fact and destructive in results, is a fiction of the imagination.

Third. That not only are there no surplus stocks of dyes in Germany or elsewhere in the world, but, on the contrary, there is a very serious shortage in certain lines of dyes now so sadly needed by American industries.

Fourth. That the enactment of this measure will promote a consolidation of the competitive dye-manufcaturing establishments, thereby adding another to the long list of overcapitalized and burdensome combinations controlling the business of the country.

If what I have said upon these subjects is not convincing, then anything that I may add to the discussion would be simply a waste of time.

I am, of course, aware that but little heed has been given to my contention, the seats of the Senators having been for the most part vacant and their occupants engaged either in committee work, in more congenial social intercourse in the cloakrooms, or in absences from Washington, attracted to other places by the lure of recreation, or pleasure, or health, or business, or politics, or all of them combined. That is a discouraging feature of any discussion in the Senate, unless, forsooth, it refers to some subject of foreign concern, which, being of external importance and leading to more or less controversy, prompts the visitor to the galleries and the Senator to his seat; but I indulge the hope that as my colleagues examine the various items of the measure and read the statements as they have been detailed to the committees, they will hesitate before casting their votes in the affirmative, whether what I have said seems conclusive, convincing, persuasive, or absurd.

Mr. President, before taking up the embargo features of the bill let me emphasize just one other fact. I refer to the effect upon other branches of American industry of the failure of the governmental authorities to comply with the urgent demand of American consumers made months ago, and to secure their needed dyes. Generally speaking, they are known as vat dyes, and they are used for silks, the higher class of woolens and cottons, and some of them for leather. The need for them is particularly felt in the departments of hosiery and shirting.

The permanent blue and pink colors which are predominant in shirtings now generally prevalent have not yet been produced in quantity by the American manufacturers, notwithstanding their possession of the formulæ and their access to the German patents confiscated by the Government and turned over to the Chemical Institute of America. They say they will produce them, and I have no doubt that that is true. They say they will produce them, however, only if the need for them be denied except upon stringent conditions which are virtually prohibitive. I am informed—and I have the letters here before me from textile manufacturers and dealers in high-class shirtings and the finer grades of hosiery—that the import of the raw materials for this class of goods is relatively enormous. They can not be produced here because of the lack of these dyes. The trade, however, demand what they have been accustomed to and will be satisfied with nothing else. "Something just as good" does not appeal to them. The result is that the merchants are compelled to meet this requirement by huge importations of shirtings and raw material for hosiery as well as goods made up and ready for wear from Great Britain, and this importation is being very seriously felt. I have called attention to the fact that England insists upon getting all of these dyes that she can, and all of them, if possible, under her first allotment. England very properly proposes to take advantage of this condition in the American market, and to supply the void consequent upon the absence of these dyes from America and her apparent inability to secure them. The idea that they are to be dumped upon this country at ruinous prices is as illusory as is the specter of coming German competition. On the contrary, the prices of shirtings and of the finer grades of hosiery have constantly mounted until to-day they are available only to those of the longest purses.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Would the Senator mind telling me how long he expects to continue his observations on this bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall discuss in a moment the embargo features of the bill, and I presume that I shall occupy two hours of the time of the Senate in concluding what I have to say upon the subject.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am very grateful to the Senator for telling me how much time he will take, because, while we all may have different views regarding the policy of embargo, the bill has been favorably reported by a committee of the Senate, and has been recommended in a message by the President as an urgent remedy at the present time for the menace which confronts the dye industry in regard to German importations; and I had hoped that an opportunity would be given the Senate to vote on this very important bill. The manufacturers of my State—and they are not all large trusts, as has been stated——

Mr. THOMAS. No; I did not state that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I did not say that the Senator did.

Mr. THOMAS. I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Many of them are small manufacturers, with capital of one hundred thousand or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. They have been established during the war. They have put all their earnings in the plants, and now they desire to know what the policy of this Congress is regarding their industry, whether they are to be protected against German competition or not; and I hope the Senator will join with me in an effort to get a vote on this bill, inasmuch as it has been reported to the Senate, so that we may determine for the benefit of the manufacturers, not only of my State but of 13 other States, what the policy of this Congress is going to be toward this industry, which was built up during the war, and which is so necessary as a measure of preparedness to our country.

I simply interrupted the Senator in order that I might know how long he was going to take, and I hope he will assist me in obtaining a vote upon this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall have a number of amendments to offer to this bill before a final vote is taken—I think it is but fair to the Senator so to say—and I consider them all of importance. The President of the United States did recommend legislation upon the dye industry. That is not the only thing he recommended. He came here in person and recommended the ratification of the treaty. I am not aware that my distinguished friend from New Jersey was particularly impressed with that recommendation, and I can assure him that the President's recommendation upon this subject impressed me about as much as his recommendation of the treaty impressed my friend from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I was impressed with the necessity of it from the fact that the President's mind ran along with mine.

Mr. THOMAS. I was not impressed with it because it did not run along with mine.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I know that if there is an extended debate and an organized filibuster on this bill it can be defeated. I want to ask the Senator in all fairness if he feels that there will be any opportunity for a vote on the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I will be perfectly candid with the Senator. I do not think so; but I have no knowledge of any organized filibuster. I am not filibustering on the bill. I am delivering an argument which I took months, off and on, of course, to prepare, and I consider it necessary that I should give the reasons for my opposition. I regard the enactment of the bill as a calamity to the country, and with all due respect to my friend, whose judgment and whose wishes I appreciate, and always comply with, when I can, I think if he had done me the honor to listen to my discussion of the bill he would have been convinced against his will that there is no more danger of German competition in dyes for the next 10 years than there is of a renewal of the war of 1914.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him further, I have better authority than the Senator has——

Mr. THOMAS. I have the authority of the officials of the United States Government and of many of those interested in the bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have better authority than the Senator has, which convinces me that there is danger of competition from German dyes.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, we can not agree upon that, so we need not discuss it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to say further to the Senator from Colorado that I have read the speech he delivered the first day, but in view of the fact that he has spoken now for three days it has been impossible for me to read all that he said. I think the difference between the Senator and myself is his belief that there is no menace of German competition and my knowledge that there is.

Mr. THOMAS. I think if the Senator would state that just the other way he would be more nearly accurate; that is, my knowledge against his belief.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It was stated to me only yesterday that one of the large German optical manufacturers had just returned from Germany. He has stated authoritatively that not only in the optical industry are the industries working to full capacity but that they have enlarged their capacity and employed many more hands, and that the same condition exists in the dye industry.

I am also informed through some of the negotiations of the peace commission that the German dyes, through the reparation commission, are to be distributed to the Allies and their associates, and that great quantities are to be shipped to this country. If that is true, it means that the market will be overstocked; that those industries in this country which have manufactured dyes during the war must cease operations; that the industry is destroyed.

But may I not say to the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "May I not."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I state to the Senator further——

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator just said that his mind ran along with the President's, and that is due proof of it.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There are lots of things on which my mind does not run along with the President's, I will say to the Senator.

Even if the Senator from Colorado and myself differ regarding the menace of German competition, is it not a measure of protection to see to it by an embargo that no danger of German competition shall exist? In other words, is it not better to close the doors to German dyes in order that this industry may live rather than take any chances?

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose the Senator will vote for the Knox peace resolution. I ask him whether he will or not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I probably shall. If there is any portion of it that needs to be amended, in my opinion, I shall offer an amendment to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, the Senator proposes, by the establishment of peace, to resume full relations with Germany, of whose competition he is so fearful. It seems to me that if my constituents were sure of a coming flood of German importation which would overwhelm them in financial ruin and destroy their industries, I could better protect them by continuing the state of war as long as possible, for while it continues the menace would at least be minimized, for we can not establish actual peace without assuming all the obligations which a condition of peace imposes upon us.

Mr. President, the chemical glass industry, to which the Senator referred, has a bill giving it a practical monopoly of business in this country by a tremendous and overpowering rate of duty, and its beneficiaries, precisely like those championing this bill, came before us and made the best possible showing in behalf of their measure. But they were not then afraid of German competition, although they talked about it. Their coming commercial antagonist lay across the world from Europe. It was the cheap labor of Japan about which they were apprehensive and not the German competition.

Mr. President, of course, the Senator from New Jersey is a man of strong convictions, based upon what he believes to be competent information. I have some convictions of my own, and I flatter myself that they are similarly sustained. Our conclusions do not concur. His information may be better than mine, mine may be superior to his; but I affirm without the fear of ultimate contradiction that the political, social, moral, and industrial condition of the German people, coupled with the enormous burden which the treaty places upon their shoulders, and which I have discussed, makes her competition in the markets of the world for the next 10 years practicaliy impossible. She is simply being used as a stalking horse by the industries which are the outgrowth of the war, which have enjoyed enormous profits, and which desire, as far as possible, to continue the monopoly given by war conditions through an appeal to the emotions of the Congress whose Members, like other citizens of the country, have not yet recovered from the shock of conflict.

In his speech on last Saturday the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] presented his side of the proposition with great ability, and after a very earnest and well-considered investigation of the subject. His indignation against Germany was very properly aroused by the information which he detailed, and his patriotism induced an eloquent protest against any dealings with Germany.

He said:

But I am still suspicious of the resourcefulness, the selfishness, the cupidity, and intrigue of the scientist and manufacturer of Germany. I do not want to return to that humiliating period which existed before the war, when the color of the dresses of the women of America, the shades of their stockings, the color scheme of their shirt waists, when the leather in our chairs, the stripes in our clothing, the rubber in our automobile tires, the tint of the curtains at our windows, the paint on our houses, the color of our carpets, yes, even the red and blue in our Star-Spangled Banner, bore everlasting evidence that their ingredients were made in Germany.

I may say, Mr. President, that what is true of American reliance upon German dyes was equally true of every country in the world, including France, whose animosity toward Germany is age long and intensified by memories which can not be eradicated and by outrages which can not be forgotten.

The Senator closed this part of the discussion by saying:

Rely on Germany for all these articles? Never in my life, while I have the breath to vote against it! Some may wish this. Not I. Nor am I going to keep a pile of bricks under my desk to throw at the business men of this country.

With the latter part of the Senator's sentiments I fully agree, but I would like to inquire whether his animosity goes to the extent of declining to sell Germany any of our commodities. If I hate a man so badly that I decline to buy anything from him, I ought to hate him hard enough to refuse to sell anything to him. I assume that his dislike of me will be as intense as my dislike of him. I assume that if my dislike extends not only to his personality but to his property, his will be equally comprehensive.

The people of the United States produce every year more than they consume. This surplus must go abroad, and the price of the surplus abroad fixes the price of the commodity at home. Before the war Germany was our third best customer. We sold her annually in round numbers about $450,000,000 worth of our produce. She sold us about one-third that sum, making up the balance in money. Do we intend to abandon that enormous trade, that profitable commerce, because we have been at war with Germany? If so, then our folly is incomprehensible.

I recall that during the war, before our entrance into it, the envoys of the allied powers appointed for the purpose met in Paris. There they discussed what they called the war after the war, and they solemnly agreed among themselves that if the fortunes of battle should turn their way and they should triumph in that conflict, they would establish an everlasting and permanent boycott on German trade; as for them, she would be a pariah among the nations, an outcast from the fellowship of all peoples. Russia and Italy, England and France, Serbia, and Belgium, solemnly and mutually covenanted that such should be the commercial consequence of the war.

In less than six months after the armistice this profound and far-reaching policy was both forgotten and abandoned. Since then, every nation, including our own, seeks the commercial invasion of Germany anxious to resume the old relations, exchange commodities with her—for that is what international trade means in its first and last analysis—thereby demonstrating that trade and the selfish impulses of human nature will always overcome the higher virtues. Revenge may not be forgotten, but it will not be permitted very long to interfere with gain. Denunciation of atrocities may continue, but if the atrocious one possesses goods attractive to the world which can be secured at a bargain, the impulses which go for commercial activity will assert themselves over every other consideration.

So Senators may upon this floor denounce Germany, forswear her, resolve never to have any intercourse with her, but inevitably the laws regulating commerce, as fixed, permanent, and unalterable as the laws of nature, will sooner or later assert themselves and commercial relations will be established. So, while the Senator himself may abstain from all commercial connection of any sort with Germany, his great constituent manufacturing interests even now are eager to secure the trade they once had with the people of that fallen empire.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to read for the benefit of the Senator part of an article translated from Chemie, which is a chemical daily published in Berlin, in October, 1919. It says:

So far as the chemical industry is concerned, let me say, in the first place, that the aniline-dye industry and the pharmaceutical industry have now so thoroughly recovered that there can be no thought whatever of outside financial assistance. Even to-day the German chemical industry is again in a position to take up at once the leading rôle in the world's markets.

Mr. THOMAS. From what did the Senator read?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This was from Chemie, a chemical daily, published in Berlin in October, 1919. I also wish to read from the Frankfurter Zeitung.

Mr. THOMAS. What is the date of that?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This is dated February 23, 1920, and is a prospectus, published in the Frankfurter Zeitung, of the great Badische Anilin & Soda-Fabrik Co. in Ludwigshafen. In describing the plants of the company and the equipment, it speaks of the number of employees as follows:

The principal plants of the company are located at Ludwigshafen, Oppau, and Leuna, near Merseburg. They employ at present in the German plants 21,113 workmen and foremen—

I am informed that that is 11,000 more than they employed during the war—

852 superintendents and master chemists, 308 chemists, 495 engineers and technical men, and 1,680 commercial employees. The company owned branch factories in Butirki, near Moscow, and in Neuville, near Lyon.

The prospectus shows not only an increased number of employees, a great and large personnel, but also a tremendous increase in capitalization for the expansion of this business. This concern was one of the big six. The great German cartel, with which the Senator is undoubtedly familiar, which not only controls the dye industry of this country but practically all over the world, through a system not only of methodical selling of their products, but also through a system of graft and bribery, which probably the Senator has observed in the testimony which was given at the hearings——

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; they have been imitating American practices.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly the Senator is more familiar with graft than I am, but I want to say, so far as those industries in my State are concerned, that they know nothing of that. It might exist within the confines of Colorado, but not New Jersey.

I simply make this point because I believe that the German cartel are now operating in this country and that their influence and efforts are behind the efforts to defeat this bill. Of course I do not accuse the Senator of anything of that character whatsoever. I know that he is impelled only by his belief that it is an unwise policy, and I know that through certain agencies at this time the effort is being made to defeat the bill. One of the German importers made the public statement before he sailed for Europe that the bill, if it were not beaten on the Senate floor, would be beaten in conference.

If Germany succeeded in preventing the dye industry in this country before the war by reason of these methods, and is allowed to return here with them, she will destroy the dye industry in this country. In my opinion we should through this legislation close the door to Germany. I adhere to that, because it is either the United States and the industry which we have captured during the war or Germany.

Mr. THOMAS. The first document to which the Senator calls my attention is dated last October, since which time Germany has gone through the throes of a revolt, which resulted in a temporary overthrow of the Government.

The other is dated in February, since which time France has taken possession of Frankfort and other cities. Since that time the labor conditions in Germany have been aggravated, and, God knows, they were bad enough then. It may be that there are thousands of men at work in the Badische works, but it is a remarkable fact, if that be so, that the letter from the Textile Alliance, which I read into the RECORD this morning, and which the Senator did not hear, calling attention to the practical impossibility of securing dyes for the United States and to the dismal outlook of German production, and advised the American users of German dyes to use them as sparingly and as economically as possible, should have been sent here.

I put that letter of the Textile Alliance—an official organization—based upon the investigations of their own official representative, in conjunction with a representative of the United States Treasury, against all of the announcements of Germans regarding their industry. Of course, they advertise to the world that they will soon begin to supply their own customers as they did before; of course, they are making desperate efforts to manufacture something that they can export in order to get the money necessary to meet the indemnities imposed upon them by the treaty.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator speaks of the dye monopoly in the United States. I think perhaps he has discussed the question, but who would control the dye business of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. I said day before yesterday that in my judgment the dye business would be controlled by the National Aniline Co. and the Du Pont interests.

Mr. KENYON. In that connection the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who has left the Chamber, has spoken of the influences that were at work to defeat this bill. Has the Senator from Colorado any knowledge of the influences that are at work to secure the passage of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS. I have been informed, Mr. President, that such influences are active, but having no definite information upon the subject, I did not feel justified in so asserting.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that the influences apparently are not all on one side. I have in my hand a letter addressed to a certain United States Senator who is opposing this bill and is also one of the managers of the candidacy of a certain gentleman for President of the United States, which letter is certainly in the nature of a threat to the Senator referred to in relation to that candidacy if he does not cease his opposition to this bill. That letter is from the publicity bureau of the Du Pont Co. at Wilmington, Del., and if it will not disturb the Senator's meditations I think it might be well to have it read.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall be more than pleased to yield for that purpose.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to say that the letter is addressed to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], and is used with the full knowledge and consent of the Senator from New Hampshire, who resents it, and I am sure that I ought to say also that the candidate for President whom the Senator from New Hampshire is supporting, Gen. Leonard Wood, also resents the letter; but it shows the methods that are used to try to pass this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the letter may be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Reading Clerk read as follows:

E. I. DU PONT DE NEMOURS & CO.,
Wilmington, Del., April 16, 1920.

Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MOSES: I was among the gathering of Republicans at the Playhouse in Wilmington on the evening of April 15, and listened with great interest to your address in support of the candidacy of Gen. Leonard Wood.

Your exposition of your candidate's attitude on national preparedness was particularly interesting, inasmuch as it showed the general to be in thorough accord with all of the principles involved in the pending legislation for the development of a self-contained coal-tar chemical industry. Wilmington is interested deeply in this industry, for no community had closer contact with the vital questions of preparedness or more intimate knowledge of the unpreparedness of the country when the late war broke.

The amendment which you have offered and your active opposition to the preparedness features of the dye bill, seem to some of us to be not in accord with your candidate's position or with your fervent appeals to us to support him, because of his stand for national preparedness.

Personally, I want to support Gen. Wood, but I find it difficult to reconcile the two attitudes of one of his important campaign managers—the one on the floor of the Senate and the other on the public platform—sufficiently to have full faith in his cause.

I am outlining a publicity campaign to inform the public concerning the present status of the proposed dye legislation. May I ask you to set me straight as to the apparent contradiction in your attitude toward Gen. Wood's candidacy and your attitude on the dye bill so that I may be perfectly accurate in what I write?

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES K. WESTON,
Publicity Bureau.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that Mr. Weston, who wrote another letter, which I have here, addressed to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], is stated to be by the Du Pont Co. in charge of the publicity department of that company. So we have the remarkable spectacle of a United States Senator who is engaged in managing a presidential campaign practically threatened as to what may happen to that campaign if he does not withdraw his opposition to this bill.

I will say to the Senator further, that in line with the publicity campaign that the Du Pont people are carrying on for this bill, in the Manufacturers' Record of April 22, 1920—and bear in mind the letter to the Senator from New Hampshire is dated April 16, 1920—is an article entitled:

Gen. Wood is for preparedness, but his chief backer is strangling the dye bill.

And then follows an assault on the Senator from New Hampshire for his opposition to this bill. I wish to repeat what I have already said, so that there may be no misunderstanding about this matter, and so that the presentation of the letter may not be in any way considered as an attack upon Gen. Wood; that, as I am informed, he resents the letter as the Senator from New Hampshire resents it, and the Senator has given me the liberty to use this remarkable letter in this debate.

Now, that the charges are made of the influences trying to defeat this bill, it might be well to find out the influences that are trying to pass it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator for his contribution to this discussion. Rumors of secret and corrupt activity on the part of some beneficiaries of the bill have reached me, but I am always disinclined to make a charge or, if I can avoid it, an inuendo of misconduct in the absence of some definite, responsible statement or of the personal assurance of some responsible individual. The belief of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] may be well founded that German interests and influences are opposing this bill; I do not know as to that; but it seems now to be unquestionably true that the threat of political displeasure, at least, has ranged itself behind the supporters of this bill, and a Republican United States Senator is virtually threatened with the defeat of the candidate whom he is pleased to support for the nomination for President of the United States by the Republican convention because, forsooth, he believes that this bill is inimical to the public welfare and has the courage and manhood to say so.

Mr. President, my conviction that this bill, if it becomes law, will prove to be the foundation of a great, overwhelming, and oppressive monopoly, has now received early confirmation from an authentic source.

Of course the Du Pont interests want this bill passed. They propose to add the dye industry, under its operation, to their already attractive collection of monopolies in America. It is a key industry, and, if placed in the control of such able hands, it means eventually the domination of the textile industries, which are as dependent upon dyes for their existence as the locomotives upon our railroads are dependent upon coal.

Just one more reflection relating to the interruption of the Senator from New Jersey. He called my attention to the practices of the German monopoly before the war for the purpose of overcoming American competition. I replied that they were good imitators; whereupon the Senator defended the industries of his own State from an imputation I had not made and reminded me that my information regarding such matters was probably based upon the practices of manufacturers in Colorado. We have few manufacturers in Colorado. The railroad interests have seen to that very effectually. We have always been treated as the stepchild of the Nation by the transportation interests, and the State of Utah and the State of Colorado and the adjoining States have been compelled, in consequence, to bear the burden of oppressive rates which make manufacture on any large scale practically impossible. What I referred to was the disclosures which have been made from time to time—nobody denies them—regarding the methods by which the Standard Oil Co. acquired its domination of the oil industry of the world, and the practice of huge American industries, exposed years ago, of selling their products to foreigners cheaper than Americans could secure them. It is common knowledge. We may not have initiated the practice; I do not claim that; but I do not think anybody can gainsay the proposition that the business immorality of great American combinations has long been too obvious to escape notice. I am neither its discoverer nor its defender.

But, Mr. President, I promised to consider the embargo features of this bill.

Unless I misstate the facts, when this bill was introduced in the House by Representative LONGWORTH it contained no license feature. Let me ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] if I am correct about that?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not sure, Mr. President, but I think the Senator's recollection is correct, and that the license feature was put upon the bill on the floor of the House.

Mr. THOMAS. That is my recollection. If I am correct—and I think I am—the so-called license or embargo feature of this bill had its birth in the Ways and Means Committee, and was doubtless suggested by the attorney for the dye interests, or by themselves, or both. The House committee, therefore, added four sections to the bill, which provide:

SEC. 503 (a). During the period of two years after the date of the approval of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons or corporation to import or bring into the United States, or any of its possessions, except under license previously obtained, as hereinafter provided, from the United States Tariff Commission, any of the products enumerated in section 500 of this act, or any product derived directly or indirectly from coal tar, including crude products and intermediate products, as well as dyestuffs, medicinals, and other finished products, and including mixtures and compounds of such products and other products.

To meet the reasonable expenses of the United States Tariff Commission in the execution of the duties imposed upon it by this act, the cost of maintenance of a suitable office at a place to be designated by the commission, the commission may charge a reasonable fee for the issue of each license. Should the moneys received from such fees in any year be less than the said expenses the deficiency shall be paid out of the appropriation for 'expenses of collecting the revenue from customs.'

SEC. 503 (b). The said United States Tariff Commission shall issue licenses to import for domestic consumption such of the products covered by section 503 (a) of this act as may be unobtainable from domestic sources and also such, and such only, of the said products as may, though obtainable from domestic sources, be unobtainable on reasonable terms as to price, quality, and delivery. The commission shall limit the issue of licenses to import any product as nearly as may be to the quantities required by the actual current needs of the consuming industries in the United States, having regard to the necessities of such industries as are unable to determine beforehand their requirements. Nothing herein contained shall authorize the commission to refuse a license to a manufacturer, person, or agent to import for actual use by the manufacturer a foreign dye when such domestic dye of equal quality is not immediately available for his use. The commission in passing upon applications for such licenses may regulate its own practice and procedure, but shall so regulate the same as to prevent all avoidable delay.

SEC. 503 (c). Any product described in section 503 (a) of this act which shall be imported into the United States or any of its possessions without license, as provided in said section 503 (a), shall be forfeited and shall be destroyed whenever and wherever found.

SEC. 503 (d). Any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States who shall, either as principal or as accessory, import or attempt to import or aid in importing any product described in section 503 (a) of this act without license as therein provided shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 or the value of such product at the time of importation, whichever shall be greater, or shall be imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

These sections did not address themselves to the best judgment of the Senate Committee on Finance. A majority of that committee, therefore, struck them out, and in place of the stricken sections substituted an embargo plan, to be enforced by the Tariff Commission, and to run for a period of three years. It provides—and the gist of it is in the first and second sections—of section 500 of this act shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the United States Tariff Commission shall determine that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor—

That * * * no article enumerated in Group II or Group III—

Which are the intermediates and the finished products—

Something just as good—

is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions on reasonable terms as to quality, price, and delivery, and that such article is required for use by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions.

That under this act an article shall be deemed to be of reasonable quality if such article, in the judgment of the United States Tariff Commission, is capable of giving results in use substantially equal to a corresponding article of foreign origin.

The first criticism which I have to offer to this part of the bill relates to the agency which it selects for its administration. The Tariff Commission is that agency. The Tariff Commission was created by the act of 1916, as I remember, for what seemed to be a very essential purpose—a purpose very clearly defined in the act creating the commission. They are authorized and required to investigate the so-called tariff question in all of its phases, and specifically to investigate any part or portion thereof as may be desired for the information of Congress. They are stripped of all executive authority. They are not even permitted to recommend a measure to the Congress. The only advice and counsel that they can give is indirect, and any recommendations must consist of deductions to be drawn from their reports.

That is an enormous task, Mr. President, for any commission, and, if properly performed, it will require all the time of all the members.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. In further answer to the question asked by the Senator from Colorado, I will state that Representative LONGWORTH introduced in the House H. R. 2706 on May 23, 1919, and that bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed on that date. That is the Longworth dye bill. In that bill there is no license provision whatever.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator very much. That confirms my recollection.

I venture the assertion that no thought ever occurred to the mind of a Member of either House of the Congress, whether advocating or opposing the creation of that commission, that it would or should be used for any other purpose, that it would or should be transformed into a Government bureau and charged with the execution of duties wholly foreign, or practically so, to the purposes of its creation, and I am unable to perceive how any man can reach any other conclusion than that when this new duty is imposed upon it the requirements of that duty will practically destroy it as a tariff commission. Sitting as a court convened to entertain applications for the import of dyes, to listen to testimony for and against the application, to require the presence of witnesses, books, and documents, would be such a task of itself as to virtually monopolize the time of all its members, and that may occur, Mr. President, in some exigency when the needs for this commission and the exercise of its legitimate powers of investigation are overwhelming.

Confronted with the duty of passing upon these applications as soon as possible on the one hand, and discharging its functions as a Tariff Commission upon the other, it would seem that the first would be the more insistent since it directly affects private rights, private interests, and private business, the consequences of the neglect of which may be extremely serious to the parties interested. I feel very sure that if I were a member of that commission, and confronted with these opposite and conflicting requirements, I should feel impelled to listen to the applications of my fellow citizens directly concerned about applications of great importance, and allow the larger and possibly less insistent duties to go their way for a convenient season, which would perhaps mean indefinitely.

So I protest, ab initio, against the perversion of this commission and its transformation from a commission of investigation into a Federal bureau. If this law must be passed, if the need for it is as insistent as the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] declares, and if the consequences of its failure are one-half as serious as he thinks, then it is sufficiently important to justify the creation of an independent commission to administer it. If I were an enemy of that commission, which I am not, if I wanted to paralyze its activities and destroy its usefulness as at present constituted, I could think of no better way of doing it than to enact this bill into law and charge the commission with the duty of its administration.

I was amazed, on first reading this bill, to find that the Tariff Commission was the agency selected to carry its terms into effect; and I want to impress upon the mind of every friend of that commission—by which I mean every man who believes that it should have been constituted to perform the work assigned to it—that it ceases and must cease to function as a Tariff Commission the moment this law goes into effect. Do you want that? If so, vote for the bill. Do you want the bill, and are you impressed with the fact that no other agency can be found to properly administer it? If so, vote for the bill. But I want to impress upon you the fact, as earnestly as it is possible for me to do so, that the enactment of this measure means the destruction of the Tariff Commission.

But, Mr. President, assuming that some bureau must be endowed with jurisdiction to enforce its terms, let us see just what the duties are.

John Smith, a consumer of dyestuffs, having immediate and insistent demand for certain lines of dyes covered by this bill, makes an estimate of his needs, and then takes the train, hies himself to Washington, puts up at the Willard, or some other modern Du Pont Hotel, gets a room for $10 or $15 a day, and spends as much more for two square meals and one lunch, and files his application before this commission. Under the regulations, and the necessary regulations, of the commission, he would be required to show that the particular dye needed is not manufactured in this country, nor is there something just as good which he can secure.

The Tariff Commission notifies all the dye manufacturers in the country. That will be easy, because every one, until there becomes only one, will be represented down here by competent agents, which would add to the expense of the proceeding, which, of course, the consumer would be obliged to meet ultimately. Then a hearing is ordered, witnesses come from their homes and testify for and against each other. There is all the ceremonial of a trial and an investigation.

The Robert Jones Dye Co. contends that, while it does not manufacture this particular dyestuff, it has something just as good, substantially. The applicant denies that. Who shall determine the issue, and how? It must be referred to the chemists, and the chemists proceed by practical demonstration to ascertain which of the contentions is correct. Of course, that means the application of the particular dye to that sort of fabric for which the applicant needs it. How long that will take, I do not know; I am no dye man. How competent the chemists may be, I do not know, although I am assured that if this bill does not pass, God have mercy on the chemical business of the United States. But that is the necessary preliminary of a final determination of the application.

Multiply that one application by several thousand, and then tell me, if you can, what time would elapse between the application, however urgent, and the final determination of this board, whether it shall be granted or refused.

There is a provision in the bill which limits the amount applied for to the needs of six months, but I predict, Mr. President, that is will require more than six months, once this bill gets in full operation, to enable the Tariff Commission to determine for or against the applicant, during which time the styles requiring the particular dye may have changed, during which time the insistent need for the dyes may have disappeared, during which time the purpose for which they are required may have been forgotten, and at the end of it the chances are 10 to 1 that the American producer of something just as good will get the verdict, for men will then shrink, as they do now, from doing anything that would seem to patronize a German producer, however insistent the need may be at the time for the thing which he, and he only, can produce.

It amounts to a complete embargo, in effect. The users of these dyes came before our committee and without a single exception protested against a law which seemingly gave opportunity to get what they needed, but which in practice would prove most disappointing. Some of them called attention to the fickle tastes of the public. It is pretty well illustrated by the pending overall craze, which is prone to run toward a particular color at a given time, making an enormous demand for goods of that color, but disappearing in the course of a few months quite as rapidly as it came, because fashion, in her varying moods, has turned her face toward some other color.

It is precisely at those times when the demand is great that those dyes are needed, and under this bill at those times when they can not be obtained. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] talks about his loyalty to American industries. I praise him for it, but I wish he could see that there are some industries in this country besides those which are devoted to the manufacture of dyes, for in his vigorous effort to protect them to the limit of the law, even against the possibility of a doubt, he unfortunately loses sight of the other industries which, ranged against this measure, called attention to the consequences to them and to the public if it shall become a law.

There is not a manufacturer in the world—certainly not in the United States—who will deliberately admit that the thing he is trying to put upon the market lacks any of the qualifications which he claims for it. As a consequence, he will be the first to challenge the right of importation under the bill. He will go the furthest to establish the soundness and purity of his own particular manufacture and, as a consequence, he will overwhelm the consumer before this commission, with his own tests; with his own testimony; with his own counsel; and, what is more, with his ability to interpose technicality after technicality, delay after delay, to the final determination of the proposition, and he can do it. We all know what is the fate of practically every problem which goes to a Federal bureau for determination.

Way back in the seventies Mark Twain contributed an article to one of the magazines descriptive of the efforts of some unfortunate individual who had a claim against the Government of the United States. It was a burlesque of an actual fact. His claimant began as a young man, died penniless as an old one, and transmitted the curse of his existence to his heirs who would doubtless follow his footsteps with the same result.

It would seem as though a bureau, as soon as created by Congress, becomes instantaneously prolific in red tape. The average Federal bureau can concoct more rules, think of more regulations, and can prescribe more ways of how not to do it than any other combination in the world. There is no exception to this. We created a number of them during the war and the next morning they were swathed in red tape as completely as though they had been in existence for over a century. The man having a claim against the United States or a petition or application to one of its bureaus is entitled to public sympathy. The ancient game of battledore and shuttlecock is a very fair illustration of the future that awaits him and the ball is generally lost long before the end of the game.

It will follow, as the day follows the night, that when this bureau has been established it will take the same course that all its predecessors have taken. Rules, regulations, methods of practice, and procedure will increase and multiply until the simplest application will be so shrouded in technicalities as to require the genius of a Philadelphia lawyer to comply with them in making the application, to say nothing of subsequent proceedings.

Mr. President, it means the practical destruction of that part of the business of the United States which has to do with the manufacture of or the dealing in goods of high quality requiring permanent colors and available only from the foreign markets.

But that is not the only objection nor, indeed, is it the most important one. I shall therefore speak for a few moments upon the fundamental change which this measure will introduce into the revenue legislation of America, for it is the entering wedge of a policy bound to expand in amazing proportion and with incredible rapidity into a fixed economic policy. It will mean, and mean pretty soon, the substitution of the embargo for the protective tariff. It will mean the abandonment of a traditional revenue policy and the substitution in its place of measures of restrictive character ultimately leading to prohibition of imports.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Does the Senator consider that the dyestuff industry can from any standpoint be considered as what is called an infant industry?

Mr. THOMAS. No. I stated day before yesterday and prior to that time that it was not only not an infant industry but that it had more than fulfilled its assurance to the Finance Committee in 1916, which allowed them to write their own duties in the tariff bill of that year. It is not a very old industry, but it is not an infant industry, in the sense in which that term is frequently used.

Now, Mr. President, what is the purpose of a protective duty? I will enter into no discussion of the old question of protection and free trade. It is not necessary, although, like the poor, it is always with us. It is not essential to occupy the time of the Senate with its consideration. I shall refer briefly to its outstanding features.

Fundamentally, the object of a protective tariff, from the standpoint of the protectionist, is to safeguard home industries by the imposition of a line of duties sufficiently high for that purpose, and with revenues to the Government as its incident. In other words, it is the exercise of the Federal power of taxation carried beyond its normal purpose to the extent to which the encouragement of home industries may require. Revenue, in other words, is fundamentally behind all forms of protective legislation. I do not care whether you call them tariff for revenue, tariff for protection, or by any other name, the exercise of the power can be justifiable only as the exercise of the right to tax for public purposes. Heretofore protectionists have been as eager as Democrats to emphasize revenue and to abstain from carrying the theory of protection to the point that it becomes prohibitive of revenue. The question has divided parties in this country since the first Congress met after the ratification of the Constitution. Its threads are interwoven in the fabric of national legislation from the very birth of the Republic, but now a method of protection is proposed by this bill which, wholly ignoring any element of revenue, proposes through the operation of an embargo between the domestic manufacturer and his foreign competitor, to use the strong arm of the Government by incorporating it as a partner—a dominant partner—in all the business interests of the country; to extend its authority over all the pursuits of men and bar our shores from the possibility of relief from conditions at home, however oppressive they may become.

This is the entering wedge of that policy. It will, of course, appeal to every other industry in the Nation—and ought to do so—for, if the Government of the United States is justified in the enactment of this measure for the dye industry, then it becomes the duty of the Government to extend similar favors to all the other pursuits of the country.

As was said by Mr. Atkeson, representing the farmers of the country, if it is a good thing it must be passed around. The wool people have already suggested that theirs is a war industry as well; that the soldier who needs explosives stands quite as much in need of warm clothing; and that in times of war warm clothing is as much an equipment as any explosives that can be manufactured. Who can answer that proposition?

The automobilists may make the same contention, so may the steel manufacturer—aye, Mr. President, the very individuals who are to be injuriously affected by this measure are entitled to the extension of the principle to their industries, that they may not suffer, all of which means that our disputations over the tariff, either as regards a question of principle or a question of proposed rates of duty, may soon become entirely unimportant either to the American people or to the commercial interests.

The constituent of the Senator from New Jersey interested in the protection of chemical glassware, if this bill becomes a law, should insist upon its extension to his product, and contend that wherever he can present anything just as good the foreigner should be excluded from our market.

Mr. President, if this contention is not the logical deduction from the operation of this measure, then I am entirely at fault in my construction of it. If it is possible that the operation of the embargo will through the coming years be confined to the particular thing which gave it birth, then it will be a unique feature in the legislative history of the Nation. I defy the student to place his finger upon any protective measure which has not been followed by imitation until it finally has ripened into the general proposition and displaced previous principles of legislation in conflict with it. I am certain that if I were engaged in some industry enjoying the benefits of absolute prohibition during the war, whether I began that industry during that period or before, I would, as a citizen of the United States paying taxes for the support of the Government, protest against any discrimination in the legislation of the country and demand my speedy inclusion in the benefits of such statutes as Congress had seen fit to enact; and I do not arrogate to myself any particular business sagacity; certainly none superior to the experiences of those who have devoted their lives to production. So we are confronted by this bill with a situation so far-reaching in its importance and so revolutionary in its character as, in my opinion, to justify the most earnest and exhaustive discussion.

Oh, I know it will be said, and has been said, that this measure is merely designed to meet a great exigency; that its operation is limited to three years; that at the end of that time it will disappear and doubtless in a very few years the incident will have been wholly forgotten. Not so, Mr. President. The present law provides that if at the end of five years the domestic producers of dyes shall supply the market with 60 per cent of consumption the specific duties shall be reduced at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until they shall disappear at the end of 20 years. That law is in force. Production is from 85 to 90 per cent of our consumption, and that statute should become operative within the next 18 months. At the time it was enacted its limitation was intended to be effective, particularly as it was further provided that if, after the end of five years, the manufacturers of dyes in the United States did not produce 60 per cent of the consumption the specific duty should disappear. This bill, of course, repeals that provision of the act of 1916, not directly but by implication, because the two can not coexist, and this will be the last expression of the legislative will.

Mr. President, the three years of time allowed under the pending bill will only feed the appetite for fresh demands to be granted for the reasons which were advanced in the first instance. Let us see. I make no doubt that German industry three years from now will have greatly improved. At the risk of being called a German sympathizer, I indulge the hope that it will be, for no greater disaster can come to civilization than the existence of a nation of 60,000,000 paupers. Every country in the world, jealous of its own independence and anxious for its own prosperity, from motives of pure self-interest should not only hope but pray for the commercial rehabilitation of that country, whose continued impoverishment must lead to multiplied disaster. I am prompted to say that by a spirit of pure selfishness and, I hope, of patriotism.

If we assume that there will be a substantial increase of dyestuffs from Germany three years from now these identical people will come before the Congress and say, "We must have an extension of this prohibition; matters are worse than they were when we first got it; Germany is now producing great quantities of dyes; they are being smuggled into this country; and many people prefer some of their colors to ours. We told you at the time of the enactment of the law in 1920 that we should have 10 years instead of 3. We could only get 3. If this provision is not extended for 7 more years the dye industry of the United States is gone; the capital that we have invested in it will be lost; tens of thousands of men and women whom we employ in the industry will be turned on the streets to beg or starve. Germany is again resuming her onward march to world commercial supremacy." When we remind them, as we now remind them, that at the time they wanted this legislation they declared that it would be only temporary they will say, "Well, we were mistaken; we did not properly interpret the events of the future. The menace to our well-being is more formidable than ever. Save us or we perish." And the same arguments will be made upon the floor of this body at that time in advocacy of the extension of this extraordinary provision that are being made in its favor to-day.

The same dire predictions of ruin to American industry will be voiced in sonorous tones from this floor, and the same expressions of suspicious interference by German interests in the passage of the bill will reappear in discussion.

No, Mr. President, we are embarking upon an unknown and an uncharted sea; we are abandoning all the landmarks of the past; we are establishing a precedent that will rise to sting us in the future, one which will diminish the revenues of the Government by the abandonment of every constitutional theory of protection and by a total disregard of the financial welfare of the United States as contrasted with that of some of its manufacturers.

Mr. President, a less important feature, but an important one nevertheless, of this proposed embargo lies in the expense of its administration. I have said that another bureau would be established through the transformation of the Tariff Commission into a sort of commercial court, having control of one of the greatest industries in America. To administer properly the duties imposed upon it with any degree of satisfaction will require an enormous staff of new employees, both ordinary and scientific—the ordinary ones to transact the usual affairs of the bureau, the extraordinary ones to determine the intricate questions of a material or scientific nature which must be investigated with every application for the importation of dyes. We must have chemists galore, and as these applications multiply they must be increased. As the applications multiply, the general staff must be increased. The bill starts with an appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose. That is a modest beginning. One hundred thousand dollars is so infinitesimal in the administration of Federal affairs to-day that I would dignify it if I were to refer to it as "chicken feed." It is of no consequence whatever. It is like a needle in the haystack of modern appropriations—a good deal harder to find than it is worth after you find it. So $100,000 is nothing, except as a significant beginning; and if any of these beginnings have ever failed to swell in their proportions, and particularly as regards appropriations, with the passage of time I should like to be informed of it.

No, Mr. President, next year we will have $250,000 at least, and, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] suggests, plus a deficit. The next year it will in all probability be a half million dollars, and then a million; and once a Federal appropriation strikes the million-dollar gait you can not stop it with a 13-inch cannon.

It becomes respectable when it can command a million, and from there its advance to ten millions, twenty-five millions, fifty millions, and a hundred millions is practically an easy experience. I predict—and you will notice that I am getting to be something of a prophet in this discussion—that the cost of the operation of this bureau will exceed the value of the dyes which are intended by this bill to be disposed of. It is inevitable.

Embargoes are un-American, to begin with, and even when they are universal they are unjust. During the administration of Mr. Jefferson an embargo was laid upon all foreign commerce. The majority of intelligent sentiment at that time, in my judgment, very properly denounced the policy as a grave and intolerable injustice, but it was at least impartial. Like the dews of heaven, it fell upon the just and the unjust. This embargo involves one, and one only, of the industries of the country, and leaves the others to go their way until in good time and due to considerations material, political, and otherwise, the terms of the legislation shall be widened and its wings extended that it may shelter other industries seemingly needing that method of protection.

Mr. President, I think I have said all that I care to say upon this bill. As I stated some time ago, during the progress of the bill through the Senate I expect to offer two or three amendments, and it is only fair to the Senator having charge of the bill that I should outline them. One is the amendment which I offered yesterday to the antidumping bill, and which proposes an income tax upon political contributions in excess of $1,000. Another will be the repeal of the excess-profit tax and the substitution in its place of a consumers' tax. The others will be comparatively unimportant. I shall, of course, when the occasion is appropriate, offer these amendments, and have something to say to the Senate regarding them.

Before I take my seat, Mr. President, I wish, without introducing them in the RECORD, to refer to a number of protests which have reached me from industries affected by this measure. I have here a long letter from the American Association of Woolen and Worsted Manufacturers, containing an argumentative discussion of the injurious consequences of this bill as affecting the industry represented by that association; another from the National Association of Worsted and Woolen Spinners, shorter than the first, but equally emphatic; a letter from the law offices of Knight & Taggart, of Sunbury, Pa.; another from the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, Philadelphia, dated the 4th day of February, 1920; and still another, embodying a series of resolutions, of date April 30, 1920, which I ask leave to insert in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF HOSIERY AND UNDERWEAR MANUFACTURERS (INC.), Philadelphia, Pa., April 30, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Senate Chamber, District of Columbia.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: On behalf of this association, I beg to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a resolution in relation to H. R. 8078.

Very truly, yours,

C. B. CARTER,
Secretary.

[Inclosure.]

Whereas the dye licensing bill, known as H. R. 8078, has been reported favorably to the Senate by its Finance Committee with all the objectionable embargo and licensing provisions still intact; and

Whereas the practical application of this bill, should it be enacted into law, will be to create an absolute dye monopoly in this country, which will fatten, first, on all of our American industries that are users of dyestuffs, and, secondly, on every user and consumer of dyestuffs, from the buyer of a nursery rag doll to the purchaser of an American flag; and

Whereas the recent report of the official representative of the Textile Alliance, which body bears an official relation to the War Trade Board, conclusively shows that there are no accumulated stocks of dyes in Europe, either in Germany or in any of the other countries; and that only a small fraction of the needed dyes to be allotted under the treaty of peace, and to be bought for the United States in addition to the allotment under the treaty, are obtainable; and that there is no indication that a change will be made in these conditions for an indefinite length of time; and

Whereas the British commission of textile experts, financed by the British Government, after an exhaustive study in Germany of first-hand conditions, has recently returned with only a small percentage of the dyestuffs they hope to purchase in Germany; and

Whereas these facts conclusively show the fallacy of the argument that demands the passage of this bill in order to prevent Germany dumping dyestuffs in this country, to the injury of the American dye manufacturer; and

Whereas the British Parliament has quite recently refused to pass a dye-licensing bill, thereby disposing of the other stock argument of the sponsors of this bill in the United States to the effect that we should follow the sound British policy in its attitude toward the German dyes; and

Whereas the passage of the dye-licensing bill by the United States Government would result in our own country being the only Government establishing dye restrictions, just as by the refusal of the State Department at the present time to license the general importation of dyes we are the only country now unable to secure necessary foreign dyes; and

Whereas if the users of dyestuffs in the United States are denied access to purchase dyes in the free markets of the world because of a dye-licensing barrier it will result in all of their products being handicapped in competition for the trade of the world in both foreign and domestic markets; and

Whereas the method of restricting commerce by commissions empowered to lay the heavy hand of favoritism and inertia on business is an unprecedented experiment in American methods of Government and utterly uncalled for by any economic or industrial conditions, and wholly foreign to the fundamental basis of all American institutions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, in sixteenth annual convention assembled, in the city of Philadelphia April 28, 1920, representing more than 1,000 textile factories producing annually more than $700,000,000 of manufactured products, and paying to American labor more than $200,000,000, emphatically protest against the passage of the dye-licensing bill and call upon our members generally to oppose by every lawful means in their power the stifling of American business, the suppression of American enterprise, and the strangling of American initiative, which this bill if passed will inevitably cause, with no resulting benefits save of a monopoly already grown strong enough to invade the halls of the American Congress with their insolent, threatening, selfish, and un-American demands.

Mr. THOMAS. These are representative of scores of communications of similar import selected without much discrimination and indicative of the general tenor of the whole. I had another letter, which I cherished with undue appreciation, but which unfortunately I have lost. The letter was addressed to me by Hulton & Co., of Philadelphia. That firm protested most earnestly and eloquently against this bill, and ended by assuring me that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], to whom they generally appealed for help in crises of this kind, was unfortunately absent and ill. These gentlemen, therefore, appealed to me to take his place as far as I could as regards this bill, and exert myself for their welfare.

It is always a pleasure to appear as the substitute of the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania, because it is upon very rare occasions that our minds may be said to "run along together." It is due to him and to my correspondent to say that in this instance obedience to that request I have considered both as a pleasure and as a duty.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

During the delivery of Mr. THOMAS's speech,

Mr. LODGE. May I interrupt the Senator from Colorado for a small matter of business?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. The Senator can interrupt me with either a large or a small matter of business.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. LODGE. The conferees agreed to report some time ago. The House disagreed to the conference report and it comes back to the Senate because a point of order was made in the House against one item, as I understand it, relating to the Mexican commission. I think it can be disposed of very readily by a further conference.

I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a further conference, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. HITCHCOCK managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

After the conclusion of Mr. THOMAS's speech,

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether any of the proponents of this proposed legislation desire to occupy some time this afternoon?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I understand there is no Senator who wishes to talk this afternoon. I understand that there is one Senator who may want to talk upon the bill to-morrow.

Mr. KING. It occurs to me, in view of the very——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I think, if we are not going to discuss the bill, we had better vote upon it.

Mr. KING. Oh, the Senator knows that there is going to be discussion. I do not yield for anything further. The Senator upon the other side having the bill in charge announced that some Senator proposed to discuss it to-morrow; and it is rather unparliamentary upon the part of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I do not yield.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator need not yield.

Mr. KING. It is rather unparliamentary, I say, for the Senator from Massachusetts to interrupt for the purpose of suggesting that we should vote upon the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Now I yield to my friend.

Mr. LODGE. I do not ask the Senator to yield. When he yields the floor, I will take it in my own time.

Mr. KING. The Senator may take it for a moment. Then I shall follow him, if it becomes necessary.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is perfectly able to follow me, and perfectly willing.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to say this: The Senator from Utah, of course to the pleasure of everybody, is ready to make a long, long speech. Why should he not make it at this time? It is only 20 minutes before 4. All I want to know is why we should adjourn in order to aid the obstruction of the bill? That is my question, and my only one.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts knows that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is necessarily absent from the Senate to-day. The Senator knows that the Senator from New Hampshire not only intends but desires to discuss the bill. He is opposed to the measure. I think it is a very gratuitous statement, and wholly unwarranted upon the part of the Senator from Massachusetts, to say that because discussion is desired on the bill it is obstruction.

If the Senator from Massachusetts desired to discuss the peace treaty, as he did for hours, that was not obstruction; it was elucidation or enlightenment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Does the Senator from Utah know whether the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] is absent on public or personal business?

Mr. KING. I am not the keeper of the Senator from New Hampshire. I know he is one of the most diligent attendants upon the work of the Senate, and I have no doubt that for being absent to-day he has a valid and legitimate excuse.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I ask the Senator further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As the bill is before the Senate and the Senate is convened for the purpose of conducting public business, why should it not conduct it and go on? Why does the Senator appeal for the Senator from New Hampshire when he does not know whether he is absent on public or personal business?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey manifests a vast amount of solicitude now for the public business. Will the clerks at the desk please send me the letter that was read this morning, written to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]?

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. It may be that the Senator from New Hampshire is away trying to adjust the differences between the campaign managers of Gen. Wood.

Mr. KING. The statement of the Senator from New Jersey perhaps is not intended as such, but it is an implication that he, the Senator from New Jersey, is always here and always ready to attend to public business, whereas the Senator from New Hampshire has been derelict in being absent from the Senate Chamber for a little while.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator from Utah that if I am interested in a bill, or if I intend to object to a bill, I intend to be here and I always am here to look after it. I would under no circumstances delay the passage of any bill by my absence. I do not feel that I have a right to be absent from the Senate and hold up public business by my absence unless I am compelled to leave the Senate on public business. The Senator also is solicitous of the interests of the Senator from New Hampshire. I wonder why.

Mr. KING. It is very obvious, Mr. President, why I am solicitous, using the Senator's expression. Common decency, not to say common courtesy, would prompt any Senator to interpose to prevent the passage of a bill when another Senator is deeply and profoundly interested in it, and has given notice, if not publicly, at least privately, that he desires to speak upon it and to discuss it at length.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Kenyon	Nugent	Sutherland
Dillingham	Keyes	Overman	Swanson
France	King	Page	Thomas
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Phipps	Trammell
Gronna	McCormick	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Harris	McCumber	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
Harrison	McKellar	Simmons	Warren

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Assistant Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The names of the absent Senators were called, and Mr. GLASS answered to his name when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is still no quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. COLT, Mr. FALL, Mr. CALDER, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. BALL, Mr. REED, Mr. BORAH, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. TOWNSEND, and Mr. WALSH of Montana entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, May 8, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 7, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. J. W. Daily, Catholic Chaplain, Walter Reed Hospital, offered the following prayer:

O God of infinite wisdom, by whom all law is enacted and judgments decreed, we humbly beseech Thee to enlighten the minds of this Congress that their legislation may be for the spiritual and temporal welfare of our people, and that it may redound to Thy greater honor and glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

APPOINTMENT OF HOUSE MEMBERS TO POSTAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker is authorized by the Post Office appropriation bill to appoint five members of a joint commission created to investigate and report to Congress on the methods and systems of handling, transporting, and delivering the mails, and the facilities therefor. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], is specified as one. The Chair appoints as the other four members on the part of the House the ranking members of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRIEST], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL].

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.

EIGHTY-FOURTH BIRTHDAY OF HON. JOSEPH G. CANNON.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for opportunity to announce an important anniversary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, our honored colleague whom I have in mind would be the very first to protest were I to halt the public business for any considerable length of time for the purpose of making a personal reference to him, for his long and honorable life has been peculiarly characterized by modesty, efficiency, and constant attention to the public business. Notwithstanding all this, Mr. Speaker, I can not resist the temptation to remind the Members that their colleague, "Uncle JOE" CANNON [long-continued applause, the Members rising]——

In view of this enthusiasm, Mr. Speaker, how could I possibly resist the temptation of reminding gentlemen that "Uncle JOE" is 84 years young to-day [loud applause], and on their behalf to wish him many further returns of the day [applause], and for a continuation of that mental alertness, that physical vigor, and that kindly philosophy with which he is this day so richly endowed. [Loud applause.] And I am just reminded that "Uncle JOE" will soon receive his twenty-fifth nomination for Congress. [Long-continued applause.]

Mr. Speaker, the following delightfully expressed telegram to "Uncle JOE" from one who has solved the problem of passing gracefully from an active life of splendid service into the serene calm of advanced age has just been handed me:

NEW YORK, May 7, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Washington, D. C.:

Cordial congratulations on your eighty-fourth. I beckon you on to the eighty-sixth milestone, which I am holding for you. It is a beautiful journey and glorious position.

CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill H. R. 11960, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Under the ruling of the Speaker, is it necessary to make a point of order now or would it be proper at the end of the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER. At the end of the reading of the report.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. GARNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If unanimous consent is given that the statement be read in lieu of the report, could a point of order then be made against the report?

The SPEAKER. Of course, the statement is in the nature of debate. The Chair will state that on that the point of order should be made now.

Mr. GARNER. It has been a little complicated as to when a point of order should be made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest that the gentleman ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to make the point of order after the statement has been read.

Mr. GARNER. I merely wanted to get the matter in the mind of the House. I have no objection to the reading of the statement in lieu of the report, but I ask unanimous consent that a point of order may be made at that time against the report instead of being made now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the statement.

The statement was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$480,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$900,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the folowing:

"PURCHASE OF EMBASSY BUILDING AND GROUNDS AT SANTIAGO, CHILE.

"For the purchase of an embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it into proper condition, $130,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert at the end of the proposed amendment a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That this is to be considered as the final appropriation under existing treaties for the maintenance of said commission, and the President is hereby requested to notify the Republic of Mexico that the United States desires to dissolve the commission from and after six months from July 1, 1920"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

"SECTION 1. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application for a passport and $9 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $1 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families accompanying them, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines buried abroad, whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport.

"SEC. 2. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officer of any foreign Government, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States, or of any soldiers coming within the terms of public resolution approved October 19, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1014).

"SEC. 3. The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom the application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

"SEC. 4. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséd by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visé: Provided, That this section shall not apply to nationals of Great Britain domiciled in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or the Bahamas, or to nationals of France domiciled in St. Pierre and Miquelon, or to citizens of Cuba, Panama, or Mexico.

"SEC. 5. From and after the passage of this act every citizen or person, other than a seaman, owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States and departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof for any foreign country, except the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, St. Pierre, and Miquelon, Panama, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Mexico, and Cuba, or departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof by way of any of said countries for any other country shall be required to bear a valid passport.

"SEC. 6. The validity of a passport or visé shall be limited to two years, unless the Secretary of State shall by regulation limit the validity of such passport or visé to a shorter period.

"SEC. 7. Whenever the appropriate officer within the United States of any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued by the United States, the Department of State is hereby authorized upon request in writing and the return of the unused passport within six months from the date of issue to refund to the person to whom the passport was issued the fees which have been paid to Federal officials, and the money for that purpose is hereby appropriated and directed to be paid upon the order of the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 8. Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled 'An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad' (34 Statutes at Large, pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States, is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreement of the House to the amendments of the Senate on H. R. 11960, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921," submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference as to each of the said amendments:

The Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 4, 10, and 13.

On amendment No. 4: Appropriating funds for emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, increases the appropriation from $400,000 to $500,000.

On amendment No. 10: Providing for the expenses of the International High Commission, struck out the word "State" and inserted the words "the Treasury."

On amendment No. 13: Under post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers, added a proviso limiting the expenditure of the appropriation.

Senate amendments Nos. 5, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14 were agreed to by the managers on the part of the House.

On amendment No. 5: Inserts a new paragraph appropriating $4,500 for the relief of Mrs. Winifred T. Magelssen.

On amendment No. 7: Inserts a new paragraph appropriating $9,000 for expenses in connection with the Pan Pacific Union.

On amendments Nos. 8 and 9: Changes the word "International" to "Inter-American."

On amendment No. 11: Changes the appropriation for the International Joint Commission on Waterways treaty, United States and Great Britain, from $25,000 to $40,000.

On amendment No. 12: Struck out the last proviso limiting the expenditure of the appropriation.

On amendment No. 14: Changes the appropriation for contingent expenses for the United States consulates from $900,000 to $1,000,000.

On amendment No. 1: Fixes the amount for clerks at embassies and legations at $480,000 instead of $688,000 as proposed by the Senate amendment.

On amendment No. 2: Increases the appropriation for contingent expenses, foreign missions, to $900,000 instead of $1,000,000, as proposed by the Senate amendment.

On amendment No. 3: Providing for the purchase of embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile; changes the language but leaves the appropriation of $130,000 the same.

On amendment No. 6: Changes the language and makes this the final appropriation under existing treaties for the maintenance of the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, and dissolves the commission from and after six months from July 1, 1920.

On amendment No. 15: Relating to fees for passports and visés, struck out the amendment submitted by the Senate and inserts new matter.

STEPHEN G. PORTER,
JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
H. D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the conference report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and especially that part that has to do with Senate amendment No. 6, on the ground that the conferees exceeded their authority by incorporating in the report matter which was not in disagreement between the two Houses. I desire to direct the attention of the Chair to that portion of the report which reads as follows:

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert at the end of the proposed amendment a colon and the following:

"Provided, however, That this is to be considered as the final appropriation under existing treaties for the maintenance of said commission, and the President is hereby requested to notify the Republic of Mexico that the United States desires to dissolve the commission from and after six months from July 1, 1920."

I desire to call the Speaker's attention to the fact that the House provision in the original bill reads as follows:

To enable the President to perform the obligations of the United States under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, and 1906 between the United States and Mexico, $5,000.

My contention is that that is simply an appropriating clause, that the House had authority to appropriate or not to appropriate, as it saw fit, and that under the rules of the House it could not legislate had a point of order been made. The Senate did not strike out the House provision. It left it intact, but added to it. In addition to the $5,000 which the House appropriated, the Senate appropriated the unexpended balance for 1920, as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1920, is hereby made available for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1921, and for the objects and purposes designated by said act of appropriation.

And so the only question in disagreement between the two Houses is the language of the Senate just quoted, making available the unexpended balance of appropriations for 1920, because the Senate adopted the House provision as to $5,000.

Now, the conferees neither struck out the House provision nor the Senate provision, but adopted both of the provisions, which amounted to an appropriation of $5,000 and, in addition, the unexpended balance for 1920. But the conferees did not stop there. The conferees went further and added to the Senate amendment a provision which is legislative in its character and which provides that, under the treaties between the United States and Mexico, this appropriation shall be the final appropriation, and requests the President to notify Mexico, in effect, that these treaties are to be terminated and abrogated. The clause is as follows:

Provided, however, That this is to be considered as the final appropriation under existing treaties for the maintenance of said commission, and the President is hereby requested to notify the Republic of Mexico that the United States desires to dissolve the commission from and after six months from July 1, 1920.

Both the House and the Senate proposals were confined simply to the function of making appropriations. Neither undertook to legislate or in any wise to change existing law as such law is defined in the existing treaties between the United States and Mexico.

Had either the House proviso or the Senate amendment in any wise undertaken to abrogate the treaties, the conference committee would have had the power to report an amendment germane to either of such provisions, but the proposition of legislation and the proposition of abrogating the treaties with Mexico are not germane to either the House or the Senate bill.

It will not be disputed that the general rule is that the members of a conference may not in their report include subjects not within the disagreements submitted to them by the two Houses. This rule has been well established by a long line of precedents. I beg to call the attention of the Speaker to Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6410, where may be found a ruling by Mr. Speaker Reed. On May 2, 1898, the conference report on H. R. 5975, extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way of railroads in the District of Alaska, was before the House. A point of order was made against the report. It developed that among the Senate amendments was a provision relating to the fisheries question between Canada and the United States. The conferees added a provision for a commission to consider the differences between Canada and the United States in regard to trade relations. The Speaker ruled that the conferees transcended their authority because that matter was not one in dispute between the two Houses. In the same section may be found another decision by Mr. Speaker Reed to the same effect.

Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6418, contains a ruling by Mr. Speaker CANNON to which I desire to direct the attention of the Speaker, and I desire to quote an excerpt from the decision in that case:

Under the act first referred to, of 1882, which is existing law, such detail is prohibited. In the Senate amendment there is no legislative provision repealing the act of 1882 or covering the detail of paymasters' clerks for duty in the Paymaster General's office, nor does anything of that kind appear in the House text which was stricken out by the Senate. It seems quite plain to the Chair that the subject matter of a repeal of the law of 1882 by an express provision or by implication, which contravenes the law of 1882, was not submitted to the conferees as a matter of difference between the House and the Senate. The Chair, therefore, will sustain the point of order as to that amendment.

It will be ascertained from a careful examination of the ruling just referred to that the disagreement of the two Houses on an Army appropriation bill was before the House, and a point of order was made that the conferees had exceeded their authority in including matters in the conference report not in disagreement between the two Houses. The matter agreed upon by the conferees included a provision changing existing law. Mr. Speaker CANNON ruled that there was nothing in the Senate amendment to the House bill containing a legislative provision repealing the then existing law, and that nothing of a legislative character repealing the existing law was contained in the House text which was stricken out by the Senate, and held that the subject matter of a repeal of existing law by an express provision or by implication was not submitted to the conferees as a matter of difference between the House and the Senate, and sustained the point of order.

So in the instant case the terms of the treaties between the United States and Mexico with reference to the International Boundary Commission constitute existing law. They are made so by the very terms of the Constitution and are binding upon the United States and its citizens. The House bill did not undertake to repeal such existing laws through the abrogation of the treaties; neither did the Senate bill. It is thus made to appear that the subject matter of legislation to terminate or abrogate the treaties was considered neither by the House nor by the Senate. Having been considered by neither House, this subject matter could not become the basis of a disagreement between the two Houses, and therefore is not a proper subject for the operation of the powers of the conference committee.

In section 6419, Hinds' Precedents, appears a ruling by Mr. Speaker Henderson which will be found somewhat in point. The House had passed a so-called omnibus claims bill. The Senate had struck out all after the enacting clause and inserted a new text in the nature of a new omnibus claim bill. The conferees had inserted in their report items for the payment of claims not found in either the House bill or Senate amendment. The Speaker sustained the point of order and held that these items could not be inserted on the theory that they were germane to the general subject matter of claims, but held that since they were contained in neither bill they were not within the scope of the disagreement of the two Houses, and the point of order should be sustained.

It should be clearly borne in mind, however, that in the present case the Senate did not strike out the language of the House bill and substitute entirely new matter in lieu thereof. Under circumstances of that character greater latitude and liberality are allowed. In the present case the Senate simply added language to the House bill. In that state of the record there remains nothing in disagreement between the two Houses except the Senate addition, which was of an appropriating character and in no wise undertook to abrogate a treaty.

Mr. Speaker CLARK, on August 17, 1912, second session, Sixty-second Congress, House Manual, section 942–a, sustained a point of order to a conference report on the naval appropriation bill on the ground that the conferees exceeded their authority by including in the report matters not in disagreement between the two Houses by the addition to a Senate amendmen of the following words: "Of the Navy or Marine Corps," and also by the insertion of the words "with his consent."

On March 2, 1915, third session Sixty-third Congress, House Manual, 942–b, Mr. Speaker CLARK sustained a point of order to a conference committee report on the ship purchase bill, and in doing so said:

> If there is anything settled about conferences between the two Houses it is this: Where two amounts are named and the question is referred to the conferees, they may oscillate as much as they please between the two extremes, but they can not go below the lower amount and they can not go above the higher amount. That applies to sums of money in appropriation bills. This has been ruled so often that it is as familiar as the multiplication table. In tariff bills, where the House suggests one rate on any given article and the other House suggests another rate, the conferees can not go below the lower and they can not go above the higher rate.

The RECORD discloses that the difference between the two Houses was as to the matter of time. The limit of time was fixed at two years and the conferees extended it to three years. The Speaker held that their limit was from zero to two years and that the conferees might agree upon any time between zero and two years but not upon a greater time.

So in this case the House bill contained an appropriation for $5,000. The Senate amendment added to the $5,000 the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1920. These were the limits of the power of the conferees. They could neither agree upon a sum less than $5,000 nor greater than $5,000 plus the unexpended balance. All that was really in disagreement between the two Houses was the appropriation contained in the Senate amendment of the unexpended balance. The real matter in disagreement was thus restricted to the adoption of the additional appropriation of the unexpended balance, or an agreement upon a sum less than such unexpended balance.

The attention of the Chair is also directed to a ruling by Mr. Speaker CANNON, Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6417. The headlines of this ruling read as follows:

> The managers of a conference must confine themselves to the differences committed to them. Managers of a conference may not change the text to which both Houses have agreed.

At this point I also desire to quote the language of Mr. Speaker Reed, cited in Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, section 6410. It was contended that the introduction by Senate amendment of a subject matter warranted the agreement by the conferees of any matter within the scope of such subject matter, even beyond the disagreement of the two Houses. Mr. Speaker Reed answered that contention in the following language:

> If we were to adopt the idea that when once the subject matter was introduced that was to control, and not the difference between the two bodies, we should be likely to enlarge the powers of the committee of conference rather beyond what was intended by the House. To the Chair it seems the point of order is well taken, and therefore the Chair sustains it.

It is respectfully submitted that the point of order should be sustained, both upon the ground that the report contains matter not considered by either House, and therefore not within the disagreement between the two Houses, and that it attaches legislation to an appropriation bill changing existing law, which is not germane to the Senate amendment.

Mr. PORTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will.

Mr. PORTER. I can probably save the time of the House by conceding the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. If the gentleman concedes the point of order, I presume the Chair will not care to hear further argument.

The SPEAKER. Unless some gentleman wishes to be heard against the point of order the Chair will sustain the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment to the bill H. R. 11960, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. PORTER, Mr. ROGERS, and Mr. FLOOD.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday we passed over the item in regard to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation on page 31, to be called up to-day. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] is present now, and inasmuch as he had as much, perhaps, if not more to do than any other man with the writing of the transportation act, I would like to have him make a statement with regard to this provision that is carried in the bill and the necessity for its continuation, if any.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] on a pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASEY. What is the parliamentary situation at present as regards the time and recognition to discuss the question?

The CHAIRMAN. We are now working under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CASEY. We are now proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. And the gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; he will be.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I was not on the floor when the discussion was had yesterday on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CASEY] to strike out the provision in the sundry civil bill for the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. During the consideration of the transportation act in the committee, in subcommittee, and also in conference, this very matter was given very careful consideration. As a result of our deliberations we felt that it would not be wise at this time to put a provision in the transportation act repealing the act creating the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, due to the fact that there are some duties that that board could perform, notwithstanding the provisions in the transportation act creating the Railway Labor Board.

As to the necessity of continuing the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, permit me to read a portion of the testimony presented before our committee by Mr. W. N. Doak, one of the legislative representatives of the brotherhood, and one who, perhaps, has given more study to the subject of labor disputes on railroads than any other man. In his testimony of July 25, last year, he stated:

I was asked the other day what I would suggest to be done with the Newlands Act and the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. I stated at that time that I would not interfere with it at all; that there might be cases, there might be times, and certain conditions under which the parties would desire to invoke mediation. If such is the case, I would let it continue. That law has adjusted more disputes, gentlemen, than any other piece of legislation that was ever passed on the face of the earth.

In the Railroad Administration I understand they have mediators that go out in certain cases and use their good offices to bring about adjustments of schedule revision cases, or to make new schedules with some of the railroads where the employees were not organized and had no agreement prior to the period of Government control, and I think it would be just as well to let the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, as provided in the Newlands Act, continue to function in cases of private ownership of railroads after this period of Government control ceases.

That was the statement made by Mr. Doak before our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the 25th day of July, and in the consideration of the bill in conference, weighing these words of Mr. Doak and also other testimony, and receiving a written communication from Mr. Chambers, who is at the head of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, we concluded not to repeal that act but to specifically state in the transportation act that "the powers and duties of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation created by the act approved July 15, 1913, shall not extend to any dispute which may be received for hearing and decision by any adjustment board or the labor board.

It may be inferred from that language that nothing was left to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation. Let me remind you that the act creating the Board of Mediation and Conciliation is confined to common carriers engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, excepting therefrom street car companies. Now, listen to the first section of the labor title, namely, section 300, paragraph 1:

The term "carrier" includes any express company, sleeping car company, and any carrier by railroad, subject to the interstate-commerce act, except a street, interurban, or suburban electric railway not operating as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation.

So that if you repeal the act creating the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, you leave no tribunal for the hearing of disputes arising on interurban or suburban electric railways not operating as a part of a steam railroad system.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. ESCH. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Some of the most intensive strikes in the United States occur upon the electric and interurban lines, and for that reason we felt that we would be justified in leaving that jurisdiction where it has been, under the Board of Mediation and Conciliation.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CASEY. Are the railroads just mentioned by the gentleman from Wisconsin engaged in interstate and foreign commerce?

Mr. ESCH. Very many of them are. Many of these interurban lines cross the State boundary lines. Many of them connect large commercial centers with the outlying country in another State. The gentleman has only to consider the case of Toledo, and of Detroit, and of Chicago, and of Kansas City, and of Omaha, and of many eastern cities. There are many electric lines that are interurban, and now if you repeal the act creating the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, you deny them any authority in law to appear before a board and adjust their disputes, because the transportation act specifically excludes them. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is sufficient for the board to do to justify its existence.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. ESCH. I do.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin what kind of a dispute may be considered by this Board of Mediation and Conciliation, inasmuch as section 316 of the transportation act provides that they shall not extend to any dispute which may be received for hearing and decision. It does not say "which has been," but "which may be received."

Mr. ESCH. It can not be received if the dispute arises on an interurban or suburban electric line. The act specifically excludes employees on such lines.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It does not say they might be received.

Mr. ESCH. No. For these reasons the conference committee on the transportation act framed the language as contained in section 316, and believed that there was enough work to do to justify the continuation of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to intrude on the time of the House to any great extent in discussing this matter further. I said about all I cared to say on this subject yesterday afternoon. Judge Chambers called at my office about 11.30 this morning and left with me a memorandum, which I have read over hurriedly. I talked with him about the points that came out in the discussion in the consideration of this matter yesterday, and after discussing it with him for about 30 minutes I am more strongly impressed than I was yesterday that there is conflict between these two boards, and that there are bound to be conflicts from time to time.

Judge Chambers cited to me order No. 1 and decision No. 1 of the labor board about a case that would not be considered by the board until they had used all available means. I asked him to kindly cite to me the case he had in mind, and he said that they had offered their services to an organization in Buffalo, of which Mr. Heberling, of the switchmen, is president. I asked him what would be their position, what functions their board could exercise in that case. He said, "Our first move would be to try to get the men who left Mr. Heberling's organization back into it as a matter of conciliation." I asked him if he believed that was a proper function of a governmental board—to go out and tell men who left an organization to go back into it.

I also asked him why, if his statement was correct, the labor board is now considering the grievances of the railroad employees of the country directly without going to his Board of Mediation and Conciliation. Of course, there is no answer to that question. What happened? The bipartisan board provided for in the transportation act met. They could not come to an agreement, and the railroad executive refused to proceed further with the negotiations and took an appeal direct to the labor board, as provided for in the transportation act. They did not go to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, which, we are told, they must go to before they have exhausted all available means, and I am satisfied in my own mind that there is a conflict between these two boards which is bound to cause trouble; and, as I stated yesterday, if this labor board is going to amount to anything, if it is going to be able to function properly, then all authority over these disputes should be centered in that board. Otherwise I am of the opinion that we are going to have trouble.

I asked Judge Chambers this further question: "Do I understand that your board takes the position that if their employees and the railroad executives, after negotiations for several days or weeks, finally arrive at the conclusion that they can not come to a settlement, and either or both sides then appeal directly to the labor board, that the labor board will refuse to accept jurisdiction and will say to those people, 'You have not exhausted all available means. You must go to the Board of Mediation and Conciliation?'" He left me under the impression that that was the interpretation that they placed upon the order and decision of the labor board.

I asked him further, if that were true, what authority this Board of Mediation and Conciliation had to handle the question of wages. Then he said that he could readily see where there would be use for the Board of Mediation and Conciliation in settling disputes after an award had been made, as to whether or not the wages as granted in that award were being paid and the award complied with.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CASEY. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASEY. I wanted to know from him what authority they had to administer an award made by the labor board. I asked him if he did not think that the best tribunal to administer an award was the board that rendered the decision after hearing the testimony in the case.

So I say to you frankly, my friends, that, notwithstanding the conference I had with Judge Chambers this morning, I am still of the opinion that there is a useless duplication of work and conflict of authority that will breed discontent and trouble on the railroads of the country; and in the face of the language of the transportation act, as I understand it, in the face of the facts as presented, and in the face of the statements made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] as to the economy plan of this Congress, I am satisfied if you believe that this is a part of your economy plan to appropriate $35,000 for a board that will do no good but just cause conflict and trouble in the country, you may do it if you wish, but you shall not do it with my vote.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman know of any instance where a Government commission or board having been created and then another one created to do the same work, the first one was abolished?

Mr. CASEY. I do not know of such a case, but I think it is about time we were doing just that thing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That may be, but I just wondered if it was ever possible to abolish a useless office.

Mr. CASEY. I am trying to do it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words upon this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, this matter is very important, and I would be the last one to say a word in behalf of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation if I were convinced that there are no duties for such board to perform.

I called up the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, and I have here a statement which has been submitted by the board, which I would like to have go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The documents herewith show the outline and to a considerable extent the details of the work of the board since its creation. Practically every railroad in the country and all employees connected with transportation have been directly involved in this work. Investigation will show the comprehensiveness, the speed, and the generally satisfactory way in which the work has been accomplished. The work has been peculiarly in the public interests, and during the six years or more of the life of the law and its administration there have been less than a half dozen strikes resulting in the cessation of train movement. The work of the board representing the public interests and accomplishing these results has no doubt incurred the hostility of certain interests at times.

There is no conflict between this law and this board and the recently enacted Esch-Cummins law and the board established under it. Section 301 of the "transportation act" provides:

> It shall be the duty of all carriers and their officers, employees, and agents to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees or subordinate officials thereof.

It is clear from this language that the parties to a railroad labor controversy must be able to show to the Railroad Labor Board whenever a complaint reaches that board that they have directly exerted "every reasonable effort" and if those direct efforts have failed that they have adopted "every available means" to avoid any interruption, and so forth. The words "every reasonable effort" undoubtedly apply to the direct negotiations between employer and employees. The words "adopt every available means" include the employment of every and all agencies authorized by law to assist in these adjustments; and it is in this connection that the services of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation are most effective. The records of the board show that more than nine-tenths of the controversies which have been settled in the past have never gone beyond the mediation stage. Arbitration is only resorted to as a final expedient.

This statement is also in conformity with the view of the law as interpreted and announced by the United States Railroad Labor Board in Order No. 1 of that board, dated April 19, 1920, in the first clause of which it is stated:

> As it is further contemplated and provided by the law that pending such conference, reference to and hearing by this board it shall be the duty of all carriers, their officers, their employees, and agents to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any such dispute; therefore this board will not receive, entertain, or consider any application or complaint from or by any party, parties, or their representatives who have not complied with or who are not complying with the provisions of the law or who are not exerting every reasonable effort and adopting every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and employees.

Decision No. 1 of the United States Railroad Labor Board declining an application for hearing recites the following:

> It does not show that the applicant had exerted every reasonable effort and adopted every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of the carriers.

There is no reason to anticipate any conflict between the two boards, and there is every reason to anticipate that they will work in harmony, which has already been indicated in conferences between certain members of the respective boards, and it is recognized that the Railroad Labor Board, if applied to by the parties to the controversy, can take up the case which the mediation board has not been able to adjust through its assistance in direct negotiation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of his remarks the statement referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGEE. I took the matter up with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and he stated to me, as he has stated in the House, that in his opinion sufficient reason exists for the continuation of this board. I also called up the Railway Labor Board and talked with Mr. Hanger, a member of that board, and asked him if he would give me a statement to present to the House of their views on the matter. He took it up with the board and afterwards stated to me that the position of the board is that, the matter not having been called to their attention before so that they could give it sufficient consideration, the board is reluctant to make any expression at all in the matter. He stated to me that the members of the board think that the House ought to get this information from the committees of Congress which had charge of the railroad bill.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] has given his views in the premises. So far as we are concerned the fact remains that the Congress created a Board of Mediation and Conciliation and the act has not been repealed.

Mr. NOLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. I will.

Mr. NOLAN. Did Judge Chambers give you any idea of any considerable number of strikes or controversies settled between interurban lines or suburban lines?

Mr. MAGEE. I did not talk with Judge Chambers, but his communication refers to certain tables which I understand show a record of their work. The judge said in his statement that the records of the board show that more than nine-tenths of the controversies which have been settled in the past have never gone beyond the mediation stage, and that arbitration was the last resort.

Mr. NOLAN. The reason why I ask the question is that we have another board that deals with street railways, whether they are in the limits of the State or outside the State. That is the board connected with the Department of Labor.

Mr. MAGEE. I understand that. My point is that it seems to me that as far as the House is concerned we ought to proceed in a logical and orderly manner. Two great committees of Congress had under consideration railroad legislation, and the members of those committees ought to know more about the proposition than other Members who have not given it study, and I admit that I am not competent to speak on the proposition.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Certainly.

Mr. BEGG. Can the gentleman tell us why the railroad bill excluded the interurban lines; why the trouble on the interurban lines could not be settled the same as on the steam lines?

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman had better put his question to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will yield, we eliminated the interurban lines all through the bill, because we did not want them subjected to some other provision, like extending it to the provision for securities issues.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman has hardly answered my question, other than to say that they were included on account of other provisions. Since they are eliminated, is it necessary to maintain two governmental agencies, at a big expense, to do the same piece of work?

Mr. ESCH. We knew that the Board of Mediation and Conciliation had jurisdiction.

Mr. BEGG. Could not the Labor Adjustment Board provided for in the steam-railroad bill settle the railroad problem on the interurban lines?

Mr. ESCH. If they were given the job, they would tackle it, I have no doubt; but they have enough to do as it is.

Mr. MAGEE. The members of the two committees of Congress having charge of railroad legislation in their wisdom have seen fit not to repeal the act creating the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, but to continue it. Section 11 of the act creating the Board of Mediation and Conciliation provides that there shall be a Commissioner of Mediation and Conciliation, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, whose salary shall be $7,500 per annum, who shall hold office for a term of seven years, and until a successor qualifies, and who shall be removable by the President only for misconduct in office.

Mr. CASEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that because of the act creating this position that Congress could not do away with this position when they provide another tribunal to do the work?

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman certainly does not mean to intimate that he does not fully appreciate what his proposition means. I am giving facts. I have been seeking information, and I am giving that information to the House; that is all.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is this man Mahany, that we see so much about in the papers, a member of this board?

Mr. MAGEE. No; he is on an entirely different board. I understand there is a Board of Mediation and Conciliation in the Department of Labor that has jurisdiction of industrial disputes. But this board has jurisdiction only in railroad matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGEE. The proposition is a complex one, and I am not competent to say, as the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce can say, whether it is wise to strike the proposed paragraphs from this bill. What I do say is that if you do, then your action amounts to this, that you starve a duly constituted body to death, one created by statute, one preserved and continued by the railroad act which you supported and voted for.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman's idea is that we should have three governmental functions for the settlement of labor disputes?

Mr. MAGEE. That is not my idea at all. My idea is that if we do not believe that there is sufficient cause for the existence of this board, then we should proceed in the usual and orderly way and repeal the act, which has been especially preserved in the railroad act.

Mr. LAYTON. If we do not sustain the motion to strike out of this bill that provision, then, in effect, we will have three governmental agencies for the settlement of disputes—one for the railroads, one for the trolley lines, and, I suppose, one for industrial matters in the Labor Department.

Mr. MAGEE. They settle different kinds of disputes, as was pointed out by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH].

Mr. LAYTON. If that is a good idea, why not have a special conciliation board for the cotton workers and another for the woolen workers, and so on?

Mr. MAGEE. The gentleman is considering one phase of the proposition and I am considering another. What I say is that this is not the proper way, in my judgment, to get rid of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, if we consider that there is no longer reason for its continuance. The proper way, if you are going to do it, is to repeal the act that created it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CASEY) there were—ayes 35, noes 57.

Mr. CASEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands tellers. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Sixteen Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the second paragraph of the matter that was reverted to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Authority for incurring expenses, including subsistence, by boards of arbitration shall first be obtained from the Board of Mediation and Conciliation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, for administrative purposes, the payment of claims arising from the cancellation of contracts, damage charges and miscellaneous adjustments, maintenance and operation of vessels, and the completion of vessels now under construction, shall be paid from the following sources: (a) The amount on hand July 1, 1920; (b) the amount received during the fiscal year 1921 from the operation of ships; (c) not to exceed $15,000,000 from deferred payments on ships sold prior to the approval of this act; (d) not to exceed $25,000,000 from plant and material sold during the fiscal year 1921; and (e) not to exceed $30,000,000 from ships sold during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That, after the approval of this act, no contract shall be entered into or work undertaken for the construction of any additional vessels for the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Strike out the paragraph and insert the following:

"For expenses of United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, for administrative purposes, the payment of claims arising from the cancellation of contracts, damage charges, and miscellaneous adjustments, maintenance and operation of vessels, and the completion of vessels now under consideration, $197,500,000, which sum, together with the amount of the cash on hand on June 30, 1920, shall constitute the amounts which may be expended by the said corporation during the fiscal year 1921 for the purpose herein set forth: Provided, That all moneys received by the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year 1921 and thereafter, shall not be available for expenditure for any purpose whatsoever, and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, let us have the point of order disposed of first.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not think there is any portion of the amendment that is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It is new legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It simply means an appropriation for the expenses of the Shipping Board, which is authorized by law.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order. The only portion of the amendment that is subject to the point of order is the proviso, and if the amendment should be agreed to, I think the proviso ought to be agreed to also.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas made the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] made strenuous efforts before the committee to get this amendment in the bill. The committee saw fit to vote them down and not permit it to go into the bill. I do not know what change of heart has come over the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the chairman is not in favor of this amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And even if I were to concede what the gentleman says, this is in the nature of an appeal from the committee to the House.

Mr. GOOD. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows, if he is opposed to the amendment, that the proviso is subject to the point of order, and that because of that fact the whole amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. But the gentleman from Tennessee could offer the amendment again without the proviso, and if the amendment should prevail certainly the proviso ought to prevail.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman believe that he has force enough to vote it down?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think so, unquestionably.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question, as a plain Member of the House who has to vote on this bill. I want the gentleman to state to the House what will be the difference in dollars between the amendment of the gentleman and the bill as now printed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I shall undertake to state that.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, can we not agree as to time for debate on the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think there are several gentlemen who want to discuss it one way or the other.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman realizes that we have read so far only 43 pages of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think if the gentleman will let us proceed for a little while, we could then come to some agreement. I do not think there will be much discussion over here.

Mr. GOOD. Can we agree on 20 minutes of debate, 10 minutes on a side?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like to have 10 minutes myself, and that is all I shall ask. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], a member of the subcommittee, and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN], a member of the committee, want to discuss it, and I understand the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] desires five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, we can not have two or three hours of debate upon this one amendment. There ought to be five minutes of debate for and five minutes of debate against.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the matter is of a great deal more importance than the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to indicate.

Mr. GOOD. I realize the fact that the gentleman's amendment carries about $197,000,000 and is of enough importance to take a little time in debate.

I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But I would like to have 10 minutes——

Mr. GOOD. Say 40 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think, in view of this amendment and the appropriation carried for the Shipping Board, involving about $200,000,000, to undertake to limit debate upon what I conceive is a question of policy on the part of this House as to the manner in which appropriations shall be made for the Shipping Board is asking too much to limit debate merely to 30 minutes upon the amendment. I would like to have at least 10 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman agree to 40 minutes?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would like to have 10 minutes myself, and I propose to ask the House to give me that time, and here are several gentlemen who desire to get time.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman agree to 40 minutes—20 minutes to a side?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not agree to that with these gentlemen here who desire to discuss the matter.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman will realize that we must get along. I have no desire to cut down——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Can the gentleman give 30 minutes to this side?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee and one-half by myself.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask that the time be made an hour and 10 minutes so that the gentleman from Tennessee may have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to one hour, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of this amendment with some little degree of diffidence, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that it will unquestionably be voted down, for I presume he speaks with authority from his side. I have offered this amendment in the interest of what some of us believe to be a proper administrative policy with reference to appropriations made not only in behalf of the Shipping Board but in behalf of all other governmental activities. I am sure that all of us will concede that it is good administration and good business to make direct appropriations for governmental agencies where it can be done rather than to give those agencies an opportunity to reach into various reservoirs and receipts for the money necessary to carry them on during the fiscal year, and that is one of my principal objections to the provisions of this bill in reference to the Shipping Board.

Now, if the gentleman from Iowa is correct in his figures he set forth in the speech which he made under general debate upon this bill, there is very little difference in the amount that is proposed to be appropriated by this amendment and the amount carried by the bill. For instance, the gentleman from Iowa makes available the unexpended balance upon July 1, which, according to him, will amount to $61,000,000. He then makes available all receipts during the next fiscal year by way of operation, and, according to his statement, that will include something like $70,000,000, which the Shipping Board states will be collected from the War Department on account of services heretofore rendered. It may amount to more, for it is claimed that the War Department owes the board over $100,000,000. In addition to that, the provisions in the bill make available $15,000,000, which they say they will collect during the next fiscal year on deferred payments on ships heretofore sold. In addition to that, it makes available not exceeding $25,000,000, which the Shipping Board expects to derive through the sale of surplus material in plants, and so forth, in various parts of the country. In addition to that, the provisions in the bill make available $30,000,000, or not exceeding that amount, from the sale of ships which will be made during the next fiscal year. The total amount as set forth by the gentleman from Iowa as carried in this bill under this kind of appropriation is $200,000,000, and there may be added to that such net income as the Shipping Board may receive during the fiscal year from its operations. Now, they made $8,000,000 during the first three months of this year. It is true, as Mr. Gillan states, that they may not realize that much during the next fiscal year; but if they have a net income at that rate during the next fiscal year they will derive from that source $32,000,000. So if you concede that they will make something out of their operations during the next fiscal year, taking that with what is set forth by the gentleman from Iowa, then the provisions of this bill make available the sum of at least $232,000,000, and a greater amount if the collections from the War Department should exceed $70,000,000. Now, the amendment proposed seeks to appropriate directly the sum of $197,500,000 and whatever balance they may have on July 1. I have offered this amendment, as I say, simply in the interest of what I believe to be good administration. I do not believe, gentlemen, that it makes for efficiency and economy, I do not believe that it makes for good conduct in office, to make indirect appropriations and permit a department or any other agency of the Government to reach into this reservoir and into that reservoir for the amount of money necessary to expend during the next fiscal year when Congress can determine what they should have. Certainly this Shipping Board has been in existence long enough to determine what it will need, and we ought to appropriate for it whatever money it needs and say to it that any receipts received during the fiscal year shall be covered into the Treasury as part of its miscellaneous receipts. In no other way can you keep a proper check upon governmental expenditures. As I understand, it has always been the policy of the Congress in all of its appropriations to make direct appropriations and let the Government and the people know just what amount of money is appropriated and what amount will be expended in order that, if a request is made for more money or when they come back to give an account of what money they have spent, the Congress may know what money they have had and know how to check them up. Now, there is another objection I have to the provision as offered by the gentleman. I am in favor of the sale of all these ships. I think we all agree upon that. I want to see these ships sold just as soon as it is possible to sell them, providing a fair and reasonable price is obtained for them and provided there is a guaranty that they will fly the American flag. The people of this country have spent about $3,000,000,000 in building up a great and magnificent merchant marine. I do not want anybody to say that Congress has taken action which may result in depriving the people of the advantages of a merchant marine which the people of this country have desired for so long a time and which means so much in the development of our wealth and resources.

Now, what do you do? You do just what one gentleman who appeared before the committee said he wanted done. He said, "We want you to put us in a position to force the sale of these ships and force us to make the money with which to carry us on." I do not object, as I say, to selling the ships. On the contrary, I want to see these ships sold, but I do not want to put them in a position where they will be compelled to sacrifice those ships at a small value in order to derive the money necessary to carry them on during the next fiscal year. I would dislike very much to see the Shipping Board in a position where it would be compelled to sell ships at a less value than it ought to obtain for them in order to secure the necessary revenue and permit the board to say to the country if criticism results,

"We had to do it because Congress did not give us the money; we had to sell in order to get the money to carry on our operations and the various activities of the board." And that is one of the great objections I have to this form of appropriations. I believe we ought to appropriate directly what money they will need, and then say to them to proceed with the operation and the sales of these ships, and hold them responsible.

Now, it is unfortunate, exceedingly unfortunate, that this Congress has not established a shipping policy. Since the armistice was signed possibly $1,600,000,000 has been spent or appropriated for this Shipping Board, if I mistake not. Congress has been in session for practically a year, and some shipping policy should have been heretofore adopted by Congress with reference to the sales of ships and with reference to what course shall be followed by the Shipping Board in the maintenance of those ships. But that has not been done, just as Congress has failed to act on many other needful reconstruction measures. There has been a bill introduced recently in the Senate, with the approval of the Senate Commerce Committee, which proposes to establish a policy for this Shipping Board. But until that is done, until Congress has established such a policy, it seems to me the wisest course and the most economical course, the most efficient course, is to appropriate whatever money is necessary for this Shipping Board to maintain itself during the next fiscal year. I understand that the bill introduced in the Senate provides for the sale of all these ships at the earliest practicable date. That proposition, I am sure, will meet with little if any opposition, but we by this method of appropriation are about to put the Shipping Board in a position where they will not have discretion to wait for a reasonable price or a practicable time in the event their money runs short. It is for these reasons that I have offered this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman from Tennessee use some more time on that side?

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, we are trying here to appropriate $200,000,000 to establish a policy for the Shipping Board. I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think the Members ought to be here.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [The Chairman proceeded to count.]

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, if I may, I withdraw the point of order. I see gentlemen coming in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, the subcommittee on the sundry civil bill gave pretty full hearings upon this proposition. Representatives of the Shipping Board appeared before the subcommittee and stated their views. After full consideration of the matter the committee acted as seemed best to them and in the public interest. We think that these ships ought to be sold by the Shipping Board as rapidly as sales in the public interest can be made, and I think that the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] agrees with me in this contention.

We have provided in this bill what we consider reasonable amounts for the expenditures of the board. It seemed better to us to provide in the ways mentioned in the bill than to make a lump-sum appropriation. In other words, it will require a good many millions of dollars for the continuation of the work of this board for the coming fiscal year. We thought that it would be much better to have the Shipping Board active, especially as to sales of these ships, while there is a good market and before that market becomes depressed, than to make a large appropriation to be paid by the taxpayers of the country.

The plan provided in this bill is along the line of economy adopted by the House. We believe that in every possible way we should economize in public expenditures and should impress this view of economy in every way that we can upon every board and upon every department of the Government. And, so far as I am personally concerned, in the matter of taxation I think that if we are to do anything, we should revise taxation downward and not upward.

If we can encourage the board to adopt the policy of selling these ships upon the present market, we think that is the best way to subserve the public interest, and it has been that policy of economy that has controlled the judgment of the committee in making the provisions that are contained in this bill.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MAGEE. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does not the gentleman think they ought to be limited in the sale of these vessels to obtaining an amount that would at least be equal to what it would require to replace the vessels? And if under the conditions of this bill you have forced a sale which is an emergency sale, and they should sacrifice the ships in order to continue their operations, would not Congress be much to blame for it?

Mr. MAGEE. Well, I do not agree with the gentleman, because we have not only in this country, but in Great Britain, I would suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, a standard of cost of production which is constanly varying. We can not expect to sell our ships above the standard of cost of production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire that the gentleman have a minute more in order to answer a question.

Mr. GOOD. I yield another minute to the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. The committee's report here shows that you are reducing by $100,000,000 the authorization for construction of ships. Could the gentleman tell me what proportion of this amount of money is now expended and what proportion is still to be expended for construction?

Mr. MAGEE. The question as to that particular item should be addressed to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JUUL. The committee report shows that you are reducing the appropriation by $100,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. Those are contract authorizations, where the contracts have not been let for new ships.

Mr. JUUL. What proportion of this amount is yet to be expended?

Mr. GOOD. All of that will not be expended. It has been cut out. We have passed on that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am very sorry that my distinguished colleague [Mr. MAGEE], who is my associate on the subcommittee on this sundry civil bill, evidently does not quite grasp the full meaning of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. That amendment takes no money out of the Treasury of the United States, and there is no question of economy involved, as the remarks of my friend who has just spoken would indicate. We are dealing solely with a question of policy, and I fear that the House does not as yet understand this to be a fact.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the Emergency Fleet Corporation will need at least the amount specified in the Byrns amendment in order to complete the construction program, to adjust cancellation claims and other claims, for all other administrative purposes, and to recondition the former owned German liners, if the Shipping Board decides to change its present attitude with reference to this class of ships. I am one of those who never were and who are not yet satisfied with the manner in which the expenses of that board are provided for in the language of the bill before us. I prefer the amendment offered by my colleague, and if the House would give it nonpartisan consideration, I have not the slightest doubt but that it would be adopted overwhelmingly.

I regret that debate on this amendment has been limited, because there are many things that could be said for the proposed change in the bill which must remain unsaid. While I am on my feet, however, I want to go on record as one of those who are not in agreement with what some of the previous speakers have alleged to be the prevalent sentiment in this House, and that is that all these ships, including the German liners, should be sold now.

I do not believe in a forced sale, and I fear that we are up against that very thing if we proceed to put these German liners on the market. I know that the Shipping Board has not asked Congress to give it any money for reconditioning these ships, but the Byrns amendment provides a very substantial amount for this very purpose, and that is one reason why I advocate its adoption. These ships ought to be reconditioned before they are put on the market, so that they shall not be sold at a sacrifice.

Let us not forget, my colleagues, that these ships were considered the best of their kind in the world before the war. They were taken from an enemy. We spent millions of dollars on them, and they carried hundreds of thousands of our boys over to France and then brought them back from the battle fields of Europe in safety. These ships contributed in no mean degree in saving modern civilization from the militarism of the Kaiser. Naturally these facts have had much to do with creating a pronounced sentiment among the American people against the sale of the ships to any foreign corporation.

If the Government continues to own and operate these ships, I feel confident that we will help to develop a genuine service, and we will soon have it on a paying basis. Then the ships can be disposed of at least for all they have cost us, if not more, under such restrictions and upon such terms as will not only insure the maintenance of the service, but their continuance under our flag.

I am one of those who believe that we should make a renewed effort to develop our trade and extend our commerce. England has already started to do everything possible to aid her business interests and to maintain her former trade. America can and ought to have a large portion of the world's trade in the hands of her people if she will only make a determined effort to get it. This is not the time to hamper the Shipping Board, which, although it may have made mistakes, is now trying to recover from those mistakes and to do its level best to develop the trade of this Republic. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yields back two minutes. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee use some more of his time?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How many more speeches have you on that side?

Mr. GOOD. Two or three.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Let us have one of them.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I can readily understand the hesitation of the gentlemen on the other side. There is no argument to be made on the amendment. The gentlemen are therefore reluctant to appear in support of it. I am not surprised at that. There is still virtue on that side of the House. [Laughter.] Perhaps not so much, but some.

Mr. GALLIVAN. It has absolutely disappeared on the other side. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. There are two fundamental and conclusive objections to this amendment. First, it places in the hands of the Shipping Board about $100,000,000 more than it ought to have. That is the first objection—$100,000,000 more than it needs. Many of the Members on the Democratic side have heretofore patriotically supported us; the majority of them have supported us in our plan and purpose of economy. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] in the main has, but he has suddenly broken out in extravagances at this late hour in the session and wants to give the Shipping Board $100,000,000 more than it needs and more than it ought to have.

That is the first objection. The second objection to the amendment is that instead of putting the Shipping Board on its metal, instead of compelling the Shipping Board to collect the sums due it, instead of compelling the Shipping Board to do business in a businesslike way in order to get the money needed for its operations, it is proposed to go down into the pockets of the American people for a couple of hundred millions of dollars and leave the Shipping Board without incentive to either collect the sums due it or to make the ordinary efforts that should be made in the course of business and secure in that way sums needed for expenditure.

Now, either of those objections is conclusive. First, the appropriation is excessive in the sum of about $100,000,000. It may not seem so much to some gentlemen, but we are finally waking up to a realization of the fact that $100,000,000 is a sum worthy of consideration.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This bill as reported by the committee, and for which the gentleman stands, carried a possibility of $232,000,000 in itself. Does the gentleman propose to offer an amendment to cut that down?

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment offered by the gentleman would carry with it the possibility of an expenditure of more than $325,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is a question of mathematics.

Mr. MONDELL. I am entirely right; if I had the time I could give the details. The chairman of the committee will give the gentleman the details. I am sure he will do that. I could do it if I had the time.

It is $100,000,000 more than is necessary. Then it takes it all out of the pockets of the American people and leaves the Shipping Board free to pursue the even tenor of its way, without collecting the sums due it from the Army, without collecting the sums due it from other sources, without making any sales or transfers, safe, secure, serene, floating on the boundless sea of Federal munificence, dragging hundreds of millions of dollars out of the pockets of the people, instead of doing business and getting its money in a businesslike way. Now, just why in a momentary lapse of virtue the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] should take this peculiar shift of view I do not understand; but I am satisfied that no gentleman on either side who understands the facts in the case will vote for the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], in saying that we had a little virtue left on this side of the House, said a great deal more than could be said for his side of the House this morning. [Laughter.] The truth is that among his virtues to-day the virtue of accuracy can not be included. In fact I believe if he were pressed to tell the truth, he would state that he was not in the House when the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] was read and that he had not read the provision in the bill. He proved the correctness of my statement when he said to the House that the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] involved an expenditure of $332,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. No; I said $325,000,000, but I stand corrected. I think it probably would involve that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will take it at $325,000,000. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] provides a specific appropriation of $197,000,000 and the balance on hand, and if the gentleman from Wyoming says there will be a balance on hand of $150,000,000, I challenge him to point out any testimony in justification of his statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman claim there is anything in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee that would prevent them from collecting the sums due from the Army and using those sums?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is absolutely nothing in the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee that would justify the expenditure of more than $197,000,000 and the balance on hand, which amounts to $55,000,000. Then turn to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] made in the general debate, and you will find on page 6416 of the RECORD that he stated that this bill as it now stands carries $200,000,000. Then where is the economy? Certainly there can be no economy except as to the difference between the amount that is carried in this bill of $200,000,000 and the amount that the balance on hand causes the total under the amendment to exceed $200,000,000.

But here is the position that we take: It is the position that has always been taken by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] as long as he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations. He never before contended that it was wise legislation to establish revolving funds in Government departments and authorize them to spend money as it was turned in. Why, at the beginning of this session of Congress you brought into the House a proposition to take away from the Housing Corporation this very power, because we knew it was a dangerous power to leave in the hands of any department.

You caused the Housing Corporation to turn its revenues into the Treasury and secure its money by direct appropriations from the Congress, in order that we may keep our finger upon the appropriations and determine how the money is being spent. It was good business for you to do that. Then your Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries came in, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE], chairman of that committee, reported a bill which passed this House, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] voted for it, requiring the Shipping Board to do exactly what we say now that they ought to do, to turn into the Treasury of the United States the proceeds from the sale of ships and from every other activity, and then appropriate to them the money that they need to pay their obligations.

Now you are reversing your position, and the position which the Merchant Marine Committee and this House said was right, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROWE] and every other man who served on that committee. You say now they were wrong, and you authorize the Shipping Board to use its revenues to pay its obligations, so that the Congress of the United States can never tell how much they have spent or what has become of the money, and you call that good business. No excuse is offered us for this sudden change of front and this presentation to us of an unbusinesslike system never before considered. What is the effect of it? There is no economy in it. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] says this bill appropriates $200,000,000. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] asks for a direct appropriation of $197,000,000. Where is there any economy in the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa? The only difference is one of policy. The bills and obligations of the Shipping Board under the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will be paid out of the direct appropriation, and all the money received from any source will be turned into the Treasury. Under the proposition contained in the bill they are foot-loose to secure money from any source and invest it in anything that they need. The source from which it is expected that they will receive it is the sale of ships, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and every other gentleman on this floor knows that if the Shipping Board can sell its ships in the open market at such time as best prices can be obtained, they can receive a greater amount of money for them than they can if they are forced to sell at any time when their obligations become due. Those who seek to buy these ships know the situation. They know that if a ship is to be launched from some plant in this country and the Shipping Board has to pay for the ship and has not the funds, they have got to sell some ships in order to get them, and bidders will make lower bids than they would under other circumstances. If you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the bids are too low, the Shipping Board will reject those bids, but if you do not adopt this amendment and follow the provisions of the bill, they can not reject the bids which are made. They must accept them no matter how low they are in order to meet their obligations. Is that good business? [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made by gentlemen supporting the amendment that the original bill provides for a revolving fund, and I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], to whom I am always delighted to listen, made most of his speech on that idea. I do not think that is correct. The item in the bill provides for the expenditure of certain moneys if they are received by the Shipping Board, but it does not provide what is called a revolving fund at all, and it authorizes the expenditure of, I think, at least $50,000,000 less than the amendment.

Now, to say that we on our side are going back on the theory of the House in reference to indefinite appropriations out of the revolving fund is an assertion that I can not let go unchallenged. I have sat here for years and opposed as a general thing, not always, expenditures of money on the revolving-fund plan. But here is an actual limitation in the bill. In one case $15,000,000 is authorized, in another case $25,000,000 is authorized, in another case $30,000,000 is authorized, but only if the money is received. The gentleman from South Carolina said they could spend the money for any purpose they pleased. They can spend it for no purpose under the language of the bill that they could not spend it for under the language of the amendment. In that respect there is no difference.

The amendment proposes an expenditure and invites an expenditure of $197,000,000, plus the balance on hand, which, I am told, amounts to in the neighborhood of $60,000,000. The original provision authorized the expenditure of $70,000,000, plus the amount that is on hand and the amount that may be received from the operation of the ships. I do not know how much may be received from the operation of the ships, but if we can judge of the future by the past it will not be a very considerable sum of money.

The amount of money which has been expended by the Shipping Board on capital investment and the amount received from operation would make an interest profit so small that it would be almost infinitesimal. The Shipping Board has been regarded as the most extravagant in some respects of all the commissions that we have created. More unseaworthy ships have been constructed by the Shipping Board, probably, than by all other concerns in the world for years past.

Now, I am not disposed myself to criticize any of the operations of these war activities. I can understand that in the desire of this country to prepare for and win the war it undertook many things which did not turn out profitably. But it was desirable, and they proceeded to do something. So I am not disposed to criticize what they have done. I can see no excuse for Congress to authorize under the amendment proposed at least $50,000,000 more to be wasted by this board than would otherwise be permitted to be used by them. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, there is a large amount of difference of opinion on this amendment that does not grow out of any question about economy. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee will not add to the expenses of the Shipping Board. The trouble with the bill in the shape that it is is that it provides a revolving fund to be constituted of the total assets and income that from any source comes into the hands of the Shipping Board, which may be expended without any limitation, except only that it must be derived from the sources named.

The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee follows a policy that has been pursued by this Government always requiring its functionaries to spend a certain legally appropriated sum and account for it, and that any sums coming in from its activities to be covered into the Treasury of the United States. That is the practice of the Post Office. This bill, as it now stands, forces the Shipping Board to go to its own sources of income alone in order to pay its current expenses; it places the Shipping Board in a condition where it must make sales in the emergency market. A great portion of the funds to run the Shipping Board and meet certain obligations must come from the sale of ships, and a certain element in this country, if ship sales are forced, would be able to press down the price of ships and make such sales slaughter sales.

When a ship is sold only a very small per cent is paid. Under the bill as written the board is authorized to raise $30,000,000 from the sale of ships. And to meet all the payments they must make under this very law they may be forced to sell. The proposition has been to sell the ships on a 10 per cent cash payment, and to raise $30,000,000 would require a sale of $300,000,000 worth of ships. Certain great interests might place the Shipping Board in a situation where it would feel constrained to sell at a sacrifice the ships of our country, and the Government would suffer. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee relieves the Government from the possibility of having its ships sacrificed in slaughter sales in order to raise funds to pay the essential current expenses of the Shipping Board. [Applause.]

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I have not the time; I have but five minutes. If the gentleman will give me two minutes more, I would be glad to answer. Why, gentlemen, there will be $125,000,000 to pay to the contractors for cancellation of contracts. There will be $84,000,000 to pay for the completion of ships under contracts that we have already made and are bound by. As this goes along the Government of the United States ought to have the money in hand to pay its indebtedness and not feel that they are required to sell ships to do it or to sell other property owned by the Shipping Board at a sacrifice or else default in payment.

This bill may require the Shipping Board, in order to obtain funds to meet obligations as it goes along, to sacrifice the property of the United States for a song. It violates every principle we have ever thought was essential to economy in administration by giving a carte blanche to the Shipping Board. You say to them, "Do as you please; sell the ships; sell this property; get the money"; and then it is unlimited in another respect. They are authorized to apply all of the earnings after it comes into their hands from the operation. Under the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] if an excess or a profit is made from the operations it will go into the Treasury; in fact, all it makes, whether it be much or little, will be covered into the Treasury, and I am hoping that under an administration such as has been installed since the time that John Barton Payne came into charge of the Shipping Board and which has continued under Admiral Benson this merchant marine of ours, owned by the Government, will make big profits during the fiscal year 1921. If they should do so, they are authorized to squander it all under the bill as it is written. I think economy requires that we should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The real "nigger in the woodpile," in my belief, is that by the terms used in the bill the Republicans seem to make no appropriations for the Shipping Board and have boasted that they reduced the estimate for expenditures of the Shipping Board. You mark what I say. When they come to tell the country what amounts they appropriated they will have no item for the Shipping Board. It is a cheap way of trying to fool the people.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple proposition. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] undertook to say that it meant an expenditure of an additional $100,000,000. I am quite sure that the gentleman from Wyoming has not read the amendment or heard it read, nor has the gentleman read the provision in this bill. It will not add an additional sum to the amount carried in this bill, as has already been clearly demonstrated.

Mr. MONDELL. "The gentleman from Wyoming" has read the amendment carefully.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then I am very much surprised that the gentleman made such a statement on the floor of this House, because he is entirely mistaken.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Perhaps the gentleman from Wyoming read the amendment after he made the statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], as appears from the RECORD, made the statement that, according to the provisions of the bill, it carries $200,000,000 for the Shipping Board, and that that did not take into consideration any possible receipts from operations for the next year or any additional amount that may be collected from the War Department. This amendment carries $197,500,000 as a direct appropriation, plus whatever balance may be on hand, and it was stated in the hearings that the balance would possibly be $55,000,000 on July 1; but I was told by Mr. Dean yesterday that their figures were probably too high, and he doubted that they would have more than twenty-five or thirty million dollars on July 1. What do they need? They need $84,000,000 to complete construction of 400 ships on the ways and nearly all of them will be completed in October; they need $24,000,000, so they say, for administration. Then, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] says, there are $250,000,000 of claims on file now growing out of the cancellation of contracts, and they figure that they will be settled for $125,000,000. Those claims ought to be settled during the next fiscal year. In addition to that, they ask the committee for $44,000,000, the amount necessary to complete the reconditioning of the German ships taken over during the war. This amendment, if they have a balance of $55,000,000, will provide $252,000,000 for the Shipping Board for the next fiscal year. I call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming to one fact that he forgot, if he read the amendment prior to his speech, and that is that this amendment covers every dollar of the receipts of the Shipping Board during the next fiscal year into the Treasury, and that is good business. That is proper administration. That is the kind of legislation this Congress has adopted always in matters of this kind in the past. That is something this bill does not do. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the House bill makes provisions whereby $200,000,000 will be available for the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, assuming that they will make the sales which the Shipping Board themselves have said can safely be relied upon without sacrifice. Complaint is made with regard to the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and in all fairness I want to call the attention of the House to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. The Shipping Board stated they had on hand, or would have on hand July 1, in cash, approximately $61,000,000. They further said that the Army owed the Shipping Board something around $120,000,000 or $130,000,000 for services already rendered, and that they expected to receive approximately $70,000,000 from that source.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the amount on hand. It is $55,596,000.

Mr. GOOD. It is $61,000,000, assuming that they do not expend anything in the meantime on the reconditioning of the German ships.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But they said they were going to spend that.

Mr. GOOD. They should not, and I trust they will not. It was admitted that the War Department, or the Army, owed the Shipping Board a large amount of money, and they have agreed on $70,000,000. Suppose that is paid before the 1st day of July, and they have the money to do that, what would be available under the gentleman's amendment? Not $61,000,000, not $55,000,000, but just as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] stated, there would be of cash on hand $131,000,000 that would be available for this purpose, because the gentleman seeks to appropriate by this amendment $197,500,000, and then provides—which sum, together with the amount on hand on June 30, 1920, shall be available—

And so forth.

Now, if the Army pays the $70,000,000, they will have $131,000,000 of cash on hand, which, added to the $197,500,000 provided for in the amendment, would give them $338,000,000 available, as against an estimate—the wildest estimate of the Shipping Board—of $306,000,000. If any complaint can be made because this Congress has not done the right thing with the Shipping Board, it is because we have appropriated too much money.

The House was right in its bill of last year, and when it went to the Senate we were obliged to add $60,000,000 more, and now the Shipping Board comes and says that they have $61,000,000 more than they will expend. What did the gentleman who represented the Shipping Board say regarding this item? We do not act without advice. Mr. Gillen, the special representative of the chairman, the man who came before the Committee on Appropriations, explaining this item, said:

This being a liquidating job, we should be told that there were not any appropriations for us, and that we should see to it that out of our liquidations we get enough money to do the job.

We have taken the Shipping Board at its word. We have given them, with some limitations, just what they said they would get in liquidations, without selling a single house or a single ship at a sacrifice. If you had a house to sell, when would you offer it for sale? Now, when prices are high and material is high, and there is a scarcity of houses, or would you hold it for two or three years, when labor will come down and material will come down, and when, perhaps, there may be an overflow of houses, and sell it then? It was the opinion of the officers representing the Shipping Board that these assets that the Government had to sell and that the Congress said they should sell should be sold when there was a market for them, and not wait until the market was passed.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does not the gentleman know that the Shipping Board has received bids for a very small percentage of their ships?

Mr. GOOD. I know that they have some ships they never will get any bids for. I know that they have a lot of wooden ships that they do not know what to do with, and nobody wants them, and we never should have possessed them.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman state to the House whether or not there has been a tremendous pressure by the Shipping Board to have the Byrns amendment adopted?

Mr. GOOD. No; I think not. We have done in the bill just what the representative of the chairman of the Shipping Board asked for—that is to say that this is a liquidating proposition, except that we said that they should not expend to exceed these specified amounts, which are practically all that the Shipping Board asked for.

I submit if there has been a department of Government during the war that has been run without applying business principles, has been run along in the most wasteful, extravagant way, that concern is the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation. They do not know to-day where they stand; they do not know anything about their authorizations; they do not know how much cash they have; they do not know how much is owing them; they do not know about their earnings; yet the gentleman from Tennessee, out of an empty Treasury and from the pockets of the taxpayers of the country, would take $197,500,000 and turn it over to this board! We say to the board, "Execute the law, sell these ships while there is a demand for them; do not sacrifice the ships, but sell them for what they are reasonably worth." Why, out of the total amount required they only estimate they will receive for ships sold $25,000,000 during the next year, so there can not be very much sacrifice when they only propose to receive $25,000,000 by the sale of ships next year. Now, what is the committee trying to do? The committee has recognized the fact that this organization—and not a member of the organization itself but what will say they do not know very much about the business; it has run away from them; they are lost in the mazes of the work of the Shipping Board; they know little about it—we simply say to them, "You will have to cut your goods according to the cloth. You will have to go out and do the things that Congress has asked you to do."

Now, I know there is pressure being brought to bear by certain shipping interests that do not want these ships sold at all. They want to continue building more ships for shipowners, and they do not want the Government to interfere with the market. [Applause.] I am looking not after their interests but after the Treasury of the United States in this matter, and I believe that the provisions we carry in the bill are along the lines that a business man would adopt if he were spending his own money. Now, gentlemen, there may be some advantage in raising this bill from $428,000,000 to over $600,000,000, as is proposed by this amendment, and taking the $197,000,000 out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the American people rather than to require——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not want to make a statement that might possibly mislead——

Mr. GOOD. No; not at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman does not contend that the money he authorizes to be used here will not go into the Treasury under this amendment. He is simply——

Mr. GOOD. I do not yield further. I say it is an inefficient board, that has done its work very poorly, and nobody knows it better than the gentleman from Tennessee, and he is with me in that—there is no difference of opinion between us on that—and I think their duties first should be to adopt a business policy, to get the money out of the things they own and that Congress has said to them they should sell, and not go to the taxpayers and get the money out of their pockets. For reasons I have expressed and for the further reason that this Congress should exercise the strictest economy in the appropriation of money, that we should not add to this bill $197,500,000 for any such purpose as the gentleman has expressed, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the Shipping Board said they would not collect the War Department claims until next year; and in view of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa I wish to ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment so as to meet this particular objection and add, after the word "that," in line 7 of the amendment, the words "not exceeding $55,000,000 of."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object to any modification of the amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Then I shall reoffer it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, then I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the gentleman has to keep a quorum the balance of the day.

Mr. GALLIVAN. And you will have to keep a quorum here the rest of the day and all the rest of the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated and the gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and the gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman should object to the minority side confessing that their amendment has no virtue and needs to be modified.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] gets excited.

Mr. GALLIVAN. No; not in the slightest; that never happens to the gentleman from Massachusetts when the gentleman from Illinois is present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members are present.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request for a modification.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were—ayes 35, noes 71.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment, the same amendment with the words "not exceeding $55,000,000 of" inserted after the word "that."

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph and insert the following:

"For expenses of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for administrative purposes, the payment of claims arising from the cancellation of contracts, damage charges and miscellaneous adjustments, maintenance and operation of vessels, and the completion of vessels now under construction, $197,500,000, which sum, together with not exceeding $55,000,000 of the amount of cash on hand on June 30, 1920, shall constitute the amounts which may be expended by the said corporation during the fiscal year 1921 for the purposes hereinbefore set forth: Provided, That all moneys received by the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the fiscal year 1921 and thereafter shall not be available for expenditure for any purpose whatsoever and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, debate is closed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Debate was closed on the other amendment, and I appeal to the RECORD.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman we were very fair, and the request was on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LAYTON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will let the gentleman from Tennessee proceed.

Mr. LAYTON. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment simply to meet the objections that were raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. I made the statement in the discussion of the preceding amendment that if that amendment was adopted it would not allow exceeding $252,000,000, in round numbers, for the Shipping Board during the next fiscal year.

The gentleman from Iowa called attention to the fact that there is $70,000,000 due from the War Department, and there is a possibility it might be collected between now and July 1. I appeal to the record of the hearings, gentlemen, to sustain me in my statement that the Shipping Board stated that it was expected that they might possibly derive $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 from the War Department during the next fiscal year. I am sure that no member of the Shipping Board expects to collect a dollar of that sum between now and July 1. But in view of his objection, and the possibility, as he says, of the payment between now and that time, I have introduced this amendment in order to carry out the intention of myself and those who favor this amendment of not permitting this Shipping Board to have one dollar over the sum I have named. This amendment is offered because we believe it is the best policy for this Congress to pursue. This Congress and no other Congress has ever adopted the policy of making appropriations and giving governmental agencies the right to draw upon certain indefinite and undetermined sums in order to carry them through the fiscal year. What Congress should do, what we seek to do by this amendment, is to make an appropriation for the amount we think they ought to have and will need during the next fiscal year, and then require every dollar by way of receipts, whether it is $70,000,000 or $200,000,000, to be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the Treasury as a part of the miscellaneous receipts.

I submit that the remarks made by the gentleman from Iowa to the effect that this was an effort to increase the appropriation carried in this bill are incorrect. He is mistaken in that. It is true—and that may be the idea of the majority of the committee in proposing this provision in the bill—that on paper the provision of the bill reduces the amount, or, rather, it results in a further reduction in the estimates, but when it comes to paying the money out of the Treasury it does not save the people one dollar. And for my part I believe it is better to be fair with the people, fair with the public, and make direct appropriations and hold the Shipping Board to strict account for the amount of money received by them rather than by a sort of camouflage to seek to make the public believe that we have reduced this appropriation in the sum of $200,000,000, when we have not saved them one dollar.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask leave for those who have spoken on this amendment to revise and extend their remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that request is not in order in the committee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Then I ask leave to revise and extend my own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I would like a verification of the fact that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto is now closed. My recollection is that the gentleman from Iowa asked that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] be closed in one hour. That is my recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Chair is very clear that the question was put as follows: "The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of one hour." And that was provided as stated.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, a few days ago I introduced a resolution, House resolution 543, bearing upon the section that is now before this body—the question of cost-plus contracts. It is in relation to the contract for repairs on the Leviathan. The Leviathan, as is known by many members of this committee, is a ship over 970 feet long, and drawing 37.9 feet of water. There is not a harbor in the country with a dock large enough to take this ship in to repair except the dock that is now owned by the United States Government in Boston Harbor. Yet the specifications that were sent out for the repair of this ship are now in the hands of the corporation known as the International Mercantile Marine, and if you want a set of specifications in order to bid upon the reconditioning of this ship you are obliged to go to the office of this corporation in New York.

[Senate hearings, S. J. Res. 155, p. 91.]

At least some of the members of the United States Shipping Board are known to have urged the acceptance of this offer. We are informed that the International Mercantile Marine was so confident last week that its offer would be accepted, at least for the Leviathan, that some of its employees were sent to the ship, now in this port, to make arrangements for taking her over.

The chairman of the board of the International Mercantile Marine Co. is Harold A. Sanderson, a British subject, resident of London. The president is P. A. S. Franklin, a citizen of New York. The finance committee includes Mr. Sanderson, of London; J. P. Morgan; Charles Steel (Mr. Morgan's partner); and Mr. E. C. Grenfell (Mr. Morgan's London partner), another British subject and resident of London.

The net profits of the International Mercantile Marine (after paying British excess war profits, which one year amounted to more than $80,000,000), have averaged in the past five years about $22,000,000, the lowest being $15,000,000 and the highest $33,000,000 in any year.

The most valuable asset of the International Mercantile Marine are the fine steamers of the White Star Line, every share of whose stock is deposited in the treasury of the International Mercantile Marine, the so-called American holding company; but the executive committee, in absolute control of the operations of this company, are Harold Sanderson, chairman and managing director; E. C. Grenfell (Morgan's London partner); Lord Pirrie; and Alexander Kerr, all four being British subjects. There is not an American on the board.

There you will be told whether or not you can have a set of the specifications, and unless they say so it is impossible for any shipbuilder in this country to bid on the ship. For this work the Shipping Board agree to pay $30,000 per month.

[From the New York Sun and Herald, May 7, 1920.]

NO BIG PROFITS IN "LEVIATHAN" REPAIRS.

W. F. Gibbs, chief constructor of the International Mercantile Marine Co., said yesterday that Representative TAGUE, of Massachusetts, who said in the House that certain shipyards had planned to make immense profits over the reconditioning of the Leviathan, biggest steamship afloat, evidently had been misinformed.

"Cost-plus bids," Mr. Gibbs said, "will not be entertained, notwithstanding Representative TAGUE'S reported declaration. The reconditioning of the Leviathan will be the greatest task of its kind ever attempted in this country, and because of its magnitude we, acting as agents of the United States Shipping Board, have determined to have the work done at as low a cost as possible. After a committee of the best constructing representatives of the various shipyards of the country had thoroughly inspected the ship lying at Hoboken the plans and specifications for the reconditioning were drawn up. When completed the ship will be the finest in the world, superior to what she was under the German flag, and may cost between five million and ten million dollars."

Mr. Gibbs said that among those asked to bid were the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, the New York Shipbuilding Co., the Todd Ship Yards Corporation, and the Morse Dry Dock & Repair Co.

In the hearings before the Senate committee it was brought out in the examination of Mr. Hague, head of the Division of Construction and Repair, United States Shipping Board, that what I have said of the Boston Harbor he also said, that in order to repair this ship properly it could be done at the one port in this country on the Atlantic seaboard, and that was Boston.

The CHAIRMAN. Haven't we built any dock in this country where she could dock? Are we building such a dock?

Mr. HAGUE. She could come in at Norfolk in case the channel was dredged.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean, are we building any dry docks where there is ample channel to get up so that she can be docked?

Mr. HAGUE. The dry dock at Hunters Point at San Francisco would take her, and also the dock, the new naval dock at Boston, if she could get up the channel. Those were the three docks that the Navy Department told me about.

The hearings I have quoted were held before the Senate Committee on Commerce, relative to Senate joint resolution 155. You will note that Mr. Hague states that the Commonwealth Dock at Boston could dock the Leviathan if she could be brought into the dock, but he rather deplores the fact that such could not be done. It is apparent to me that Mr. Hague has not studied the situation at Boston or he would know that we have a 40-foot channel there and can bring this vessel into the Commonwealth Dock with plenty of room in almost any tide. In addition, there are all facilities at the Commonwealth Dock for the reconditioning of the Leviathan, and it is therefore going to unheard-of limits for private interests to undertake these repairs when to do the work at any other place than Boston unnecessary extravagance will be caused by the necessary erection of workshops, machinery, and so forth, besides the recruiting of workmen, which can be avoided if the vessel is sent to Boston.

Seven concerns have been called upon to bid on the work upon this ship, and seven concerns only, and only one of the seven asked to bid on the ship has depth enough of water at its docks to accommodate it, and not one a dry dock large enough to dock this ship. It has been said in the Senate committee hearings, page 12, part 1, that the Shipping Board has asked these gentlemen to make up the specifications for the repairs on this ship.

Senator CHAMBERLAIN. How much did you say it would cost to recondition that ship?

Mr. FERGUSON. Judge Payne said $7,500,000. We did not bid on it ourselves, for the reason that we could not get her into our harbor. We, however, assisted, as these other shipbuilders should, in preparing plans and specifications for reconditioning and fitting her as an oil burner. We have all joined together, and I think at least five of those shipyards loaned technical engineers and experts for the purpose of making these plans and specifications for reconditioning. It is a tremendous job, almost as big a job as designing and planning and building a ship in the first place.

In other words, they make up their own specifications, and then they make their own bids and figures, and no one outside of that little coterie is able to figure, and even though he did he would be unable to compete with these seven corporations that have drawn up the specifications. In other words, they would be working in the dark.

Now, the Government has purchased the big dock in Boston Harbor. We appropriated a large amount of money for the great shops and machinery at that dock, and in order to repair the Leviathan it must be sent to Boston for repair; and if she is going to Boston for repair, under the specifications drawn for the Shipping Board, or rather by the International Mercantile Marine, you are going to repair this ship in a dock owned by the United States Government and pay private capital for doing it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Who is responsible for this?

Mr. TAGUE. I suppose the Shipping Board.

Mr. BLANTON. Did not the gentleman just vote to put about $150,000,000 more into their hands?

Mr. TAGUE. I shall vote to give them any amount of money they want and to see that it is judiciously expended; and that is what I am trying to do here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TAGUE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There will be no more unanimous consents granted on this side if that is going to be your procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two gentlemen are present, a quorum. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAGUE. Now, Mr. Chairman, my objection to this kind of work is the fact that the Government can do this work in its own yard and save the Government almost $2,000,000 in the performance of the work. This work under the present arrangements is to be done at a price that is to be set by the men drawing the specifications, with no competition whatsoever.

Now, further than that, there were hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of material taken out of the Leviathan when she was made into a transport, and these fittings are supposed to be stored somewhere in Hoboken. No one knows whether they are to be used over again. No one can tell just where those fittings are; but still they are the fittings which came out of the ship. They were good coming out; they are in good condition now; and they should be put back into the ship. But the specifications, so far as I know, do not call for that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman realize that he is framing a pretty serious indictment of the Shipping Board; that he is reviving here the scandals that are going about as to the way in which contracts for repairs are being made?

Mr. TAGUE. I would say to the gentleman that I am just stating what was told before the Senate Committee on Commerce by Mr. Hague, who said that the Shipping Board had selected experts from certain corporations to draw the specifications, and that he expected three bids.

Mr. MONDELL. The same corporations that were to do the work?

Mr. TAGUE. The same corporations that are now bidding on the work, so I understand, loaned their experts to prepare the specifications.

Mr. MONDELL. And while the material that would be needed is available, Uncle Sam is supposed to buy new material and allow that other material to be junked?

Mr. TAGUE. I have not stated that; but I said there is no mention as to whether these fittings are to be used or not.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the usual practice, I presume, of the Shipping Board on matters of that kind.

Mr. TAGUE. I am not an expert on that. What I am speaking for is to have this work done where it should properly be done and where the Government would save money. We have a splendidly equipped yard in Boston—the navy yard—and the Government has spent millions of dollars in equipping it to do this kind of work. The work on this ship is to be paid for by the Government. The repairs must of necessity be made in a Government yard and in a Government dock.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. Does it require legislation to enable the board in charge to take this ship to Boston and repair it there?

Mr. TAGUE. No; they have complete authority over the ship.

Mr. JUUL. Then, if they have complete authority over the ship, all that is necessary is for the Shipping Board to act.

Mr. TAGUE. I have asked a committee of this House to investigate it, and have presented a resolution to that end, and the resolution is now pending before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. By the action taken by the committee to-day in reducing authorizations and restricting the appropriation, if that is to be the action and judgment of Congress, there will be no money to expend on that vessel in that way unless it is expended by some private purchaser or some one who may lease the Leviathan and recondition her. Whatever is expended in reconditioning this and other of the ex-German ships should be expended by the purchasers.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I do not care whether the money is expended or not. I believe it should be expended, and that the ship should be put in condition for sale if it is to be sold.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. BROWNE. Is it not a fact that the dry dock at Norfolk could do this work that you claim could be done only in Boston?

Mr. TAGUE. No.

Mr. BROWNE. It is the largest dry dock in the world.

Mr. TAGUE. I know they have less than 35 feet of water there, and this vessel draws over 37 feet. Boston has a 40-foot channel, so that it is the only port on this coast that could dock her, and it has the only dock that could do the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to digress for just one minute to call the attention of the Members present to one of the most distinguished living soldiers of the Civil War, who is now in the gallery. I refer to ex-Gov. William H. Upham, of Wisconsin. [Applause, the Members rising.]

I want to say this, that Gov. Upham, in April, 1861, when a boy of 19 years of age, enlisted in the Union Army. He was wounded at the Battle of Bull Run and was left on the battle field as dead, and funeral services were held in his memory by the people in his own town and vicinity, they thinking he was dead. He was taken by the enemy to Libby Prison, where he was confined for seven months. At the end of that period he was exchanged and came to the city of Washington, where he called upon Senator James Doolittle, of Wisconsin, whom he accompanied to the White House, where he was introduced to President Abraham Lincoln. President Lincoln talked with young Upham and said that he was going to send him to school, and thereupon appointed him to the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he was graduated in 1866. He served in the United States Army after graduation until 1869, and then resigned and retired to private life. Maj. Upham then went up into northern Wisconsin, which was at that time a wilderness, locating at Marshfield, where he built up a large and extensive business, which is in existence to-day. He never asked for office, but the people of Wisconsin, in 1894, elected him governor of the State of Wisconsin, in which capacity he served with honor to himself and the State of Wisconsin.

While stationed at Fortress Monroe, Va., soon after the close of the Civil War, he had the pleasure of meeting the Confederate President, Jefferson Davis, while Davis was a prisoner of the United States, and was the officer who had the custody of President Davis. To-day he is over 79 years of age, hale and hearty, and I am proud of the opportunity of introducing my distinguished constituent, William H. Upham, to the Members of the House of Representatives. We call him "the Grand Old Man of Wisconsin." [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I think it is a beautiful commentary on our present American fellowship to see both sides of the House, Republicans and Democrats, northerners and southerners, rise to do honor to this brave man, Gov. Upham, of Wisconsin, who refused to die on the battle field and lived for the good of his country.

But I rise to call attention to persons not in the gallery but in some of the operating offices of the Federal prisons of this country—to some of the civil soldiers of the present war against high prices and the daily problem of comfortable living.

They are the clerks in these Federal prisons whose salaries were not raised last fall when we raised the salaries of the guards; and because I must leave in a few moments to keep an engagement that I made a year ago to deliver a patriotic address I simply want to register my conviction that when the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] offers his amendment to raise their salaries from $75 a month to $100 a month I believe every friend of these faithful, hard-working servants of the Government will vote for that amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want my distinguished friend from Georgia at the same time to remember the thousands of patriotic farmers down in the goober-grabbling State who are now staggering under a load of taxation which they can hardly bear. [Applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. And I will take my place beside those farmers and help them to see the point, and they will applaud my efforts to help these clerks who are taking care of these Federal prisons and doing the necessary work for the safety of this country, and who are working for the same salaries that they got several years ago, when these farmers were getting for their cotton and others for their food products all over the land about one-third of what they are getting now.

Mr. BLANTON. And when the gentleman was wearing his overalls. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. UPSHAW. Yes; and I want to say to the gentleman concerning the overalls, inasmuch as he has introduced an irrelevant matter, that when I spoke here the other day with overalls on I mentioned both overalls and old-clothes clubs, and every day since then I have worn either overalls or old clothes on the floor of this House and in my office, and sometimes in speaking to public audiences. And I have been assured by a newspaper man who has watched the trend of things, that the thought of the Nation was arrested by it, and much practical good has come. Not only has John Wanamaker since that time made a sweeping reduction of 20 per cent in the necessities of life, but shoes in another city have been reduced about 33⅓ per cent, and the papers every day tell that there has been a general reduction and a lessening of the burdens on the struggling masses of this country.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman got a first-page notice in every newspaper in the land.

Mr. UPSHAW. I decline to yield further. Any man who has sense enough to get out of a shower of rain knows that I put on that suit of overalls, along with thousands of others, purely in a spirit of rollicking fun, and yet with a very definite purpose to shake my fist at the high cost of living and the wild delirium of extravagance. If somebody complains that the price of the workingman's necessary apparel was raised by the experiment, I answer that the slight rise there is far more than offset by the greater reduction in things that cost a great deal more. I stand squarely by my purpose to express my fellowship for the man who, unsung and uncrowned, does the world's manual labor every day. And I stand without apology, with many of my congressional colleagues, in a purpose to wear old clothes the whole summer and thus set a wholesome example in sane economy for the whole country.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. I decline to yield—I must catch my train in a few minutes.

Mr. JUUL. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UPSHAW. I decline to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that a delegation be sent down to hold the train. [Laughter.]

Mr. UPSHAW. All right. If they do I want to say this, that these men who are working now, in these times of unspeakably high prices, for the same salaries that they got five years ago will meet me at the train when I get to Atlanta and thank me for being a friend of the men in overalls. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. Not just now; and I want to say that neither the gentleman from Texas nor the gentleman from Massachusetts nor any other man on the floor of this House ought to be content to go to the office of the Sergeant at Arms and draw $625 for his month's services if he is unwilling to vote for this amendment that raises the salaries of these hard-working Government clerks from $75 to $100 a month. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Museum, $415,120.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

As all the Members know, while the war was on the publications of the Bureau of Ethnology have been limited, and in some cases completely stopped. I am wondering if this appropriation provides for the continued publication of those reports. As one who is somewhat interested in that subject I know that those reports are splendid documents, and there is a great demand for them by those who appreciate their value and know of them; and while I realize the shortage of paper and the desire to economize, I am wondering whether or not, in the interest of education and of the general desire for knowledge on this subject, the bureau will continue to print these publications, which were suspended on account of the war. And I am asking if these publications are provided for out of this appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. These publications are not provided for out of this appropriation. They are paid for out of the appropriations for printing and binding, which are carried further on in the bill, on page 171, where an amount is carried which is thought to be sufficient to continue them. The committee believe, as the gentleman has expressed, that these publications are of great value, and they have carried an appropriation sufficient for their continuance.

Mr. HICKS. And they will be continued from now on?

Mr. GOOD. There is no question about that.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md.: For the construction of a steel hangar to accommodate one United States Navy type "C-2" airship, $125,000.

Mr. HICKS. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question in regard to this item. Coming, as I see it does, under the head of armories and arsenals, I presume, of course, it is for the use of the Army. I am wondering what is the special need of putting that in this bill, because I thought that the Army bill provided for all aviation for the Army.

Mr. GOOD. Not for proving grounds or arsenals or armories. The sundry civil bill carries the appropriations for such purposes.

Mr. HICKS. I understand that; but just why do we need a great hangar out there for a naval type of airship to cost $125,000, in addition to what both the Army and Navy already have?

Mr. GOOD. This is now practically the ordnance proving ground of the Army. It is a great proving ground, and they have there an airship, but they have no hangar. What they are trying to develop now is bombing sites. They can not develop a bombing site unless they use the airship itself and the bomb in the experiments, and they have no hangar for the ship that is there. The gentleman must remember that for a ship of this kind, designed to carry a bomb weighing about 4,000 pounds, it means a pretty large ship, and will require something of a structure to house it.

Mr. HICKS. I am not surprised at the largeness of the amount. I am surprised at the smallness of it; but my query was why we needed it at all, because I supposed all that experimental work would be carried on by the air division of the Army.

Mr. GOOD. Not this work, and at the same time they are working there to develop this new site. The committee had no desire to put in an item of this kind, but it was very forcefully presented to the committee and urgently requested, and inasmuch as we have the airship and have no hangar, it did seem to the committee that we ought to make some provision for the preservation of the little we have in the way of airships and airplanes.

Mr. HICKS. I will say to the gentleman that I am greatly in favor of the experimental work for aviation. I do not regard the sum spent for development wasted, because I believe there is where the real service can be had. The reason I said $125,000 was a small sum for a hangar is because they are constructing a very large one at Lakehurst which will cost many times that.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My profession alone, if there were no other intelligent reason, would lead me to an ardent advocacy of a Public Health Service. There are few greater problems for a civilized people to solve than that of its public health. It comprehends the conservation not only of the public happiness, but of public energy, of public activity, and of every form of production. There is no argument against the supreme desirability involved in such a problem. But I am afraid the Public Health Service as now constituted and administered is more of a soft berth than of a public benefit. Even the slight investigation I have made reveals 2,300 physicians on the pay rolls of this service at an annual salary of $2,000, amounting to $4,600,000 per year. This does not include, as I understand it, the salaries of certain superiors and many subordinates, as well as all the other expenses of this service. In addition, I also understand that the expenses of the Public Health Service do not include any of the moneys appropriated for medical and surgical purposes in the Army, in the Navy, or in the Quarantine Service. I find also that the Public Health Service has a large number of other physicians who are designated as national public health physicians, located in our cities and towns and engaged in private practice, but who receive a compensation only for individual and sporadic services, receiving no fixed salary. My judgment is, Mr. Chairman, that this department of the Government is essentially wrong as it is now conceived and extravagantly wrong in its administration. I am of the opinion that the whole question of the Public Health Service should be carefully inquired into at the very earliest moment with a view of making such a service an efficient factor in our civilization and a certain blessing to all the people. If such an investigation is made I would not take the opinions of those engaged in the Public Health Service itself. My limited observation of governmental matters leads me to the conclusion that Government employees are generallly and naturally prejudiced witnesses. I would embrace in the scope of such an inquiry the medical scientists of the country, whose opinions would have quite as much scientific weight and less personal consideration. My belief is that a large part of these employees now upon the pay roll of the Public Health Service should be dismissed, the service contracted as now conducted, and in place of the present activities a real scientific agency created that will secure real and inexpressible benefits to the whole people. I find on page 30 of this bill the following:

Biologic products: To regulate the propagation and sale of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products, and for the preparation of curative and diagnostic biologic products, including personal service, $35,000.

What a pitiful sum—$35,000—to be expended in what seems to be biologic work, including personal service! What we need is to revolutionize this whole service. We should get rid of its padded pay rolls and establish the finest biological and bacteriological laboratories in the world by spending money enough to attract and secure the ablest and most devoted scientists who are engaged in this sort of work and allow them to devote their constant effort to the discoveries of serums, viruses, antitoxins, and any other products that will prove to be specific to the fatal diseases of man and beast. And when such discoveries are made their preparation should be left to the various laboratories in the country conducted by private enterprise, and their administration to the individual physicians, whether men or women, engaged in civil practice. If I had my way I would get rid at once of this army of peripatetic doctors rambling over the country, doing little or no good that is not already done by the local physicians and boards of health. And, moreover, I would put no limit to the salary sufficient to secure a great scientist, whether English or French, whether German or Italian, famed in biological or bacteriological work. The only prerequisites I would require would be his acknowledged attainment, his character, and, above all, his devotion to such research. You are all familiar with that unutterable blessing, the diphtheria antitoxin. The Public Health Service did not discover this boon to humanity, nor, in my judgment, could it do so in a thousand years as now constituted. Before its discovery death was the universal apprehension in every household where diphtheria revealed itself. Often whole families were nearly depleted. To-day this disease is regarded almost with indifference if the antitoxin is at hand and is used properly. There is no way of computing the human happiness this remedial agent has brought to the world, nor the vast material gain as well, by the saving of the young life of humanity. What was possible in this direction can be made possible, I believe, in pneumonia, typhoid fever, syphilis, tuberculosis, cancer, and other fatal diseases of the human family, as well as in those diseases which destroy the domestic animals with such a fearful resulting loss to the public. I have a vision—a great laboratory that shall excel the world in resulting discoveries, because we have concentrated our efforts and our wealth to this end by obtaining the devotion and the intellect regardless of cost. Money spent in this way would yield an incalculable return if only one specific remedy for one fatal disease, either of man or beast, were discovered in a century. [Applause.]

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DALLINGER: Page 48, line 3, after the figures "$17,000," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For the construction of a physical and testing laboratory, for the procurement and installation of equipment for same, including necessary alterations to existing buildings forming a part of the project, $300,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I was very much surprised and disappointed to discover when this bill was reported that the item covered by the amendment which I have offered was not included in the bill, because I thought that the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and the other members of the subcommittee had been favorably impressed at the hearings by the testimony as to the necessity of providing adequate facilities at the Watertown Arsenal for carrying on experiments with war materials in order that the lessons arising out of the Great War can be taken advantage of for the benefit of our country in the future. As I understand it, the argument against putting in this $300,000 item, which was strenuously advocated by all of the officials of the Ordnance Department, is that this laboratory had been the only laboratory at the Watertown Arsenal, and that the Government has gotten along with it up to the present time. That argument falls to the ground, in my opinion, because we never have had adequate laboratory facilities, and the experiments which, it is admitted even by the committee, are all important are to-day being made and have always been made under a great handicap. This laboratory is now in a building that was constructed during the War of 1812—over 100 years ago. It has been totally inadequate for a generation. The unnecessary expense to the Government of using this totally inadequate building has been very great and will continue to be very great. The taxpayers of the country have spent between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000 upon this arsenal at Watertown, and the plant is modern and up to date, with the exception of this laboratory and an old blacksmith shop, which is equipped with inadequate machinery. They are the only two buildings that are not up to date in this entire plant. Even admitting that we are not going to manufacture munitions of war at Watertown to any extent in the near future, it must be evident to anyone that it is of vital importance that experimental work shall be carried on there.

Mr. Chairman, it is not good business and it is not sound economy to continue to use these old buildings, that were constructed during the War of 1812. I sincerely trust that the chairman of the committee will not press his point of order and will agree that this absolutely necessary item shall go into the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I can not take that course. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for unmarked graves of Union and Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, February 3, 1879, and March 9, 1906; continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of civilians interred in post cemeteries under the acts of April 28, 1904, and June 30, 1906; and furnishing headstones for the unmarked graves of Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in national cemeteries, $100,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCKEOWN: Page 50, line 12, after the period, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for the graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war with Germany in national, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries, at navy yards and stations of the United States, where, on account of the financial condition of relatives or other circumstances, no headstones can be erected, $50,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the committee that it occurred to me that this ought to be done. This matter was called to my attention by a letter recently received from a constituent—a poor family whose son was lost in the war. They asked if there would be any markers for those boys' graves, and stated that they did not have money enough to mark their son's grave when his body was returned. This will require a very small amount, and will be needed only in those cases where, on account of poverty of the immediate family or relatives, there would be no suitable marker of the grave.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, that is taken care of in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does the gentleman think the language in the preceding paragraph will cover that?

Mr. GOOD. That is my understanding. That was the opinion of the officer who will have charge of the administration of the funds.

Mr. McKEOWN. Upon that assurance, then, I will withdraw the amendment, because I do not want to have it inserted if it is unnecessary.

Mr. GOOD. The committee made inquiry with regard to that very matter, and Col. Lemley said that the appropriation would be used not only to purchase headstones for the deceased soldiers of former wars but also for the war with Germany.

Mr. McKEOWN. If that is true, I will not compel the gentleman to make the point of order, but will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield so that I may ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Why not place the language in the text of the bill, so that it will be beyond the construction of any individual officer and show the intention of the appropriation in the written law of the land? That could be done by a very slight amendment to the section.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; by striking out, in line 3, the words "Union and Confederate."

Mr. McKEOWN. The word "Union" there is used primarily to mean those who lost their lives in the Civil War.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but under that term they are providing headstones for the graves of soldiers of the Spanish-American War and, I understand, the late war.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; under the broad language, if it is given a broad interpretation, the word "Union" would include soldiers of the Spanish-American War and also these soldiers, but it ought to be absolutely plain, as suggested by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER]. There seems to be an opinion that it does not cover it now.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have not had time to look up the hearings since the gentleman called my attention to it, but my recollection is that out of the $21,549,000 they expect to spend something for headstones in connection with the interment of soldiers of this war, but as to that I am not certain.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would the gentleman have any objection to passing this question until he can look into it further?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have not. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph, commencing with line 1 and ending with line 12, page 50, be passed over temporarily.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The paragraph and the amendment both?

Mr. GOOD. The paragraph and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the paragraph, beginning at the top of page 50 and ending with line 12, and the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma pending, shall be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4212. An act to authorize the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the waters of the Delaware River, between the city of Easton, in the State of Pennsylvania, and the city of Phillipsburg, in the State of New Jersey; and

S. 3897. An act to amend sections 16 and 26 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act. The bill simply provides a method by which the joint-stock land banks may go into voluntary liquidation.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LODGE, Mr. BORAH, and Mr. HITCHCOCK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any appropriation for national cemeteries or the repair of roadways thereto shall be expended in the maintenance of more than a single approach to any national cemetery.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word merely to ask the chairman of the committee just why that proviso was put in there, that there should be but one approach to a national cemetery? I can conceive of a situation where it might be necessary to have two approaches.

Mr. GOOD. The trouble was a practice was growing up whereby roadways were being paved and repaired over private roads leading to national cemeteries, and there were abuses. Now, it was thought one entrance was sufficient. Some of these roadways extend some distance over State roads and county roads. County and State roads were being repaired out of the appropriation, and this provision was put in to prevent that sort of thing, and it has been carried for some time in the interest of economy and efficiency.

Mr. HICKS. I merely ask for information, because it seemed a rather unusual proviso. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees: For interment, cremation (only upon request from relatives of the deceased), or of preparation and transportation to their homes or to such national cemeteries as may be designated by proper authority, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of the remains of officers, cadets, United States Military Academy, including acting assistant surgeons and enlisted men in active service, and accepted applicants for enlistment; interment, or of preparation and transportation to their homes, of the remains of civil employees of the Army in the employ of the War Department who die abroad, in Alaska, in the Canal Zone, or on Army transports, or who die while on duty in the field or at military posts within the limits of the United States; interment of military prisoners who die at military posts; for the interment and shipment to their homes of remains of enlisted men who are discharged in hospitals in the United States and continue as inmates of said hospitals to the date of their death, and for interment of prisoners of war and interned alien enemies who die at prison camps in the United States; removal of remains from abandoned posts to permanent military posts or national cemeteries, including the remains of Federal soldiers, sailors, or marines, interred in fields or abandoned private and city cemeteries; and in any case where the expenses of burial or shipment of the remains of officers or enlisted men of the Army who die on the active list are borne by individuals, where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement to such individuals may be made of the amount allowed by the Government for such services out of this sum, but no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1910; expenses of the segregation of bodies in permanent American cemeteries in France; in all, $21,549,000: Provided, That the above provisions shall be applicable in the cases of officers and enlisted men on the retired list of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while on active duty by proper assignment and also to citizens of the United States who may have died while serving in the armies of the allies associated with the American forces: Provided further, That, in addition to the foregoing sum, the unobligated balance of the appropriation "Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civil employees," for the fiscal year 1920 is made available during the fiscal year 1921 for the care and maintenance of graves of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees of the Army abroad, and for the preparation and shipment of their remains to their homes or to national cemeteries: Provided further, That there may be expended from and after the approval of this act and until June 30, 1921, from this appropriation and the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1920, a total amount not exceeding $100,000 for personal services in the Cemeterial Division, Office of the Quartermaster General, War Department, for compiling, recording, preparing, and transmitting data incident to the disposition of the remains referred to herein; this sum may be expended notwithstanding the third proviso of the paragraph entitled "Temporary employees, War Department," contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "internment," line 25, page 51, be changed to "interment." It is a typographical error. Also that the word "of," in line 1, page 52, be stricken out after the word "or," and the word "interment" be correctly spelled in line 7, and that the word "of," in line 7, after the word "or," be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the corrections be made to the text of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 25, strike out the word "internment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "interment"; page 52, line 1, strike out the word "of" after the word "or"; page 52, line 7, strike out the word "internment" and insert in lieu thereof the word "interment"; page 52, line 7, after the word "or" strike out the word "of."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I also ask to return to page 43, line 22, for the purpose of correcting the spelling of the word "fiscal" in that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 43, line 22, correct the spelling of the word "fiscal."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, line 24, after the word "exceeding" strike out "$100,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may have the listening ear of the members of the Committee on Appropriations and the attention of the members of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. On page 53, I seek to amend, in line 24, by striking out "$100,000" and substituting "$500,000." This relates to the provision in the bill which takes care of the soldier dead and also some civilians in different sections of the world. The largest part of it relates to the care of the soldier dead buried in France and the return to this country of their remains. Every Member of this House is familiar with the fact that by reason of the World War there are now buried abroad over 75,000 soldiers in France. It had been expected that they would be returned to this country, wherever the relatives of the dead have requested it, and at an earlier period than now, but there was some objection on the part of the French Government. That objection has been removed. There has been an absolute agreement on the part of the authorities of the French Government and the authorities of this country—the Secretary of War and the Secretary of State. There is no longer any controversy.

The work is now going on. The only delay is the question of time. Permission has been given and the work has been going on with reference to all the dead except where they are within the war zone. The time has been postponed for going into the war zone to the 15th of September. The estimate made by the War Department carried in this bill—and I hope I may have the attention of every member of the committee—the estimate carried in this bill in the aggregate is $30,000,000 for all the purposes mentioned in the two pages or more covering all the items and all of the expense. There is now no controversy about it. At one time it looked as if no part of this appropriation could be made available for the work of the personnel here in the District of Columbia because of a provision in the legislative bill, and an amendment was inserted in this bill to meet that provision so that a part of the $30,000,000 in the aggregate could be used to pay the personnel here in the District of Columbia. But in the final analysis the Committee on Appropriations limited that expenditure to $100,000. This work abroad can not be done unless the force here is paid. There is no use having in this appropriation bill $30,000,000 or more provided for this great service if you do not permit it to be expended, and a sufficient amount to be expended, to do this work here; $100,000 is $1 for every $300 of the entire amount. The department states that that would only last for about three months.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I yield.
Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. How much did the War Department ask?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I was going to get to that in one moment, if the gentleman will pardon me. This bill provides for a period of about 13½ months, from now until the 1st of July, 1921. The $8,000,000 and over of this fiscal year is made available for the fiscal year ending the 30th day of June, 1921. The War Department has said that it will take approximately $100,000 for each three months, or approximately $500,000 for the entire period to July, 1921, nearly 14 months, and that if it is limited to $100,000 then the work will stop, because the offices here will have to close or the force be cut down and the work delayed. It is true that it is possible that they might move their offices to some other town under the technical authority of law, but it would be an additional expense, and it would be a delay, and it would be a loss of a portion of those employed in this work here who could not follow the service.

I want to call your attention to a statement made in a letter by the Secretary of War:

I have already called to the attention of Congress one matter which should be corrected, in view of the probable disruption of this project as the result of a clause in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1921. This bill prohibits the payment of civilian personnel in the bureaus or offices of the War Department in the District of Columbia, with certain exceptions. It is noted that part of the Quartermaster Corps, known as the graves registration service, which is supervising the disposition of the remains of soldiers buried overseas because the necessary data for field operations could not be turned out by the central office, upon which the field force in France is dependent for its official and revised information, I have suggested that a certain amendment may be made to the sundry civil bill whereby this particular feature of work may be excepted from prohibition against the use of civilian employees in the District of Columbia, so that the work may normally progress and the department may be relieved from the possibility of a great public clamor, in case the progress of that work is unnecessarily interrupted. This is one of the most pressing difficulties by which the project is menaced at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman if he can not get through in five minutes?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I will try to do so. There are so many who do not understand this that I want to read what the Secretary of War says.

Mr. GOOD. I do not want to object, but we have read only 10 pages of the bill to-day, and I hope the gentleman can get through in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I was going to read what the Secretary said, but I will omit that in order to get on further.

To be more specific, I will read and insert a fuller statement:

1. Your attention is invited to the proviso in the sundry civil bill (H. R. 13870), introduced April 30, 1920, lines 20 to 26, inclusive, page 53, and lines 1 to 6, inclusive, on page 54. This proviso contains a new provision, which is intended to authorize payment of civilian force in the cemeterial division of this office from funds appropriated for bringing home remains of our soldier dead, but it limits the amount to $100,000. The cemeterial division is the activity of this office heretofore generally known to the public and spoken of as the "graves registration service."

2. One hundred thousand dollars is not sufficient for clerical hire necessary in the District of Columbia in connection with the clerical work incident to returning American military dead from present burial places in Europe. The authorized clerical strength of the cemeterial division, this office, is 285, and the monthly pay roll amounts to $32,384.32. In view of the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which the proviso referred to above was designed to offset, the authorization for clerical hire in the District of Columbia to be paid from the total of $21,549,000 estimated for under the appropriation for "disposition of remains," etc., should cover the last three months of the current fiscal year and the entire fiscal year 1921, which would make a total of 15 months, with a possible expenditure of $485,764.80. Funds for the payment of clerical hire are included in the total of the estimate as submitted. If, therefore, a limit to the amount to be used for clerical hire in the District of Columbia is to be incorporated in the law, it should be "not to exceed $500,000."

3. It should, however, be made clear to Congress that this is not a request for additional funds, but a request that suitable authority be granted by legislative enactment to permit the use of funds in the District of Columbia, that have already been estimated for and are about to be appropriated, for the disposition of the remains of our soldier dead, and for the care of their foreign burial places, the use of which funds for clerical hire in the District of Columbia will be expressly forbidden in the legislative, executive, and judicial act, but is desired to be authorized in the sundry civil appropriation act.

4. It is deemed absolutely essential to the efficient prosecution of this work of returning the remains of American soldier dead that the organization of the cemeterial division of the office of the Quartermaster General be not disturbed or broken up because of failure to grant suitable authority for its maintenance. The increased clerical expenses of the cemeterial division were included in the estimate for $21,549,000 submitted in connection with the appropriations for the "disposition of remains," etc., of our soldier dead and were not and have not been included in the estimates for the operations of the Quartermaster General of the Army or any other War Department activity. If a sufficient sum is not authorized for this continuance of the cemeterial division in the office of the Quartermaster General, it will become necessary to transfer this organization to some other city, with a view of avoiding the prohibition against the pay of its clerical force in the District of Columbia. This will mean an interruption in the supply of necessary data to our field forces abroad and a consequent serious delay in their operations, the loss of a very considerable number of the trained clerks now engaged in this work, the expense of the move, and the additional and unnecessary rental of office space, which is not available in the office of the Quartermaster General. All the foregoing would be an additional and unnecessary expense to the taxpayers.

5. It should be especially borne in mind that the prosecution of the work in Europe is absolutely dependent upon the supply of data from the records here in the United States, and that any delay in the supply of such data will increase the total cost of the work through idle time on the part of the working forces abroad or through inability to proceed with the work in accordance with plans made for its early completion.

6. It should also be borne in mind that the relatives in this country who desire the return of their dead are very insistent that this object be accomplished with the least possible delay, and will undoubtedly become clamorous should any delay occur through the lack of sufficient appropriation to prosecute the work. They are already very impatient at the delay caused by the unavoidable obstacles of distance, lack of transportation, and difficulty in securing and forwarding caskets and other supplies.

The work of this board here is an immense one. When the pay stops the work stops, and the force is discharged or reduced and delay follows. There is no use of making available this large amount already agreed on for all the estimated expense if the personnel conducting the work is to be discharged. Now, will you do that which will stop the work and prevent this large amount of money from being made available? Mark you, it does not add $1 to the amount of this appropriation, but it permits that amount to be used for personnel here in the District of Columbia which is absolutely necessary in order to carry on this work. Mark you further, it is stated that this Congress is liable to adjourn within 30 days. If it does, and you should not meet here until next December, or if you should meet at an earlier date, even, then there being no authority of law, it being forbidden to use any amount of this money, the work stops. Is there a Member of this House, after there has been an absolute agreement between the authorities over yonder and here, who believes that this great work should stop because of a prohibition in this bill?

I do not believe that this matter was thoroughly viewed from every standpoint by every member of the Appropriations Committee. I do not believe that they want to postpone the time in which this work shall be completed. It is the hope and desire of everyone in this country that the work shall be expedited and that the anxiety of those interested be not continued. If it were an increased appropriation it might be difficult, but it is only setting aside a necessary part for absolutely necessary work to be done through the personnel here. The commendable desire on the part of the chairman of this committee for economy we all appreciate, but when you understand that it does not add a single dollar but that it permits the War Department to use a sufficient amount of this fund in order to carry on this work——

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask what inquiry the gentleman has made to ascertain that this number of clerks is absolutely required?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I can say this, that the Committee on Appropriations has relied entirely upon the War Department in the estimate necessary to bring back not only the dead but to care for those who are over there, and to care for and remove the dead in over a thousand cemeteries scattered through France and England and Germany, and other parts of the world. I know nothing except what the War Department says, and the reliance on the part of this House on its estimate. I read the statement that 256 employees in this department here in Washington are engaged in this great work, and the monthly expenditure is $32,000 and more per month.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Is it not probable that when the work reaches its fullest development a larger number of employees will be necessary and expenses will be greater?

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. In all probability; and I understand they are gathering the employees in order to hasten the work going on over yonder. It is said that it is necessary in this work to not only search the data brought from Europe by the graves registration service, but also the answers received by the office of The Adjutant General in response to the questions sent therefrom. But data must also be obtained, through correspondence or personal inquiry from The Adjutant General's office, from the records abroad. I quote from data furnished me:

I am inclosing you herewith data in explanation of the need of the cemeterial division (graves registration service, Q. M. G.) for an authorization of approximately $500,000 under the appropriation, "disposition of remains," etc., sundry civil bill, for "the pay of the clerical force in the District of Columbia necessary to compile, record, prepare, and transmit data incident to the remains of the American military dead from European burial places."

It is necessary in this work to not only search the data brought from Europe by the graves registration service but also the answers received by the office of The Adjutant General in response to the questionnaires sent therefrom. Much data must also be obtained through correspondence or personal inquiry from The Adjutant General's office from records brought from Europe by the central records office, A. E. F.; the Surgeon General's office; the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; etc. Besides this, there is a constant stream of inquiries from relatives, friends, Members of Congress, officers, Federal and State officials, and others interested in individual cases or this work in general, which must be answered.

Another point, which is perhaps of minor consideration, is the position in which the United States Government would be placed if, after obtaining through very firm diplomatic pressure on the French Government entire exception from the prohibition against the removal of remains of military dead, Congress should by an inadequate provision for clerical force paralyze the work at this end and thereby compel its cessation in Europe.

It is absolutely necessary to have a force sufficient to attend to all of these details in order to prevent mistakes being made in the identification, and for the sending daily of thousands of letters here and there and receiving the necessary information. The only way in which we can do it is to get the information, and I rely absolutely on the estimates as furnished by the department. I sincerely hope, inasmuch as it adds not one dollar additional to the entire amount, that it may meet the kindly judgment of those who have charge of this bill, and that they will consent to amounts sufficient to cover the entire 15 months, and that "not exceeding $100,000" be changed to "not exceeding $500,000."

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in the Committee of the Whole on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend the remarks which he has made in the committee on this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not think there is anyone here who has any knowledge as to the efforts made for the bringing back of our soldier dead that will say that I have any other motives in the remarks I shall make except those that are goodly. I introduced the first resolution looking to the bringing back of our soldier dead, asking that the Government of the United States make some arrangement with the French Government whereby their old laws forbidding the exhumation and removal of bodies might be modified. And I have been following it up and doing all I could toward the bringing about of this desirable end. But I want to impress upon the committee that this is another attempt of the War Department to keep up this army of useless employees in the District of Columbia. Ever since the passage of the legislative bill, whereby we sought to retrench and cut down expenditures by releasing from the pay roll a great many of these unnecessary clerks they have been resorting to every possible means to circumvent the action of that committee and the action of this House in adopting it, in order to keep up their rolls, and that is what they are here trying to do. They are even using the sacred name of our heroic dead to keep up the pay roll in the city of Washington. I think I can demonstrate how useless it would be to have this additional authorization made. They have 256 clerks now in the cemeterial division of the Quartermaster Corps.

They have no use for one-half of that number at present. They could get along perfectly well with this number and do every bit of the work that would be required of them when these bodies begin to come back from across the sea.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Are these people employed in the city of Washington, all of these 256?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; all of the 256 are employed in the city of Washington; and it is intended that these additional people shall be employed also in the city of Washington. It is for the clerical force in the city of Washington. They have 256 clerks there now, and one-fourth of them could do all the work that is required of them.

Now, suppose we agreed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], for whom I have the greatest sympathy and compassion? What does it mean? It means the addition down in that department, now overcrowded with useless help, of 416 more clerks. What will they do with them? What will they have to do? The gentleman has already stated, from the interviews and correspondence that he has had with the War Department, that the only purpose of these clerks is to take care of the correspondence made necessary by the bringing back of these bodies. If you allow them the $100,000 provided for in this bill, this sum will provide for 80 additional clerks, and I think 80 clerks would be sufficient to do all the correspondence that will be necessary.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has the gentleman any information as to how rapidly they can be returned—as to the availability of the shipping?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That will depend entirely on the number of ships that are available. But there will be not more than 200 or 300 bodies coming back at a time.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has any estimate been furnished to the committee as to the amount of shipping that will be available to cover this number?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have heard of none, although I have made some inquiry in that respect. That is entirely problematical. It will depend on how many ships they will be able to get and when they can get them. But at most only 250 or 300 of these bodies can be returned at one time. Imagine a force of 416 clerks, and 256 clerks in addition, taking care of the correspondence made necessary and imperative by reason of the bringing back of 250 or 300 bodies at one time! There is nobody here who wants in the least to interfere with bringing these bodies back; but I say this proposal is a mere subterfuge and an imposition on this Congress, an attempt—not the first one they have made, because they have made two or three heretofore—to retain and to increase the present clerk roll in the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If I felt that they needed an additional clerk for the object in view, I would be the last man to keep them from getting him.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. I am sure we all have in mind the purpose that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] has, and that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has, but I understand at present about $32,000 a month is being expended in clerical assistance there. Whether it is necessary or not, I do not know. At that rate, $32,000 a month, $100,000 would permit this service to continue only about three months, after which time, unless some other provision is made, the work will have to stop. Is that true?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is not true. The clerical work for the 256 that they have down there now will go on. We have made provision for this. This is in addition. In my opinion they could get along without a single additional clerk. They do not need them for this purpose, and that is not the reason why they are trying to get them, and that is not the purpose for which they are trying to get them.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Recently we had an estimate submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs to the effect that they could compile all the records and make complete reports concerning the 500,000 men engaged in the Navy during the war for $300,000. That would embrace machines and all that kind of thing.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes. We gave the Navy Department in our legislative, executive, and judicial bill every cent they asked for for this service, but notwithstanding that fact, I am informed that another body has added $300,000 for this very purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I will ask to have the gentleman's time extended in order that I may get from him his views.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague [Mr. OLIVER] is entirely right. The first estimate they made was for $750,000, to make up the records of the sailors of the Navy in this war. We declined to make an appropriation of $750,000. Then a young man appeared, the chief of a division which has these records, and he said that for less than $300,000 he would make up these records within 11 months. We were disposed to think that that was quite reasonable. Now, I discover that the Committee on Appropriations has in the legislative bill furnished sufficient money to enable them to do this work.

I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana that if I should be on the conference committee and that item appears before me, before agreeing to it I will see to it that no more than the amount that is written in the bill shall be allowed for this purpose. I do not want any more duplication. I understand the gentleman was going to speak to me about it. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that all the hearings bearing on this subject be investigated as to what has been allowed or should be allowed for this purpose.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. But the legislative bill prohibits any of it, and this bill only authorizes $100,000 of this amount.

Mr. BUTLER. I am referring to the item in the naval appropriation bill. An amendment has been added by the Senate, to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] referred a moment ago and as to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] replied.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. How much was that?

Mr. BUTLER. Three hundred thousand dollars is the Senate amendment. In view of the fact that $750,000 was asked for the same work, we considered that that $300,000 was quite reasonable; but the amendment has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] that it is my purpose to do everything in my power to help in bringing back the remains of these boys, which ought to have been brought back long ago; but I assume that the gentleman from Missouri will be opposed to the Quartermaster Corps or any other division of the Army taking advantage of this sacred subject for the purpose of keeping up their pay roll and adding to it after appropriation for such purpose has been denied them by other legislation.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Upon what facts or evidence does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I make it on the basis of the evidence produced at the hearings that were had not only in the consideration of this bill, but before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having to do with the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Now, then, can you imagine, as a common-sense business man, the necessity for 416 additional clerks for the purpose of attending to the correspondence necessary and incident to the bringing back the remains of these soldier dead?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield further, I understand that the amount that is appropriated in the present bill, $100,000, will cover the operations as the personnel is now constituted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That has not anything to do with it. They have a personnel of 256 down there now that is provided for in other legislation.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. What bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill appropriates $3,000,000 for additional clerk hire in the War Department. Out of this sum ample provision can be made for all the clerks necessary to do this work, in my opinion, without the authorization of a single additional dollar, but we are allowing them $100,000 more by this measure. Certainly with this increase they can get along if they so desire.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What is the reason for providing in this bill $100,000 additional for these clerks that had already been taken care of in another bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am free to say to the gentleman that I was opposed to authorizing a dollar additional; but in obedience to the majority rule the committee thought it was better that we give them an additional $100,000, so that they might not have even an excuse. With the appropriations that have been authorized they can employ 80 additional clerks, which will be more than sufficient. Let us save as much of this money as we can for the purpose of bringing back our soldier dead and waste as little as possible of it in useless clerk hire.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with all that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has said with reference to doing away with useless and unnecessary employees in the War Department, and, in fact, in every department of the Government, and I want to take this occasion to say that the subcommittee of which the gentleman from Indiana was chairman rendered a very great service in the reduction of estimates that were submitted for employees in the departments, and I was very glad to give my hearty support to the bill which was prepared under his direction.

But I am not prepared to agree with what the gentleman had to say to the effect that some one in the War Department is using the names of our soldier dead for the purpose of padding estimates and securing additional or unnecessary clerks in the War Department. I am not prepared to say that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri does not call for too much money. As a matter of fact the expenditure for this purpose in the War Department now is at the rate of about $388,611 a year. I was talking with Mr. Davis, who is connected with the Quartermaster's Department, several days ago, and I asked him particularly as to the present pay roll, and also as to how long he thought it would be necessary to maintain it at its present rate, and he told me he thought that under ordinary circumstances, possibly in October or November they would be able to reduce the number of the clerks, but that it would be impossible, if Congress and the people of this country expected prompt action in bringing back the remains of the boys, to reduce the number in July.

Now, I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is mistaken in his statement that this means an additional force in the War Department for this purpose. On the contrary, the money carried in this bill will be the only appropriation that will be provided for the employment of these clerks, who are necessary to carry on the work incident to the bringing back from France of the remains of our soldier dead; and I have as authority for that statement no less a person than the Secretary of War himself. I know that the Secretary of War is interested only in securing the necessary number of clerks, and no more, for this purpose, and I want to take the liberty of reading to you just what the Secretary of War says as to the necessity of some additional force in order to provide for this very important and very essential service. Now, listen to this. He says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 30, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BYRNS: Referring to your inquiry concerning the estimated sum required from the estimate for an appropriation of $21,549,000 for the disposition of remains, for the payment of civilian personnel in the District of Columbia engaged to compile, record, prepare, and transmit data to the field force in Europe, upon which to base their operations for the return of the bodies of American soldier dead, you are advised that the present pay roll amounts to $32,384.32 per month. In view of the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which the amendment requested is desired to offset, the authorization for clerical hire, to be paid from the total estimated, as stated above, under the appropriation, "disposition of remains," should cover the three months of the current fiscal year and the entire fiscal year of 1921. This would make a total of 15 months, with a possible expenditure of $485,764.80. The inclusion of the three months of the current fiscal year is in order to provide against any question the auditor might raise as to the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill applying to disbursements prior to June 30, 1920.

If, therefore, the Committee on Appropriations should feel it their duty to limit the amount of money to be expended for clerical hire in the District of Columbia for this purpose, it might be placed at not to exceed $500,000. It should, however, be clearly understood by the committee that this is not a request for additional funds, but a request that suitable authority be granted by legislative enactment to permit the use of funds in the District of Columbia—funds that have already been appropriated or are about to be appropriated for the disposition of the remains of our soldier dead and care of their foreign burial places, the use of which funds in the District of Columbia will be expressly forbidden in the legislative, executive, and judicial act.

It is deemed absolutely essential to the efficient prosecution of this work that the organization of the cemeterial division of the Office of the Quartermaster General be not disturbed or broken up because of failure to grant suitable authority for its maintenance. The expenses of the cemeterial division were included in the estimate for $21,549,000—

The amount carried in this bill—

submitted in connection with the appropriation for the "disposition of remains," etc., of our soldier dead and were not and have not been included in the estimates for the operation of the Office of the Quartermaster General of the Army or any other War Department activity. If authority is not obtained for the continuance of the cemeterial division in the Office of the Quartermaster General, it will become necessary to transfer this organization to some other city, with a view to avoiding the prohibition against the pay of its clerical force in the District of Columbia. This will mean a serious delay in the work of our field forces abroad, the loss of a very considerable number of the trained clerks now engaged in this work, the expenses of the move, and the additional and unnecessary rental of office space and which office space is available in the Office of the Quartermaster General. All the foregoing would be an additional and unnecessary expense to the taxpayers.

It should also be borne in mind that the prosecution of the work in Europe is absolutely dependent upon the supply of data from the records here in the United States, and that any delay in the supply of such data will increase the total cost of the work through idle time on the part of the working forces abroad or through inability to proceed with the work in accordance with plans made for its early completion.

It should also be borne in mind that the relatives in this country who desire the return of their dead are very insistent that this object be accomplished with the least possible delay, and will undoubtedly become clamorous should any delay occur through the lack of sufficient appropriation to prosecute the work. They are already very impatient at the delay caused by the unavoidable obstacles of distance, lack of transportation, and difficulty in securing and forwarding caskets and other supplies.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

That letter was written to me upon my request for some information as to the necessity for these clerks.

This amendment of the gentleman from Missouri does not add one dollar to the appropriation carried in this bill. I have said elsewhere that possibly $300,000 might be all that was necessary to carry them through the next fiscal year, because the peak will have been reached in the early part of the fiscal year, and in October or November they will be in a position to release some of their clerks; but in this matter of bringing back the remains of those boys who fought for their flag and died for our country in France, I had rather appropriate ten times more than the amount needed than be in the position of not giving them enough [applause]; and for that reason, rather than run the risk of delaying even for one day the bringing back of the remains of the beloved boy of some good mother, I would give the full amount that they ask and trust to the War Department to administer the law as it ought to be administered in an economical way. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to 25 minutes, 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Can not the gentleman limit that simply to this amendment?

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not make any objection to my request. That will make a total of over an hour on this paragraph. It seems to me we must proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close at the end of 25 minutes, to be divided as stated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to indorse and to emphasize part of what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] said, to the extent of asserting that Government employees' organization propaganda is even going into the sacred precincts of the resting places of our beloved dead in France in an attempt to keep some of the 100,000 emergency war clerks still on the pay roll. I have received a letter from one of the Government clerks here protesting at the action of what is known as the employees' union in collecting from their members 50 cents a month in order to carry on legislative propaganda here before the Congress—50 cents a month from each and every one of the employees affiliated with those local unions; and he sent me various printed communications from several locals attempting to change their constitutions, increasing the amount of the monthly assessments or dues. Let me show you how active some are. In this morning's Washington Post appears an article headed "Federal Employees' Union, Local No. 2, appoints a committee to urge Congress on." Let me read excerpts from one communication sent to its members by this Federal Employees' Local No. 2, being the same Local No. 2 mentioned in the Washington Post. Let me read:

There can be no valid objection to giving the national federation 25 cents per month. It should be clearly understood that Local No. 2 and the national are not two separate organizations; they are merely different parts of the same organization. It is the national that organizes and conducts our legislative campaigns; and legislative campaigns are the means which, in the main, bring us results we are working for. The national also organizes locals all over the country (we now have 128 scattered over 41 States), and it is from these locals, in large part at least, that we obtain our power; and the help of these locals is vital in every legislative program.

The increased dues do not begin until after July 1, and then the new bonus will also be in effect. The attention of all members who are so situated that they can do little of the real work of the union is called to the fact that they are profiteering handsomely from the investment made by joining the union, for not only are they getting 313 hours of added leisure this year, but, as one member expressed it, they are also able to drop 85 cents in the slot and draw out $40 each month. What they are asked to do during the next fiscal year is to "drop 50 cents in the slot" and draw out the new bonus and also a real reclassification program.

There is no other labor union in the country paying less than 50 cents dues per month; most of the unions pay dues of $1 or more, and they get satisfactory results because they have adequate means for every campaign.

The above, Mr. Chairman, indicates the modus operandi of these unions of Government employees in forcing money from its members to use in operating on Congress. They reach us through every angle. They seek an unlimited amount of money to bring influence to bear upon us from every available point of the compass. They have the strongest, most pernicious lobby constantly maintained here ever known to the oldest inhabitants of this Capital. And we fall for them every year, month, week, day, hour, and almost every minute. They find some way to influence us, and always get what they want.

The Post says that this particular Local No. 2 has appointed committees "to urge Congress on." Fifty cents a month! The newspapers stated the other day that these Government employees now have 168 locals. Suppose every one of the Government employees here in Washington belonged to the union—100,000. That would be $50,000 a month income for a slush fund for these Government unions to use in a legislative campaign "to urge Congress on," and we are being urged on right now. We are getting these communications from the clerks. They come from our own districts sometimes in the way of letters, petitions, and telegrams. They say in the communication I read that it is the locals in our district from which they get most of their power. We are being urged on and on and on, and even driven. I want to say that the time has come when we want to do everything we can and everything that is necessary to bring the bodies of our hero soldiers back from France. I have been in favor of that ever since the armistice. I have insisted for it on the floor many times and will vote to appropriate every dollar necessary, but I am also in favor of cutting loose from the pay roll every unnecessary idle clerk put on through the civil service that is not needed, and who every day are ding-donging us in order to raise the money to keep them. We ought to cut them loose and send them home. [Applause.]

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, before I use the three minutes allotted to me I want to make a short statement. As we know, to-day is Uncle JOE CANNON'S birthday. As I came into the House Building this morning I saw a bust of ex-Speaker CANNON back in an out-of-the-way place near the majority room. I do not know who is responsible for putting it there but they ought to put it where every Member of the House can see it when he comes into the building as an inspiration. [Applause.]

I hope whoever has charge will take it and put it in a prominent place where Members can get the benefit of it.

Gentlemen, I can not agree with my friend from Indiana. I do not believe there is any man in the Quartermaster's Department, subject to the influence that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. BLANTON, talked about, who is willfully padding the pay roll to keep the men in its employ. I do not know how much money they ought to have to bring back the bodies of the boys in France, but so far as I am concerned, when I have a letter from a mother in my district asking information as to how soon the body of her son will be returned and her son will be buried in her own cemetery, I want to answer that letter, and I want enough clerks in the Quartermaster's Department so I can get the information at once without having to wait. If there is one question that this Congress has before it that ought not to be brought into the range of economy it is the question of the expenditure of money for the return of the boys whose bodies lie in France. [Applause.] I do not want extravagance, but I want sufficient clerks in the office attending to this correspondence to get up the necessary documents and enable these bodies to be returned as soon as possible. I want to register my protest against the statement of the gentleman from Indiana that there is an effort on the part of the officers of the Army in the Quartermaster's Department to pad the pay rolls and keep useless men and women at work in order to magnify their position on a sacred subject. [Applause.]

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] is to increase the amount of $100,000 to $500,000 of the third proviso, appearing on page 53:

Provided further, That there may be expended from and after the approval of this act and until June 30, 1921, from this appropriation and the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1920, a total amount not exceeding $100,000 for personal services in the Cemeterial Division, Office of the Quartermaster, War Department—and so forth, and relating to the disposition abroad and the return to and the disposition in this country of the bodies of the American boys who lost their lives in the World War. If the increase from $100,000 to $500,000 is necessary for the return of the bodies of our dead, the amendment should be adopted without objection, and the only question to determine is whether or not such increase is necessary. I believe it to be absolutely so, and without it there will be serious and long-continued delay.

I can hardly understand the declaration of men that they are in favor of bringing back the boys from France and other foreign lands to their homeland and at the same time opposing an essential and necessary allotment of money for that purpose. The propaganda referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], which prompted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, does not come from the direction indicated by him, but from the wives, the mothers, fathers, and close relatives of our boys buried in foreign lands. I venture the statement that most, if not all, Members of Congress have received letters of this character. I know of my personal knowledge that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], who offers this amendment, has for many months been most active in urging that adequate provision be made by appropriation for the return of our soldier dead, whose relatives desire their return, and for the segregation in cemeteries in France of the bodies of those whose relatives desire that they remain abroad, and that he is prompted to-day by the single purpose that this great work, which rests upon this Government as a solemn obligation, be accomplished without delay. The statement has been made during the argument upon this amendment by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] that the amendment should be defeated, because it is unnecessary to increase the amount from $100,000 to $500,000 to carry on the work of the Cemeterial Division, and I feel sure that the claim of the gentleman from Indiana, as to the facts and as stated by him, is based upon erroneous information. During his discussion of the amendment, in order that the definite reason for his opposition might be developed and assigned, the following occurred:

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] that it is my purpose to do everything in my power to help in bringing back the remains of these boys, which ought to have been brought back long ago; but I assume that the gentleman from Missouri will be opposed to the Quartermaster Corps or any other division of the Army taking advantage of this sacred subject for the purpose of keeping up their pay roll and adding to it after appropriation for such purpose has been denied them by other legislation.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Upon what facts or evidence does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I make it on the basis of the evidence produced at the hearings that were had not only in the consideration of this bill, but before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having to do with the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Now, then, can you imagine, as a common-sense business man, the necessity for 416 additional clerks for the purpose of attending to the correspondence necessary and incident to the bringing back the remains of these soldier dead?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. If the gentleman will yield further, I understand that the amount that is appropriated in the present bill, $100,000, will cover the operations as the personnel is now constituted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That has not anything to do with it. They have a personnel of 256 down there now that is provided for in other legislation.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. What bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The legislative, executive, and judicial bill appropriates $3,000,000 for additional clerk hire in the War Department. Out of this sum ample provision can be made for all the clerks necessary to do this work, in my opinion, without the authorization of a single additional dollar, but we are allowing them $100,000 more by this measure. Certainly with this increase they can get along if they so desire.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What is the reason for providing in this bill $100,000 additional for these clerks that had already been taken care of in another bill,

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am free to say to the gentleman that I was opposed to authorizing a dollar additional; but in obedience to the majority rule the committee thought it was better that we give them an additional $100,000, so that they might not have even an excuse. With the appropriations that have been authorized they can employ 80 additional clerks, which will be more than sufficient. Let us save as much of this money as we can for the purpose of bringing back our soldier dead and waste as little as possible of it in useless clerk hire.

Let the facts speak for themselves and they provide a sufficient and conclusive answer. The committee, in its report on the present bill, page 4, states:

It is estimated by the War Department that approximately 50,000 bodies will be returned to the United States at an average cost of $500, and that approximately 25,000 bodies will be segregated in permanent American cemeteries in France at an average cost of $200, making a total approximated cost for both purposes of $30,000,000. There has been previously appropriated for this purpose approximately $8,500,000 which is continued available for the next year by this bill and an additional appropriation of $21,500,000 is recommended, thus placing at the disposal of the War Department the entire estimated cost for this purpose.

And I may say, in this connection, in the estimate of the War Department of $30,000,000 there was included the expenses of the cemeterial division at the sum of $500,000. The Secretary of War, in his letter to Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, states: "The expenses of the cemeterial division were included in the estimate for $21,549,000, submitted in connection with the appropriation for the 'disposition of remains,' and so forth, of our soldier dead, and were not and have not been included in the estimates for the operation of the office of the Quartermaster General of the Army or any other War Department activity." Therefore, if the amendment is not carried, the cemeterial division will be without funds to prosecute the work, and to make wise and effective expenditure of the appropriation provided by this bill. The letter by the Secretary of War to Mr. BYRNS is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 30, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BYRNS: Referring to your inquiry concerning the estimated sum required from the estimate for an appropriation of $21,549,000 for the disposition of remains, for the payment of civilian personnel in the District of Columbia engaged to compile, record, prepare, and transmit data to the field force in Europe, upon which to base their operations for the return of the bodies of American soldier dead, you are advised that the present pay roll amounts to $32,384.32 per month. In view of the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which the amendment requested is desired to offset, the authorization for clerical hire, to be paid from the total estimated, as stated above, under the appropriation, "disposition of remains," should cover the three months of the current fiscal year and the entire fiscal year of 1921. This would make a total of 15 months, with a possible expenditure of $485,764.80. The inclusion of the three months of the current fiscal year is in order to provide against any question the auditor might raise as to the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill applying to disbursements prior to June 30, 1920.

If, therefore, the Committee on Appropriations should feel it their duty to limit the amount of money to be expended for clerical hire in the District of Columbia for this purpose, it might be placed at not to exceed $500,000. It should, however, be clearly understood by the committee that this is not a request for additional funds, but a request that suitable authority be granted by legislative enactment to permit the use of funds in the District of Columbia—funds that have already been appropriated or are about to be appropriated for the disposition of the remains of our soldier dead and care of their foreign burial places, the use of which funds in the District of Columbia will be expressly forbidden in the legislative, executive, and judicial act.

It is deemed absolutely essential to the efficient prosecution of this work that the organization of the cemeterial division of the office of the Quartermaster General be not disturbed or broken up because of failure to grant suitable authority for its maintenance. The expenses of the cemeterial division were included in the estimate for $21,549,000 submitted in connection with the appropriation for the "disposition of remains," etc., of our soldier dead and were not and have not been included in the estimates for the operation of the office of the Quartermaster General of the Army or any other War Department activity. If authority is not obtained for the continuance of the cemeterial division in the office of the Quartermaster General, it will become necessary to transfer this organization to some other city, with a view to avoiding the prohibition against the pay of its clerical force in the District of Columbia. This will mean a serious delay in the work of our field forces abroad, the loss of a very considerable number of the trained clerks now engaged in this work, the expenses of the move, and the additional and unnecessary rental of office space, and which office space is available in the office of the Quartermaster General. All the foregoing would be an additional and unnecessary expense to the taxpayers.

It should also be borne in mind that the prosecution of the work in Europe is absolutely dependent upon the supply of data from the records here in the United States, and that any delay in the supply of such data will increase the total cost of the work through idle time on the part of the working forces abroad or through inability to proceed with the work in accordance with plans made for its early completion.

It should also be borne in mind that the relatives in this country who desire the return of their dead are very insistent that this object be accomplished with the least possible delay, and will undoubtedly become clamorous should any delay occur through the lack of sufficient appropriation to prosecute the work. They are already very impatient at the delay caused by the unavoidable obstacles of distance, lack of transportation, and difficulty in securing and forwarding caskets and other supplies.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

It would seem—and most reasonably and justly so—that the letter of the Secretary of War is sufficient answer to the contention made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]; but when the further facts bearing upon this question are considered, they show conclusively that the gentleman from Indiana is mistaken in his statement. He has stated that the legislative, executive, and judicial bill provides $3,000,000 for additional clerk hire in the War Department, and "out of this some ample provision can be made for all the clerks necessary to do this work." The legislative bill referred to by the gentleman is H. R. 12610, introduced April 5, 1920, passed by the House and Senate, which appropriated $3,000,000 for the entire War Department, and the same bill, in the proviso, at the top of page 79, declared:

Provided further, That $1,850,000 of the foregoing sum shall be allotted to the office of The Adjutant General, and such portion thereof as may not be needed in that office shall not be allotted to any other office, but shall lapse and be covered into the Treasury.

It will not be contended, therefore, that any portion of the $1,850,000 could be used by the cemeterial division, and after deducting that sum from the total appropriation $1,150,000 would be left for the use of the entire War Department, and of the remainder $1,150,000 tentative allotment has been made by the Secretary of War, I learned by investigation, as follows:

Four hundred and seven thousand five hundred dollars to the Quartermaster General's office, of which one of the activities is the cemeterial branch.

Two hundred and seventeen thousand dollars to the Director of Finance.

One hundred and sixteen thousand five hundred dollars to the office of the Chief of Ordnance.

Seventy thousand dollars to the Surgeon General's office.

And the remaining $338,300 has been tentatively allotted to the office of the Secretary of War, to the office of the Chief of Staff—including Military Information Division—to the office of the Director of Purchase, Storage and Traffic, to the Inspector General's office, to the office of the Judge Advocate General, to the office of the Chief Signal Officer, to the office of the Chief of Engineers, to the Militia Bureau, to the office of the Chief of Coast Artillery, to the Chemical Warfare Service, to the Motor Transport Corps, to the office of the Director of Real Estate Service, and to the office of the Director of the Transportation Service, thus exhausting the entire amount of the appropriation. In this connection I may say that the allotment of $407,500 to the Quartermaster General's office—which is the maximum allotment, and reduction thereof may be necessitated by the imperative demands of other departments—has compelled and will immediately compel the discharge of 1,010 clerks in the Quartermaster General's office, and further reduction may interfere seriously, in fact most seriously, with the functioning of the department. I may further say that the cemeterial division, in the District of Columbia, of the Quartermaster General's office, which includes the administration branch thereof, and the graves registration service, will be unable to receive a dollar of the $407,500, not only for the reasons assigned in the letter of the Secretary of War to Mr. BYRNS, growing out of the legislative limitations, but because the total amount of $1,150,000 did not provide sufficient funds. Certainly it could not be taken out of the $407,500 allotted to the Quartermaster General for his entire department, as his department includes the general administrative division, general service division, cemeterial division, personnel division, remount service, purchase service, surplus property division, storage service, and with many subdivisions having direct charge of different activities. The cemeterial division has never received a dollar from the Quartermaster General's office, and the expenses heretofore of the cemeterial division were included in the estimate of $8,500,000 heretofore appropriated, and referred to in the report of the Committee on Appropriations, report No. 905.

The Secretary of War, in his letter of April 30, states that in his estimate of $485,764.80 he has included three months of the current fiscal year—in order to provide against any question the auditor might raise as to the provision in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill applying to disbursements prior to June 30, 1920.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is again mistaken when he states that the increase contemplated in the amendment offered is for the purpose of increasing the number of clerks in the cemeterial division, either by the number of 80 or to the force of 416, as he seemed to think. The present monthly pay roll of the cemeterial division is $32,384.32, and if that sum is multiplied by the 15 months included in the estimate by the War Department it will be found that it results in the exact sum of $485,764.80, as set forth by the Secretary of War, and the Secretary, in order to provide a safe margin to care for contingencies and increased demands upon the cemeterial division, suggests that a total amount not exceeding $500,000 be authorized for personal services in the division. Or, in other words, that the use of that sum for the purpose indicated be permitted out of the total appropriation of $30,000,000.

Impartial investigation will show conclusively that, as now organized and if the work is to be conducted efficiently, expeditiously, and accurately, the sum of $100,000 provided in the present bill under consideration will supply sufficient funds only for the period of three months, and that the failure to increase the amount to the sum of $500,000 as provided in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] will mean serious and disastrous delay in the work of segregating the American dead in cemeteries in France and in returning to this country the remains of the 52,000, as has been determined by the relatives.

The necessity for the adoption of the amendment is further disclosed and emphasized by a communication, under date May 7, 1920, from the Secretary of War to the gentleman from Missouri presenting the amendment, Mr. DICKINSON. It is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 7, 1920.

Hon. C. C. DICKINSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DICKINSON: I am in receipt of your letter of the 3d instant and desire to express my hearty appreciation of the interest taken by yourself and Mr. BYRNS in securing an amendment to the appropriation "Disposition of remains," etc., in the sundry civil bill, authorizing the payment of the necessary clerical force to properly conduct the graves registration service work in the District of Columbia. As you well understand, the maintenance of this force is essential in the compilation of data which must be furnished the overseas organization before they can proceed with their duties of disinterring and shipping the remains of our soldier dead to their homes in the United States.

It is unfortunate that the House Appropriations Committee determined to limit the amount to be expended to $100,000. The pay roll for the authorized strength of the cemeterial division in the Quartermaster General's office now amounts to $32,384.32 per month. It was estimated that any limitation placed upon the amount to be expended for clerical hire should include the last quarter of the current fiscal year for the reason that the question has arisen as to whether if immediately passed the provision of the legislative, executive, and judicial bill prohibiting payment of clerical employees from the appropriation "Disposition of remains," etc., might affect this period. The total sum, therefore, estimated as a charge against the appropriation "Disposition of remains," etc., would be the pay roll for 15 months, amounting to $485,764.80. The committee was asked, if a limitation was deemed necessary, to pass it at $500,000, in order to leave a margin of safety for possible emergency, not with the intention, however, of necessarily expending this sum for clerical hire.

The provision for clerical hire for the cemeterial division, as it now reads, considered in connection with the provision relating to pay of temporary employees in the District of Columbia, and that of No. 3679 Revised Statutes, as amended by acts of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1257), and February 27, 1906 (34 Stat., 49), will, it is considered, absolutely limit the sum that can be expended for said clerical hire to $100,000 from and after the date that pending sundry civil bill becomes a law to the end of the fiscal year 1921. This would be $100,000 for about 13½ months, or $7,407.40 per month, a reduction of $24,976.92, or approximately 75 per cent per month. The effect of so drastic a reduction in an essential feature of this activity at this time certainly needs no argument to be understood.

I sincerely trust that the limit will be increased if not by amendment on the floor of the House, then by the Senate Appropriations Committee, as it would greatly retard the work and in the end increase the expense of the project should it become necessary to remove the clerical force employed in this work out of the District of Columbia.

Again thanking you for your interest in this matter and for the important assistance you have rendered, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The letter refers to the legislative limitation which I have mentioned as limiting the sum to be expended in the cemeterial division for clerk hire to $100,000, and discloses in no uncertain terms the serious result which will be brought about, and delay the carrying on of the work of returning our soldier dead. The section of the statute referred to by the Secretary reads as follows:

For contingent expenses; how apportioned: All appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes, except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law, or for objects authorized or required by law, without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent expenditures in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriations to complete the service of the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such apportionments shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or House of Representatives, and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reason therefor shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates for any additional appropriations required on account thereof. Any person violating any provision of the section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than a month. (Sec. 3679, R. S., as amended by acts of Mar. 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1257), and Feb. 27, 1906 (34 Stat., 49).)

The proposed sum of $100,000, and as provided by the bill unless the amendment is adopted, is grossly inadequate and insufficient. It is not a time to match dollars or indulge a false idea of economy, in fulfilling and discharging the solemn obligation resting upon Congress—yes, upon the entire Nation—to return to the wives and the mothers and fathers the bodies of their dear ones, of those who so freely and heroically gave their lives.

The work of the cemeterial division is now progressing rapidly, efficiently, and, when the immense task before it is considered, economically.

As supplying some of the information and detail of the work which is now being accomplished, I desire to direct attention to a letter just received by me from the office of the Quartermaster General of the Army, and which is as follows:

Hon. WM. T. BLAND,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BLAND: Referring to your telephonic conversation with Col. Jones of our cemeterial division late Saturday afternoon.

The work of this division is progressing in a really very gratifying manner. Considering a total of 75,490 bodies to be cared for the final data on 12,855 has been completed and is ready for dispatch overseas, 8,563 has actually been dispatched, and some 26,887 are in the process of preparation.

When we stop to consider that 51,773 bodies are in the so-called zone of the armies, it will be seen that not only have we completed Great Britain and some of the other smaller countries but we are well on the way toward the completion of the zone of the interior of France and are starting on the zone of the armies. To date we have sent out some 10,392 requests to the nearest relatives for final confirmation of the shipping instructions.

The following bodies have been returned to the United States:

March	18
April	440
Waiting transport April 30	650

The return of bodies has been almost entirely dependent on the supply to our field forces overseas of caskets. To date the following caskets have been shipped overseas:

December	200
February	773
April	3,366

It is thought that the above data is sufficient to illustrate the progress that is being made in this most important work. We are just about getting into our stride. The strike recently of the railroad employees has seriously delayed, first, the delivery of completed caskets, and, secondly, and what is most important, the delivery of raw materials to the casket manufacturers. As a result, there have been delays, but which can not be attributed to this division or its field forces. We asked for the following deliveries of caskets:

March	3,000
April	4,500
May	4,625
June	5,000
July	6,000
August	7,000
Each month thereafter	7,500

The situation at present, as refers to caskets, is somewhat as follows, probable deliveries:

May and June, each	2,500
July	3,500
Thereafter, per month	5,000

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES C. PIERCE,
Colonel, United States Army, Chief Cemeterial Division.
By E. E. DAVIS,
Executive Assistant.

As the work of the cemeterial division is now thoroughly organized and under good headway, it would be disastrous indeed if the realization of the hopes of those who are anxiously and impatiently waiting for the return of their dead should be disappointed or blasted. It is unspeakable, it is unthinkable, and unbelievable that such a result should be brought about by a failure of Congress to make adequate appropriation.

The casualties numbered approximately 79,000, of which 75,490 have been accurately identified. There are in addition about 900 graves in which the remains have not yet been identified and concerning which careful investigation is being made. Of the remainder of the casualties the remains or the graves have not been located, and concerning these every source of information is being exhausted. When it is remembered that in the national cemeteries, 82 of which are in the United States and 1 in Mexico, the remains equaling 44 per cent have been unidentified, the work of the cemeterial division here and overseas is remarkable. Many of our boys fell in the dark forests of the Argonne and in the forests along the Meuse, in the battle fields extending hundreds of miles, beneath the awful din of explosives, in the craters of shell holes, and were buried beneath an avalanche of débris, midst the haste and struggle of battle, sometimes intermingled or brigaded with foreign troops, and the fact that the records of identification have been completed to the extent already obtained is evidence of the important and vitally necessary work which is being done by the cemeterial division.

The complex and intricate character of the work of segregating and identifying the American dead to remain in France and returning the dead to this country imposes a serious responsibility, demanding thoroughness and accuracy; none must be lost or identity remain unascertained where human effort can avoid it. Sometimes the work relative to the identity of even one body imposes weeks and weeks and months of inquiry and investigation. Thousands and tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of letters of investigation and relating to other matters must be written and inquiries answered, and while mistakes must occur, they must be avoided if humanly possible. The personnel of the cemeterial division must not be crippled; skilled and experienced employees must be retained, and the organization of the division must continue, but can not do so unless funds are provided.

The sum of $100,000 proposed in the bill is, under the facts, as they actually exist, patently insufficient. The $500,000 provided in the amendment offered will safeguard and continue the work of the division, and I feel as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] expressed himself, that I would prefer to appropriate too much rather than to appropriate less than is needed and thus refuse a sufficient amount. The sentiment which demands the return of the dead is one that can not be denied. I realize that considerable propaganda has been sent abroad to induce consent that the dead be left to rest in the land in which they died, but no propaganda, no logic, if it existed, no cold reasoning, if it could be made, can answer the demand of the mothers, the wives, the fathers, that their dead be returned to them; and if, by so doing, we can indulge their sentiment, if we can lessen their grief, assuage their sorrow, and can permit their loved ones to rest near them, it is our duty and our solemn obligation so to do.

Opposition has arisen here under the claim of economy, under the claim that it will afford employment to clerks. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has declared that an appropriation of $3,000,000 was made to the War Department, and that it was at least a million too much, but when the real facts are considered, as I have frankly and fairly attempted to outline them, his position is wholly untenable.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] has objected to the amendment because he claims that we are appropriating money that is earned by sweat and toil, and paid by the taxpayer, and I venture the assertion that there is not a taxpayer, with a soul and a heart, and who possesses gratitude and patriotism, who would object to this amendment, if conversant with the facts as they actually exist.

I do not believe and can not believe that the majority party will prevent the passage of this amendment. The men who support this amendment have never given a thought to the question of supplying some one with a job, except to the extent that that some one may be necessary to accomplish the purposes for which the $30,000,000 has been appropriated—return their dead to the sorrowing ones, to whom we must discharge our solemn obligation. I hope the chairman of the Appropriations Committee will withdraw his opposition to the amendment.

When the head of a great department assumes the responsibility and writes a letter, as did the Secretary of War to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], a member of the Appropriations Committee, and a former chairman thereof, and over his signature makes the statement, a serious and solemn statement, because it relates to a serious and solemn matter, I am not willing to discount that statement upon the mere declaration of any man on the floor of this House that sufficient appropriation has heretofore been made.

The truth of the matter is that the statement of the Secretary of War is fully and absolutely supported by the facts, and to deny his request and to refuse to supply sufficient funds, as will be provided by the amendment offered, is to deny to the mothers, wives, and fathers, and other close relatives, the right, when they have so elected, to have return made of the bodies of their loved ones, and at the earliest possible, practicable moment. The work should be carried on without delay. It has been delayed to an extent by the inability to secure caskets in sufficient number. The Secretary of War has declared that if necessary he would requisition ships for transport purposes.

The work of supplying final data, as has been disclosed, has been completed in South England, North England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and some of the smaller countries, and the work is nearly completed for the zone of interior France and is now being carried on for the zone of the armies.

To defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri means delay that can well be, and should be, avoided, and is the assumption of a responsibility which no man should be willing to shoulder in the face of the insistence and the prayers of those who are demanding the return of their dead.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to talk any longer. I regret that my friend and colleague from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] should have made any personal reference. It was not a pleasant matter for me. After keeping posted on the data before the Committee on Appropriations and the final action of the committee, I concluded to move this amendment. I have not the same feeling toward public officials that my friend from Indiana has. I have felt that there should not have been so much delay and that this Government should earlier have made a more positive demand upon French authorities, and should have reached an agreement earlier. I thought there would not be any obstacle in this House, where the representatives of the people are, and that when the agreement had been reached between the foreign Government of France and the Secretary of State and the War Department, then I regarded it as a settled matter. The estimate is made and it has been agreed to by the War Department and accepted by the Appropriations Committee, and they make an additional estimate in which they state that a certain portion of this is necessary for the work to be done here by the personnel in the district, and that ought to have been accepted—not one dollar more of added appropriation, but as you have limited it, you allow only $1 out of $300 of the estimated cost, while $1 out of $60 will be needed for this necessary work in Washington.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman says that there is not an appropriation of a single dollar more if we allow his amendment, but it takes away from the appropriation of $21,000,000 just that much money intended to bring these bodies back.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. But we will save it all out of the work to be done here, to carry it on. You can save the entire $30,000,000 for all purposes relating to the care of their graves and the return of those to be brought back by throwing a monkey wrench into it and saying that we appropriate the money in this bill, but will not permit its use, and will not give this force here, this necessary and directing force, opportunity to direct them in every detail, so that mistakes may not be made, and furnish all necessary data. This is necessary to be done. You seek to cripple the head of the work—the directing agency.

You rely upon the War Department for its full estimate, and then you criticize them. I do not believe that those men are less honest or less sincere than the representatives of the people here. The wrong about to be done is to be done by this body, if there is any wrong about to be done. They say that this work can not be carried on unless you permit them to use enough of it in order to communicate with all sections of the world where these bodies are, and give their directions. They have given you the estimates. If you fail to increase this as I have asked, then you have delayed it, I fear, for another fiscal year. [Applause.]

Or possibly if you fail to permit this necessary amendment, it may be taken and understood by the War Department as an instruction by Congress not to carry out the positive and solemn agreement made to the relatives of the soldier dead buried in France, or to further delay the bringing them back to this country. There should be no partisanship in this matter, nor unjust criticism. It is too sacred a matter to invite or cause partisan discussion or party differences. I desire to impugn no man's motive, but I hope you may lay aside your prejudices and permit this work to be done. In further explanation of this important matter I desire to insert here under the leave given me a letter from the Secretary of War of May 7, and inclosed extracts from acts referred to in said letter, all relative to this matter.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 7, 1920.

Hon. C. C. DICKINSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DICKINSON: I am in receipt of your letter of the 3d instant and desire to express my hearty appreciation of the interest taken by yourself and Mr. BYRNES in securing an amendment to the appropriation, "Disposition of remains," etc., in the sundry civil bill authorizing the payment of the necessary clerical force to properly conduct the graves registration service work in the District of Columbia. [Extract from an act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.]

Provided further, That appropriations contained in any other act for the fiscal year 1921 shall not be used for the payment of civilian personnel in the bureaus or offices of the War Department in the District of Columbia except such as may be authorized by this act or as may be appropriated for the Army War College and Office of the Chief of Staff in the Army appropriation act and the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications in the fortification appropriation act.

For contingent expenses; how apportioned: All appropriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes, except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law or for objects required or authorized by law without reference to the amounts annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent expenditures in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriations to complete the service of the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such apportionments shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happenings of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or House of Representatives, and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reasons therefor shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates for any additional appropriations required on account thereof. Any person violating any provisions of the section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month. Sec. 3679, R. S., as amended by acts of Mar. 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1257), and Feb. 27, 1906 (34 Stat., 49).

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with anyone who lost a loved one in the late war. I can well understand the desire of those who have near and dear ones buried in France to have the remains brought back to the land of their birth that they may rest under the banner for which they fought and died, but we must not be actuated in matters of this sort by the dictates of our hearts alone, because we must not lose sight of the fact that, after all, it is the people's money that we are appropriating, money that is being wrung out of the taxpayers by every conceivable means, money that is earned by sweat and toil. It is my understanding that no hearings were held upon this particular feature of the bill by the Committee on Appropriations, and, therefore, if we are to legislate at this time upon this matter we must do so blindly and be guided altogether by sentiment rather than by cold facts. There is not a man on the floor of this House who would refuse to give every dollar necessary to carry on the work which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] has in mind.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is my friend from Minnesota prepared to state to the House that the appropriation out of this $31,000,000 asked for by the gentleman from Missouri is not necessary? Is the gentleman prepared to state that it is not necessary to carry on the work of bringing those bodies back home?

Mr. KNUTSON. I will ask the gentleman a question. Is he prepared to state that it is necessary?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am not on the witness stand.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does the gentleman not think, in respect to a matter of this sort, if there is any doubt, the doubt ought to be resolved in favor of the appropriation? Can he bring himself, alluding to his observation a moment ago, to decide such a matter "upon the cold facts"?

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman in favor of spending money lavishly when he does not know that such money is actually needed? Has not the time come for this Congress to legislate on facts rather than on sentiment?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have sat here and witnessed the most lavish appropriations for all sorts of things, and when a grief-stricken father stands before us, after having made all of the investigation that he finds possible, and pleads for this money to provide for the return of the bodies of the soldiers, I, for one, propose to heed his plea and vote for the appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that there is absolutely nothing to show that this money is necessary.

Mr. HUDSPETH. There is the estimate of the Secretary of War.

Mr. KNUTSON. The figures of the Committee on Appropriations show that a sufficient appropriation has been made to carry this work on, and if you gentlemen feel that you can spend this money which belongs to the taxpayers of the country when it has not been proven that it is necessary, of course the responsibility must be yours.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The Secretary of War made his estimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no limit to the length that some people will go in their endeavor to preserve the jobs of certain superfluous and unnecessary employees of the Federal Government. [Applause.] We have now reached a point when the sacred name of our heroic dead is being invoked for the purpose of holding swivel-chair artists in their jobs. We gave the War Department $3,000,000 for temporary clerks. It is at least a million dollars too much [applause], at least a million dollars more than is necessary, and yet it is the best that we can do in the face of the everlastingly continuous insistence of the administration that these superfluous employees shall be retained. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], by reason of his own very great loss, with which we all sympathize, is naturally susceptible to the claims of those who are endeavoring to keep the public pay rolls padded in the name of a sacred and patriotic purpose——

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. If the gentleman will permit me just a moment——

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I do not think the gentleman ought to make that statement. Nobody asked me to introduce anything of this kind and I am not influenced. My name ought not to be brought into this, and please keep my name out of it.

Mr. MONDELL. We sympathize with the gentleman's interest in all this sort of thing and we sympathize with his very great loss, but I do not think that the American people would be very much pleased if they heard that we had taken from the appropriations for the return of our heroic dead, intended and purposed to bring about the return of their bodies, a half million dollars to give to clerks in large, comfortable, well-ventilated offices here in Washington, working seven hours a day in a very leisurely way beneath fans in constant motion to keep the temperature just what it ought to be for those people during the period of their service.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. BLACK. Speaking of the seven-hour-a-day period, I recall that the gentleman led the fight to preserve that, and I saw one of the most beautiful bouquets I ever saw in the lobby of the House presented to the gentleman from Wyoming by Government clerks. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that that has anything to do with the question now before us. The fact remains that gentlemen are proposing to take from the appropriation made for the purpose of bringing back the remains of the soldier boys an additional $400,000 to furnish jobs here in Washington for clerks who are not needed. No one who is at all familiar with this fact, who has investigated carefully——

Mr. CALDWELL rose.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not the time to yield—can believe that any such number of clerks are needed for this service. It is just another attempt, and a reprehensible attempt, in the name of a great obligation on the part of the American people, to keep superfluous clerks attached to the public pay roll. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-two gentlemen are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Butler	Crowther	Doremus
Ayres	Cantrill	Cullen	Drane
Bacharach	Caraway	Curry, Calif.	Dupré

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 259 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he presented herewith the list of absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate upon this section be extended for a further period of five minutes. Mr. Chairman, I do this because this is a very vital matter, one on which the Military Affairs Committee has had some information, and no member of the Committee on Military Affairs has spoken upon the subject, and the only speech that remains——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is not recognized for that purpose. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it is always in order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated the question. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman demands a division.

Mr. CALDWELL. May we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be again reported.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 87, noes 109.

Mr. CALDWELL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. GOOD took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: Page 53, line 24, strike out the figures "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$400,000."

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate has been closed on the paragraph and amendments thereto by order of the committee. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to speak on the amendment.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it does not need any unanimous consent for a man to speak for five minutes on an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate was closed on the paragraph and all amendments thereto by the order of the committee, by unanimous consent. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri: Page 53, line 24, after the word "exceeding," strike out the figures "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 53, line 20, after the word "cemeteries," insert "and for paying storage costs and expenses for returning the effects of deceased soldiers and enlisted men."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; it is. The item in the bill provides for the bringing back of the remains and not bringing back the effects. It is not germane to the proposition.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will state to the gentleman that it does not increase the appropriation any, and it permits them to pay these expenses. These families and relatives of the deceased have to pay these storage charges that have accumulated over in Paris.

Mr. GOOD. That is the language asked for by the War Department.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not care for that.

Mr. GOOD. And they have an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for the regular order. I was presenting a point of order. The point of order is made that this is an appropriation to bring back the bodies of deceased officers and soldiers. That is true. But this provision in the amendment is to bring back the effects also, and I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GOOD. That is all provided for in the Army bill.

Mr. McKEOWN. They are not paying it. They are charging these people up with these expenses, and I have introduced a bill——

Mr. GOOD. If that is the case, there is no authority for it, and that clearly establishes the provision. The point I am making is that the gentleman's amendment would be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The paragraph under consideration appears to provide for the preparation, return, and transportation of the bodies of service men who died abroad. There appears to be no provision in the paragraph which relates either to the storage of or expenses for returning the effects of the deceased officers and enlisted men. The Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma is not germane to the paragraph, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Confederate Mound, Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago: For care, protection, and maintenance of the plat of ground known as "Confederate Mound" in Oakwood Cemetery, Chicago, $500.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I asked, a few moments ago, unanimous consent in order that I might call the attention of the House to what the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] really was. It seems that this body has just divided purely upon political grounds, when the question at issue——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the Chair does not think the gentleman has proceeded far enough to enable the Chair to judge of that.

Mr. CALDWELL. This issue is one away above the question of partisan politics. It is a question of humanity, just as the provision that has been read by the Clerk here is a question of humanity. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], it so happened, lost a boy in battle in the great World War, and his remains now lie buried——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the paragraph under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is not speaking to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph under consideration has a clause in it, "For the care of the Oakwood Cemetery at Chicago," and it is expected that a number of bodies that are brought across from the other side will be buried in that cemetery, and I was trying to call the attention of the House to the fact that our honored colleague, who has served for many years in the Congress of the United States——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the motion—the motion to strike out the "$500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, it is, of course, not to be expected that men who would put through a gag resolution, such as was put through here a few minutes ago, would submit to the placing in the RECORD of a statement of just what had been done.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the gentleman is not speaking to his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from New York will take his seat.

Mr. CALDWELL. I moved to strike out the figures "$500," and I desire to speak to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not speaking to it. A point of order has been made, and the Chair sustains the point of order, and the gentleman from New York will take his seat.

Mr. CALDWELL. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care, protection, and maintenance of Confederate Stockade Cemetery, Johnstons Island, in Sandusky Bay, Ohio, $350.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 13, page 54, the figures "$350."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 54, line 13, strike out the figures "$350."

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have moved to strike out the figures "$350," because a few moments ago, when I was acting as a teller in this House on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON], I noticed that there was not a single Republican in this House that voted for that amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his motion.

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, I propose to give the Republicans the opportunity at this time to go a little bit further in the matter of partisanship and strike out the "$350."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am proceeding in order, and I propose now to give the Republicans a chance to strike out "$350" for the care of another cemetery, when they a few minutes ago voted solidly, to a man, against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON]. There was but one Democrat who voted against that amendment, and I do not believe that this question of the care of soldier dead is one upon which this House should divide upon partisan lines. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is a scandal; it is an outrage; and it is a shame. Mr. Chairman, I move to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to the gentleman withdrawing it, because I want to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can not be withdrawn if there is objection. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is trying to make it appear that the Republicans of the House voted against the care of some cemetery.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. If a Democrat can not talk upon this issue, surely a Republican has no right to. They have no right to live, anyhow! [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will admonish the gentleman from Illinois to proceed in order.

Mr. MADDEN. I will do that. I am opposed to striking out the figures "$350," proposed to be stricken out by the gentleman from New York, because I believe that the Confederate cemetery should be cared for, and the gentleman wants it stricken out because he thinks the cemetery ought not to be cared for.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MADDEN. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri had proposed to care for a cemetery, I would have been for his motion; but what did it provide for? It provided that $500,000 should be expended out of the appropriation for the removal of remains of ex-service men who died in France and that the money be expended in order that they might be able to keep a lot of Democrats on the pay roll.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not in order, and I demand that the official reporters do not take down what he is saying.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from New York does not want this cemetery cared for, because he has moved to strike out the appropriation for the care of it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not in order, and I demand that the Republican Chairman of this committee comply with the rules of this House and rule that the gentleman is not in order. It was only a little while ago that this House was treated to an exhibition of gag rule and partisanship, when the Republican Chairman ordered me to take my seat, and I demand that the Chair rule on the point of order I have made, that the gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; but a point of order, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MADDEN. I propose to proceed in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. When I was ruled out of order the Chairman ordered me to take my seat. Now I demand that the Chair enforce the same rule against a Republican that he enforced against a Democrat.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair desires——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. When a gentleman is proceeding to yell out of order, and all that kind of thing, is it not the duty of the Chair to instruct the official reporters not to insert it in the RECORD?

Mr. CALDWELL. Ah——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, the gentleman says "Ah." I am making a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will be in order, and the Chair will make a statement. The Chair permitted the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] to proceed until it was clearly demonstrated that his remarks were not in order. Although the point of order was made that his remarks were not in order, the Chair permitted him to proceed, and admonished him to proceed in order, until it was clearly demonstrated that the gentleman's remarks were not in order, and the Chair was following exactly the same procedure in the case of the gentleman from Illinois. If the gentleman from Illinois transgresses the rule and proceeds out of order, the Chair will sustain the point of order and direct the gentleman from Illinois to take his seat. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MADDEN. I was about to say, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from New York interrupted me, that he seems to be very solicitous about saving $350, which is about to be appropriated for the care of a cemetery in which some of the Confederate dead are buried, whereas he was not at all solicitous about an appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of keeping a lot of clerks on the pay roll, which was to be taken out of the money proposed to be used for the return of the soldier dead.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order, and I demand that the Chair rule on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is in order. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MADDEN. I was only illustrating, Mr. Chairman. Now, on the contrary, I am in favor of appropriating this $350 or any other sum necessary for the care of a cemetery, but at the same time I am in favor of saving $500,000 or any other unnecessary sum, and my interest is in the public service and not in padding the Government pay roll with unnecessary employees in order that a few Democrats who are not needed may be able to retain their positions on the pay roll.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MADDEN. That is all I desire to say, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Monuments or tablets in Cuba and China: For repairs and preservation of monuments, tablets, roads, fences, etc., made and constructed by the United States in Cuba and China to mark the places where American soldiers fell, $1,000.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' bonus.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the soldiers' bonus. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gettysburg National Military Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; fences and gates; marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battle field and the monuments thereon; compensation of civilian commissioner, clerical and other services, expenses, and labor; purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position; maintenance, repair, and operation of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, and all other expenses incident to the foregoing, $65,000.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of the item of $65,000 carried in this bill for maintenance and improvements on the Gettysburg National Park, especially because it is in my district. Gettysburg is a sacred place in the hearts and memories of thousands of hoary veterans who wore the blue and the gray, and no battle field in the whole world is more widely known for its history, fine monuments, beautiful scenery, and good roads. It is a mecca for a hundred thousand tourists each year from every State and every land. Before our States took up the building of good roads Gettysburg had them. In 1895 the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania ceded to the United States 14 miles of road within the Gettysburg Park, but a gap three-fourths of a mile long in the Taneytown Road still remains unimproved. It is in the direct road leading to Round Top and Little Round Top, two important points of interest visited by all strangers, and for nine months of the year is practically impassable. Efforts have been made in previous Congresses to secure appropriation for this very much needed improvement, but each time in vain. I also presented the appeals of Col. J. P. Nicholson, chairman of Gettysburg National Park Commission, and citizens of Gettysburg, also the indorsement of the Secretary of War, to the Committee on Appropriations.

I would now like to ask the chairman of the committee whether any amount is included in this appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. GOOD. The appropriation is $15,000 more than for the current year, and in granting that the committee took into consideration that it was necessary to macadamize this small stretch of road. It is ample for that purpose, and it is included in this appropriation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Shiloh National Military Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; compensation of civilian commissioner; secretary and superintendent; clerical and other services; labor; historical tablets; maps and surveys; roads; purchase and transportation of supplies, implements, and materials; foundations for monuments; office and other necessary expenses, including maintenance, repair, and operation of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, $25,435.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 56, lines 23 and 24, strike out the word "civilian commissioner," and on page 57, line 3, strike out the sum "$25,435" and insert in lieu thereof the sum of "$22,435."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, since this bill was acted upon by the committee the only civilian commissfoner of this park has died, and therefore the words "civilian commissioner" should be eliminated and $3,000 of the amount appropriated should be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nothing contained in the provision regarding the making and enforcing of regulations governing the speed of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia found in section 1 of the District of Columbia act approved March 3, 1917, shall be construed to interfere with the exclusive charge and control heretofore committed to the Chief of Engineers over the park system of the District of Columbia, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce all regulations for the control of vehicles and traffic, and limiting the speed thereof on roads, highways, and bridges within the public grounds in the District of Columbia, under his control, subject to the penalties prescribed in the act entitled "An act regulating the speed of automobiles in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 29, 1906.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that in line 7, page 59, the spelling of the word "Columbia" may be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Mansion: For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official purposes, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $45,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the amount of $45,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am one Democrat who believes that when it is proper to make a certain retrenchment in the affairs of our Government, controlled either by Democrats or Republicans, it is the duty of Congress to require that retrenchment.

I want to call attention to some of these extravagant items for our respective departments, Executive Mansion—the White House and grounds—that has been going on every year in this sundry civil bill without let or hindrance, without anyone saying yea or nay, but passing them on.

Let us compare the various items in this bill with the items passed in the last sundry civil bill, and you will then ascertain that all of these items are annual appropriations, paid out and expended each year:

Passed in the last sundry civil bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Improvement of grounds, etc	$5,000
Employment of engineer	2,400
Machinery, tools, etc	1,000
Care, repair mansion, etc	40,000
Fuel, mansion and greenhouses	8,000
Care and maintenance of greenhouses	9,000
Repair to greenhouses	3,000
Reconstructing one greenhouse	4,000
Traveling expenses of President	25,000
Lighting mansion, etc	8,600
Lighting grounds, watchmen lodges, offices, and greenhouses, etc	23,000
Heating offices, watchmen lodges, and greenhouses, etc	4,500

Contained in present sundry civil bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

Improvement of grounds, etc	$5,000
Employment of engineer	2,400
Machinery, tools, etc	1,000
Care, repair mansion, etc	45,000
Fuel, mansion and greenhouses	8,000
Care and maintenance of greenhouses	9,000
Repair to greenhouses	3,000
Reconstructing one greenhouse	4,000
Traveling expenses of President	25,000
Lighting mansion, etc	8,600
Lighting grounds, watchmen lodges, offices, and greenhouses, etc	24,000
Heating offices, watchmen lodges, greenhouses, etc	6,500

Now, Mr. Chairman, is it necessary to spend all of the above each and every year? Is it necessary to spend $4,000 every year for reconstructing one greenhouse? Is it absolutely necessary to spend from $40,000 to $45,000 each and every year for care and maintenance of this White House building alone? I say that it is ridiculous. None of this $45,000 goes to pay the horde of servants, guards, and watchmen. They are all paid out of other appropriations. No citizen ever has his private residence painted and gone over every year, no matter how rich he is, or how much unneeded money he has to spend. Eight thousand dollars for fuel each year is ridiculous. Nine thousand dollars for care of greenhouses each year is ridiculous. Eight thousand six hundred dollars for lighting mansion each year is ridiculous. We ought to wake up and stop some of this extravagance. It is our extravagance, after all, and we can not charge it up to anybody but Congress, and we are each and all of us guilty if we permit it to continue.

For drainage back of the iron fence at the north front of the Executive Mansion grounds $1,500. That, however, was not in the last year's sundry civil bill, but to offset this item there was an appropriation in the last sundry civil bill of $1,000 for a new roof on the storehouse in the White House propagating gardens. Committee after committee has been copying these same extravagant items of appropriation into the sundry civil bill for years and years and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman realize that in items of this sort relating to the Executive Mansion, the home of the President, the committee can not inquire quite so closely as it might in some other cases? It seems to me we must take the word of the persons in charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, it is not the present Democratic President who is asking for this money. He has no idea these items are in this bill. All of these items have been carried here each year in the sundry civil appropriation bill for each of your Republican Presidents, and the trouble of it all is that you do not stop to inquire into the necessity of the items, but because a Republican President occupied the White House you appropriated, and the money was spent, and you can not get out of the habit and can not stop these appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. But they were never quite so large.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a custom and a usage that has been indulged in here by the committee year after year. I do not know but that the committee has too many other things to do on the outside and that they have not time to look into these items of public business.

Mr. MONDELL. But the sums were never quite so large as they have been lately.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, they have been just about the same size every single year, and if the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will take time from his office on political matters to look into the other sundry civil bills, he will find that they are almost exactly in the same amount each year. I do not care whether the committee feels that it can not inquire into it or not, I am one Democrat who stands in this House and says that if these items are too large and are extravagantly unnecessary, even if there is a Democratic President in the White House, the people of America and the President, who know they have got to economize, do not want this extravagance kept up here in the city of Washington year after year.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. On the last item of these, what has the gentleman to say—I refer to the $25,000 item for traveling expenses of the President, to be expended only upon his certificate?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to see that $25,000 item cut out of this bill. That is too much annual money for traveling expenses.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman move that that be stricken out?

Mr. BLANTON. I will, if the gentleman will stand with me and help vote it out.

Mr. MILLER. I will stand right with the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Our distinguished President does not have to spend any such sum for traveling.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I think the gentleman from Texas should make the matter clear that there has been no increase in that item in recent years.

Mr. BLANTON. No; it has been carried here year after year, and the committee just blindly follows the old custom of putting these items back in the bill. I dare say there is not a person from the White House who has ever asked for one of these items. It is just keeping up this old Republican custom for the last 25 years. But the money is expended and goes each year.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Does not the gentleman realize that the high cost of living affects the White House and the surroundings the same as it does other people?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, we pay the President of the United States $75,000, and that is some money for a democratic Republic to pay, and we make him every kind of a liberal allowance for the necessities of the White House. I want to say to you that $45,000 a year is too much money for the ordinary care and repair of the White House.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman understand that there are 80 rooms in the Executive Mansion, and that this takes care of the rooms, the mechanical care of the building, and the furnishing of the buildings, the repainting, the redecorating of the rooms, and all that sort of thing?

Mr. BLANTON. I want the distinguished gentleman from Iowa to go back to his State and ask his people whether these thousands and thousands of dollars that have been carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill under this heading for years and years represent what they want to expend in a Republic for such items.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe there is a man in my State who is opposed to that appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to practice economy from the President's White House down to our own homes, because we have got to do it if we ever get this Republic out of debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the plea for economy on the part of the active member of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I agree that there is need for economy; but I believe that the American people are interested in seeing to it that the Executive Mansion and the surrounding grounds are kept in the best of order. I think they are willing that sufficient money should be expended in order that the President and his family, both his private family and the official family, may live and have every necessary comfort and convenience. In the care that is bestowed upon this part of the District we have to contend with the increases in the cost of labor and material, the same as we do to other sections of the District.

I think the increases in these items because of that may have been very considerable, but I believe that the people who come to Washington want to see the Executive Mansion and grounds kept up in proper order and in splendid condition. Of course, they are interested in that. They are so interested in it, I will say, that at times they see to it that different people occupy that Executive Mansion, and I think their interest is so intense and sufficiently deep that at the next available opportunity they will see to it that there will be another occupant after the 4th of March of next year [applause on the Republican side], and I trust the gentleman will not seek to eliminate these appropriations so that in case there should be a different occupant at the expiration of the term of the present one we should have to bring in a deficiency in order to tidy up the place and keep it up to the standard that has heretofore been maintained during all these years.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman has spoken of the interior decorations of the White House——

Mr. WALSH. No; I did not speak about that.

Mr. KEARNS. It has been mentioned here on the floor of the House; I thought it was the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. No; I did not mention it.

Mr. KEARNS. I was just wondering and want to know, and I know a great many people in the United States are anxious to know, why it is more than three years since anyone has seen the inside of that part of the Executive Mansion that is not used by the President and his immediate family.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not know as to that. I think there are certain parts of the Executive Mansion that have been open from time to time——

Mr. KEARNS. Why, certainly, but not within three years.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, there were at least 100 Texas people who saw the interior last summer.

Mr. KEARNS. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas about that.

Mr. BLANTON. There were three months in which the White House was open, and every single constituent you sent down there with a card had the privilege of going in there.

Mr. KEARNS. When was that?

Mr. BLANTON. Three months, while the President was gone to France.

Mr. KEARNS. He was away eight months.

Mr. BLANTON. There were three months in Washington when you could send a constituent down there at any time.

Mr. KEARNS. What I want to know, and what I think the people want to know, is why the people of the United States were barred from it for two years and nine months. They own that building——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, they own this building, but they are barred from here whenever you hold a Republican caucus here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I will say that may be the very reason for the increase in the appropriation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say, if the gentleman will permit me to reply to the gentleman from Ohio, that up until the time of the illness of the President there was never a time when visitors were not admitted to the East Room of the White House. During the war they were restricted to a certain extent in going into the rooms of the White House on the first floor, not the East Room——

Mr. KEARNS. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it has not been open to all the constituency of the United States. I do not know about the people from Texas or the gentleman's district, but I do know that the people from other parts of the United States have been barred from the White House for three years, unless, possibly, the three months' interval mentioned by the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that immediately after the declaration of war every public building, practically, in the city of Washington was closed to visitors, and the White House was also closed during that period to visitors, and with that exception there has not been a time up until the illness of the President that the public were not freely admitted to the East Room and also to the rooms on the first floor of the White House upon the card of a Member of Congress.

Mr. KEARNS. When was that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was before the war, as I have just stated.

Mr. KEARNS. Before the war?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Of course, anybody could get in before the war.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that the public were not admitted indiscriminately to the Treasury Department, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and other public buildings during the war.

During other periods admission to the White House was as freely extended under this administration as under preceding administrations, up until the time of the illness of the President.

Mr. KEARNS. Any man could get in there if he was properly vouched for, but you can not get into the Executive Mansion now unless you have a special privilege. I would like to know if there were special privileges handed out here as to admittance to the White House?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Of course not.

Mr. KEARNS. Then I want to say that the public has been excluded from the White House at least two years and nine months.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have just stated to the gentleman that they were excluded from the White House during the war, and the war began in 1917.

Mr. KEARNS. But the war closed on the 11th day of November, 1918.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has just pointed out that during the time following that, when the President was in France, the public were freely admitted to all portions of the first floor of the White House.

Mr. KEARNS. And the gentleman from Texas, on closer examination, says they were admitted only three months of that time. He was away six months—I think eight months.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There was a part of the time, the gentleman will recall, when they were repairing the White House and were making considerable changes in it with the money that was appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. KEARNS. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee another question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not the floor.

Mr. KEARNS. You were granted it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for one additional question.

Mr. KEARNS. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the gentleman's constituency has had free access to the White House at all times since November 11, 1918, with the exception of three months?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman that my constituency has had no freer access to the White House than the constituency of the gentleman from Ohio. I can not remember the exact dates when they were excluded from the White House.

Mr. KEARNS. I will say to the gentleman that my constituency, and the constituency of the entire State of Ohio, has been barred from the White House, with the exception of possibly three months, since the 6th day of April, 1917.

Mr. BLANTON. And one of them will be barred for the next four years.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. I oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment. There is no chance in the world to pass it, and so I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel for the Executive Mansion and greenhouses, $8,000.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2792. An act to enlarge the boundaries of the Oregon National Forest.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

H. R. 12824. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union;

H. R. 13139. An act for the sale of isolated tracts in the former Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.;

H. R. 13227. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims;

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution to correct an error in the wording of the appropriation of $71,000 made in the act approved July 9, 1918, and to authorize the Secretary of War to pay said sum to respective parties entitled thereto; and

H. R. 8314. An act to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4212. An act to authorize the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey to construct a bridge across the waters of the Delaware River between the city of Easton, in the State of Pennsylvania, and the city of Phillipsburg, in the State of New Jersey; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, presented for printing, under the rule, the conference report and statement on the bill (S. 1699) providing for the retirement of employees in the civil service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the soldiers' bonus legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the soldiers' bonus legislation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on revenue taxation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Dickinson amendment to the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the soldiers' bonus.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the soldiers' bonus. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, May 8, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting request for legislation to permit the correction of the general account of the Treasurer of the United States (H. Doc. No. 756); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation providing for the relief of the Treasurer of the United States; to the Committee on Claims.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a tentative draft of legislation providing for the return of the wives of soldiers to the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GANDY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2964) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation, in Montana, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 938), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DOREMUS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13606) granting the consent of Congress to the city of St. Paul, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 937), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize the association of producers of agricultural products, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 939), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CRAGO, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13942) to amend section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, known as the Articles of War, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 940), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13908) to amend section 16 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 941), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13755) granting an increase of pension to Phoebe A. Rawles, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 8, 1920.

(Legislative day of Friday, May 7, 1920.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 13665. An act granting the consent of Congress to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, between sections 16 and 21, township 15 north, range 19 east, in the State of Oklahoma; and

H. R. 13666. An act granting the consent of Congress to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, in section 18, township 12 north, range 21 east, in the State of Oklahoma.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2792. An act to enlarge the boundaries of the Oregon National Forest;

H. R. 13590. An act granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across the Red River between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla.; and

H. R. 13724. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Orange, Tex.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Ministerial Union of the Central Young Men's Christian Association, of Topeka, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to create in the Army a chaplain corps, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, of Leavenworth, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called sedition bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a petition of sundry citizens of Frederick, Md., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 4352) authorizing the Indians residing on or belonging to the Turtle Mountain Reservation, N. Dak., to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4353) to authorize the President to appoint Henry S. Kiersted a major in the Medical Corps of the Army of the United States on the retired list (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4354) for the relief of Roach, Stansell, Lowrance Bros. & Co., of Memphis, Tenn.; to the Committee on Claims.

INSCRIPTIONS ON ARLINGTON AMPHITHEATER.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a short joint resolution. I will state that it is a copy of the joint resolution introduced in the House of Representatives by that brave old leader, Gen. SHERWOOD, of Ohio, one of the few veterans of the Civil War left in the House. I should like to have it passed to-day, if possible. I do not think any Senator will object to it. I ask that it be read for information.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 194) to include the names of southern military leaders in the inscriptions on the amphitheater at Arlington was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States made provision for the erection of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater; and

Whereas the commission provided for by Congress for the construction of the memorial includes a representative of the United Confederate Veterans; and

Whereas the commission is unable to construe the law to include the names of Confederate leaders to be inscribed on the memorial; and

Whereas, by act of Congress, a Confederate section has been set apart at Arlington for Confederate dead; and

Whereas the Confederate Veterans and their sons and grandsons, in peace and in active military service during the War with Spain, and on every field in Europe in the World War, demonstrated their fealty to the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the commission created by act of Congress having in charge the construction of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater be hereby authorized, at their discretion, to make provision to include the names of southern military leaders in the inscriptions on the amphitheater.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that this is a joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina whether it has passed the House?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it has not. It is pending in the House. It was introduced in the House by Gen. SHERWOOD, of Ohio.

Mr. SMOOT. As it is a joint resolution, it seems to me it ought to go to the committee and be reported back to the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. Technically that would be the orderly way, but I do not see any use of that procedure. The joint resolution is only six lines in length and gives the commission discretion which protects the provision.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that.

Mr. OVERMAN. It authorizes them and gives them the discretion. I want to say that they have submitted to some of the great educators of the country the names that should be inscribed on the amphitheater, and one of the commission called attention to the fact that the great generals of the South, such as Lee and Jackson, were Americans, and all Americans were proud of them. Union soldiers wanted these names put on; and it is the right thing also to select a few names from the Confederates, together with names of Revolutionary heroes, Spanish-American War heroes, and others. The commission want to do it, but they have not the discretion to do it. The joint resolution only allows them the discretion if in their opinion it should be done. That is all the joint resolution provides.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question of what the joint resolution provides, Mr. President. I am simply saying that it is a joint resolution, not a simple Senate resolution, and that it ought to go to a committee, and the committee should report it out.

Mr. OVERMAN. It can only be considered by unanimous consent, of course; and I hope the Senator will not object, because it has to be acted upon immediately, if at all. The sons and grandsons of these men have fallen in recent battle, together with the sons and grandsons of Union soldiers; and everybody recognizes that these were great generals. They were Americans. They are a heritage that everybody is proud of. Why should not the names of one or two of these distinguished men be inscribed on this amphitheater? Unless it is done at once, it can not be done at all. That is the reason why I ask that the joint resolution be passed at once.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that they were great generals, and that the committee perhaps will report the measure out the way it is; if not, with slight amendments. It does seem to me, however, that if it is proposed in the form of a joint resolution it ought to be referred to the committee, and let the committee report it back. I therefore ask that it be sent to the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, I am helpless if objection is made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what committee does the Senator ask to have it referred?

Mr. SMOOT. The Committee on the Library, I think. That committee had this subject in hand before.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500,000 for the maintenance, support, and development of the manufacturing industries and facilities at the Benicia Arsenal, Calif., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

LANDS WITHDRAWN UNDER RECLAMATION LAWS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 795) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws, and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "or" and insert "of"; on page 1, line 8, after "thereto," to insert "which are not otherwise reserved"; and on page 2, line 8, after "per centum," to insert "per annum, payable annually."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. With the understanding that it does not interfere with the unfinished business, and that it is done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be concurred in, without interfering with the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the House will be, without objection, concurred in. The Chair hears no objection.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. STERLING. I present the report of the conferees on Senate bill 1699, known as the civil-service retirement bill. I ask that the report lie on the table and be printed, and I give notice that on Monday next I shall call it up for consideration.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 8, 9, and 15.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 5, 6, 10, 11, 13, 14, 16, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "sixty-two" and "sixty" where they occur and insert in lieu thereof the words "sixty-five" and "sixty-two," respectively, so that the amendment shall read: "Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers and post-office clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 65 years of age, and railway postal clerks at 62 years of age, if said mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, post-office clerks, and railway postal clerks shall have rendered at least 15 years of service computed as prescribed in section 3 of this act"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed by the House insert the following: "Provided, That no person employed in the executive departments within the District of Columbia, retired under the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be replaced by additional employees, but if the exigencies of the service so require, places made vacant by such retirement may be filled by promotion or transfer of eligible employees already in the service"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Between the words "be" and "entitled," in line 8 of the amendment, insert the word "legally," so that the amendment shall read: "Provided, That if in case of death the amount of deductions to be paid under the provisions of this section does not exceed $300, and if there has been no demand upon the Commissioner of Pensions by a duly appointed executor or administrator, the payment may be made, after the expiration of three months from date of death, to such person or persons as may appear in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions to be legally entitled to the proceeds of the estate, and such payment shall be a bar to recovery by any other person"; and the House agree to the same.

THOMAS STERLING,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD,
HANNIBAL L. GODWIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the routine morning business on Monday next I shall ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10378, known as the shipping bill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 13665. An act granting the consent of Congress to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, between sections 16 and 21, township 15 north, range 19 east, in the State of Oklahoma; and

H. R. 13666. An act granting the consent of Congress to Muskogee County, Okla., to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, in section 18, township 12 north, range 21 east, in the State of Oklahoma.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to present the conference report on House bill 11960, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. I explained the other day that it came back from the House owing to the fact that there was a point of order made against one of the amendments in the House, and the point of order was sustained. The conference report came back, and, of course, the conferees met and removed the clause against which the point of order was made. I present the report—it was not presented in the Senate before—and ask for action upon it. It is a full agreement.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 10, and 13.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, and 14.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$480,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the Senate amendment insert "$900,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"PURCHASE OF EMBASSY BUILDING AND GROUNDS AT SANTIAGO, CHILE.

"For the purchase of an embassy building and grounds at Santiago, Chile, and for making necessary minor repairs and alterations in the building to put it into proper condition, $130,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"FEES FOR PASSPORTS AND VISÉS.

"SECTION 1. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application for a passport and $9 for each passport issued to a citizen or person owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the Secretary of State by regulation to authorize the retention by State officials of the fee of $1 for executing an application for a passport: And provided further, That no fee shall be collected for passports issued to officers or employees of the United States proceeding abroad in the discharge of their official duties, or to members of their immediate families accompanying them, or to seamen, or to widows, children, parents, brothers, and sisters of American soldiers, sailors, or marines, buried abroad whose journey is undertaken for the purpose and with the intent of visiting the graves of such soldiers, sailors, or marines, which facts shall be made a part of the application for the passport.

"SEC. 2. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, there shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States quarterly a fee of $1 for executing each application of an alien for a visé and $9 for each visé of the passport of an alien: Provided, That no fee shall be collected from any officer of any foreign Government, its armed forces, or of any State, district, or municipality thereof, traveling to or through the United States, or of any soldiers coming within the terms of public resolution approved October 19, 1918 (40 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 1014).

"SEC. 3. The visé of a passport of an alien may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State, be refused if the applicant would be dangerous to the public safety or obviously be liable to exclusion if allowed to present himself at a port of the United States for admission: Provided, That such applicant, if rejected by the officer of the United States to whom the application was originally made, may appeal to the Secretary of State: And provided further, That the issuance of a visé to an alien by a person duly authorized to issue such visé on behalf of the United States shall not relieve said alien or the steamship company transporting him from the operation of any provision of the laws of the United States.

"SEC. 4. From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséd by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visé: Provided, That this section shall not apply to nationals of Great Britain domiciled in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or the Bahamas, or to nationals of France domiciled in St. Pierre and Miquelon, or to citizens of Cuba, Panama, or Mexico.

"SEC. 5. From and after the passage of this act every citizen or person, other than a seaman, owing allegiance to or entitled to the protection of the United States and departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof for any foreign country, except the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, St. Pierre, and Miquelon, Panama, the Bermudas, the Bahamas, Mexico, and Cuba, or departing from the United States or any of the possessions thereof by way of any of said countries for any other country shall be required to bear a valid passport.

"SEC. 6. The validity of a passport or visé shall be limited to two years, unless the Secretary of State shall by regulation limit the validity of such passport or visé to a shorter period.

"SEC. 7. Whenever the appropriate officer within the United States of any foreign country refuses to visé a passport issued by the United States, the Department of State is hereby authorized upon request in writing and the return of the unused passport within six months from the date of issue to refund to the person to whom the passport was issued the fees which have been paid to Federal officials, and the money for that purpose is hereby appropriated and directed to be paid upon the order of the Secretary of State.

"SEC. 8. Section 1 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled 'An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad' (34 Stats. L., pt. 1, p. 1228), authorizing the Secretary of State to issue passports to certain persons not citizens of the United States is hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STEPHEN G. PORTER,
JOHN JACOB ROGERS,
H. D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what was the clause in the bill that went out on a point of order?

Mr. LODGE. There was a clause in the bill, put in by the House, which cut down the appropriation for the Mexican Commission to $5,000. That meant, of course, the stoppage of all work. The Senate put in an amendment providing that the $15,000 unexpended balance of the last appropriation should be available for the coming fiscal year. Of course there was no point of order against that, but as there was a good deal of controversy over it the conferees added at the end of the Senate amendment, which made the unexpended balance available for the coming year, making a total appropriation of $20,000 instead of $45,000, which it was in the last bill, the following proviso:

Provided, however, That this is to be considered as the final appropriation under existing treaties for the maintenance of said commission, and the President is hereby requested to notify the Republic of Mexico that the United States desires to dissolve the commission from and after six months from July 1, 1920.

That proviso goes out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was that the Senate provision or was it inserted by the conferees?

Mr. LODGE. It was inserted by the conferees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And therefore it was new matter.

Mr. LODGE. They held it in the House to be new matter, which I think is doubtful, but still they so held.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Otherwise the report is not affected?

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. It leaves the Senate amendment just as it was, with the appropriation of $15,000, the unexpended balance. It is just what the Senate adopted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In other words, as I understand it, the conferees sought to close this proposition finally in conference, but the House held that the conferees had exceeded their authority. Now the situation is that the bill is practically as it left the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Practically as it left the Senate. There is a great controversy about that commission. It has been going on since 1892, and it has been costing the Government on an average $50,000 a year. The line is not run, and, in my judgment, it never can be run, except as an arbitrary line, because the Rio Grande shifts its bed every little while. Then they have what are called bancos, and it has to be decided to which country those belong, and it has all to be done over again. There are over 400 miles still open, and it is an endless business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am in accord with the Senator's view on that subject. There may come a day in the future when the proposal to fix the boundary line will be renewed and worked out, but certainly we are wasting money now to attempt it.

Mr. LODGE. We are. What the committees wanted to bring about, both in the House and the Senate, was to make a new arrangement with Mexico by which an arbitrary line should be run and the thing finally decided. It has come up against a point of order, but it leaves the bill practically as it left the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose the question of establishing new boundary lines between this country and Mexico is somewhat delicate at the present time.

Mr. LODGE. It is. Mexico has had no commissioner there for some time. The fact is that nothing much has been done, but there were two very excellent citizens who held positions on the commission, and it was not desired to cut them off too suddenly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to agreeing to the report. I merely wanted to understand the attitude in which it leaves the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to know whether the point of order sustained by the House was a point of order against the insertion made by the conferees or whether it was against an amendment inserted by the Senate?

Mr. LODGE. It was an amendment to the amendment of the Senate. The point of order lay only against the part inserted by the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By the conferees?

Mr. LODGE. That is all. No point of order could be made against the Senate amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood that it was a point of order against the amendment by the Senate, and the Chair thought that such action would lead to some trouble in the future.

Mr. LODGE. No; that is not the form it took. Of course, the addition made by the conferees was an addition to the Senate amendment. The only part of it that was out of order was that which was added by the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I crave the indulgence of the Senate for a very brief time this morning. In explanation of my request I may say that since the recess of yesterday I have received a very important communication directly in line with some portions of my discussion of the dye bill, and therefore I think it of prime importance to the Senate. This document consists of a circular to the drug and chemical markets, from Boston, and is entitled:

SUES DU PONT CO. FOR $1,000,000—DISCLOSING SECRET AGREEMENT—EDGAR LEVINSTEIN ALLEGES BREACH OF CONTRACT, AND CITES ARRANGEMENT WHEREBY DU PONTS AND LEVINSTEIN EXCHANGE PATENTS AND SECRET PROCESSES—AGREEMENT TO DIVIDE WORLD'S MARKETS.

(Special to Drug and Chemical Markets.)

BOSTON, MASS., May 13.

Suit for $1,000,000 damages, alleging breach of contract, was filed in the United States district court, Boston, May 7, by Edgar Levinstein, of Nahant, against E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del.

The complaint alleges that the Du Pont Co. in 1916 bought of Levinstein (Ltd.), of Manchester, England, the exclusive right to manufacture and sell the Levinstein dyes in America, with the agreement that Edgar Levinstein, who had for many years been the sole representative of Levinstein (Ltd.) in the United States, with headquarters in Boston, should be continued as a selling medium for those dyes.

It is also alleged that the Du Pont Co. undertook to reserve for him an annual supply of Levinstein dyes, and also Du Pont's own dye products, on which he was guaranteed a profit, and agreed that it would make every effort to enable him to retain the customers obtained by him while he was representing Levinstein (Ltd.) and doing business under the name of I. Levinstein & Co. (Inc.).

The Du Pont Co. is alleged to have solicited and induced plaintiff's customers, by unfair methods, to transfer their trade and customs in dyes from him to itself and to have violated its contract in other respects with the deliberate purpose of driving the plaintiff out of business.

R. M. Morse and Frank H. Stewart, No. 6 Beacon Street, Boston, counsel for the plaintiff, say in their complaint:

TERMS OF THE AGREEMENT.

The plaintiff says that for a long time prior to November 30, 1916, as sole representative of Levinstein (Ltd.), a corporation duly organized and established by law and having its principal place of business at Manchester, England, and I. Levinstein & Co. (Inc.), a corporation duly organized and established under the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and having its principal place of business at Boston, within said district, he had been engaged in building up and carrying on in the United States a large and profitable dyestuffs business, especially as a selling medium for the dye products and manufactured under the processes and brands of Levinstein (Ltd.) and had obtained a large number of important and profitable customers.

That on March 27, 1918, the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract, by the terms whereof the defendant, among other things, agreed in substance and effect with the plaintiff to protect the trade and good will so built up by him in dyestuffs as aforesaid, and in particular agreed to reserve for him from its manufacture and production of both Levinstein and Du Pont dyes, so called, a supply of 600 tons in each and every consecutive 12 months at a price to enable him to sell to his customers at the defendant's usual prices.

ALLEGES BREACH OF CONTRACT.

That the defendant did not reserve for him from its manufacture and production of both Levinstein and Du Pont dyes, so called, a supply of 600 tons in each and every consecutive 12 months at a price to enable him to sell to his customers at the defendant's usual prices and leave him a reasonable profit; but that, on the contrary, the defendant, in violation of its contract with the plaintiff and with the deliberate purpose and intent of obtaining for itself the plaintiff's established trade, custom, and good will, and depriving the plaintiff of the same and embarrassing him and driving him out of his long-established business, has intentionally and deliberately failed, neglected, and refused, and still refuses, to supply him on order with dyes for his customers; has withheld and delayed, and still withholds and delays, shipments to him after accepting his orders for dyes, and has concealed prices and changes in prices from him; has obstructed, hindered, and delayed him, and still obstructs, hinders, and delays him, in obtaining orders from his customers and in placing orders with itself and in obtaining a fair selection of colors from it, and the plaintiff further says that the defendant, by divers inducements, devices, means, and unfair methods and practices has covertly, secretly, and persistently solicited, canvassed, importuned, persuaded, and induced the customers of the plaintiff to transfer and divert their trade and custom in dyes from the plaintiff to the defendant.

Then follows the agreement between the Du Pont Co. and Levinstein (Ltd.). It is that to which I crave the attention of the Senate. What I have so far read is merely introductory.

The agreement between E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del., and Levinstein (Ltd.), of Manchester, England, makes the following arrangements for an exchange of information regarding patented or secret processes and the apparatus, machinery, and plant necessary for the manufacture of dyes, intermediates, and raw materials.

LEVINSTEIN AND DU PONT AGREEMENT.

The parties shall be entitled to the following rights in respect to all patented inventions and secret processes mentioned in clause 1 hereof videlicit:

(a) Levinsteins shall have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, and sale under its own and the Du Pont Co.'s patented inventions and secret processes throughout Great Britain, Ireland, India, and all British possessions, colonies, and dependencies (except Canada), France, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Holland, Portugal, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and nonexclusive rights throughout Canada and all other countries except those for which the Du Pont Co. is to have exclusive rights.

(b) The Du Pont Co. shall have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, and sale under its own and Levinstein's patented inventions and secret processes throughout the United States of America and all its possessions, present and future, Mexico and Central and South America, and nonexclusive rights throughout all other countries except those for which Levinsteins is to have exclusive rights.

Here is a partition of the world between two huge institutions which are engaged in the same business and which finds its analogy in that historical incident centuries ago, when the Pope, by arbitrary decree, divided the world into two portions, assigning the eastern to Spain and the western to Portugal.

LEVINSTEIN PAYMENTS.

If the information to be furnished by Levinsteins to the Du Pont Co. shall be capable of turning out finished products of the standard of the products from time to time sold by Levinsteins, and if the synthetic indigo produced by such processes shall be up to the commercial standard heretofore ruling in the United States, the Du Pont Co. shall pay to Levinsteins £25,000 in each of the 10 years from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1927, the first payment to be made on July 1, 1918. The condition for such payment shall be deemed conclusively to be performed if Levinsteins shall at their works produce finished products and synthetic indigo of the before-mentioned standards and shall prove that they furnished the Du Pont Co. with the information and instruction necessary to produce the same, whether in fact the Du Pont Co. are or are not able to produce the same or do or do not produce the same.

That is to say, the Du Ponts may, without violating the contract, suspend production if the mutual interests of those two world-dominant corporations should find that course the more profitable.

PROVISION FOR ROYALTIES.

The royalties payable by the party accepting the license shall be 5 per cent on the selling value of the finished product delivered in the country of manufacture. In the case of a patented invention the royalty shall not be payable beyond the existence of the patent and in the case of secret process shall be payable only during the continuance of this agreement. The royalties payable to Levinsteins under this clause shall be additional to the £25,000 a year mentioned in clause 3 hereof.

It is intended to hold in June, 1917—

The dates in this document seem to be inconsistent, but I presume that is due to errors in copying—in America a meeting by representatives of the parties hereto for the purpose of arranging selling facilities for nonexclusive Asiatic territory, particularly Japan and China, the intention being to arrange if possible a joint selling company, the capital of which is to be subscribed and its sales to be divided as nearly as possible in equal parts by the parties hereto.

Let me ask here, Mr. President, if it be true that this industry is to perish unless the pending bill shall be enacted, how is it that the Du Pont Co., a principal beneficiary under it, should assume the risk in July, 1918, of making a contract with the Levinsteins, under which the two agreed to organize a corporation as a medium for securing and controlling the dye business of Japan and China? Where is there in this document the slightest expression which would indicate apprehension of a drastic and destructive German competition?

Bear in mind, Mr. President, that this contract was made during the war, under the then existing duties in America upon dyestuffs, nearly one year before the President recommended further legislation in behalf of the industry, and long before anyone could assume what the character of that legislation might be or even the form it might assume.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. NUGENT. I rise merely to ask a question for information. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado whether or not he understands that the contract which he has read is applicable only to dyes that have been patented by the Du Ponts and the Levinsteins?

Mr. THOMAS. And also to secret processes which are controlled by the two corporations.

Mr. NUGENT. It applies also to secret processes?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; as may be devised by either of the two contracting parties. It does apply to that class of dyes. However, Mr. President, it is the commencement, the initiation, of the monopolistic condition to which I directed the attention of the Senate on yesterday.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, does the Senator from Colorado understand that that contract has to do with patents for dyes that are not produced in Germany?

Mr. THOMAS. It has to do with all patents for dyes which are controlled by either of the contracting parties and with such secret processes as either may have devised or may devise during the life of the contract; it is an agreement of world-wide dimensions, and must necessarily, therefore, have to do with the dye industry as a whole, for I assume that through and by means of such an enormous combination of the great dye house of England and the great dye house of America control of the industry will be ultimately acquired. I proceed:

If any difference or dispute shall arise between the parties hereto in respect of this agreement or any matter or thing relating thereto, the same shall be referred to the President for the time being of the Du Pone Co. or his nominee and the chairman for the time being of the Levinsteins or his nominee, who shall arbitrate the same and whose award shall be final.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not understand from the reading by the Senator of the contract whether or not the United States was apportioned exclusively to the Du Ponts.

Mr. THOMAS. The United States as it now exists and all territory or dominions which it may hereafter acquire.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the English house is not permitted to sell under that contract within such territory?

Mr. THOMAS. Evidently not, unless this contract, this partnership arrangement, this executory arrangement, is ultimately to be applied to the remainder of the world.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does it also provide that the Du Ponts shall not sell in Great Britain?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. The Senator perhaps was not present when I read that part of the document virtually dividing the world into halves. I will read it again for the benefit of the Senator:

(a) Levinsteins shall have exclusive rights for the use, manufacture, and sale under its own and the Du Pont Co.'s patented inventions and secret processes throughout Great Britain, Ireland, India, and all British possessions, colonies, and dependencies (except Canada), France, Italy, Spain, Belgium, Holland, Portugal, Switzerland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, and nonexclusive rights throughout Canada and all other countries except those for which the Du Pont Co. is to have exclusive rights.

It is a partition of the entire globe. Just what the proportions are I have not attempted to calculate; I have not had time to do so; but the Du Pont Co. shall have exclusive rights as to its part and the Levinstein Co. shall have exclusive rights as to its part, subject to the executory contract to be drawn between them for dividing the spoils in China and Japan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I regret to say that I was not present when the Senator commenced reading the document, and I should like to ask him from what he is reading.

Mr. THOMAS. I will hand that portion of the document which I have read to the Senator so that he can see for himself, and I will proceed:

The contract between the Du Pont Co. and Levinstein (Ltd.) was signed by J. Amory Haskell, vice president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., and John B. Lonsdale, chairman, and Herbert Levinstein, managing director of Levinstein (Ltd.).

We now come to the contract for the alleged breach of which the suit was brought which exposed the whole thing to the public.

EDGAR LEVINSTEIN'S CONTRACT.

A second agreement made by E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. with Edgar Levinstein, of Boston, says in part:

First. The Du Pont Co. agrees to sell to Edgar Levinstein from time to time, to an aggregate amount of not more than 600 tons in each consecutive 12 months, such finished dyes as he may select, including synthetic indigo, of the standard types, shades, and strength as heretofore or hereafter established, if and as the same are prepared or manufactured and offered to the trade by the Du Pont Co. (or by any subsidiary now or hereafter to be organized by it) under the patented or unpatented inventions or processes heretofore or hereafter acquired by the Du Pont Co. from or through Levinstein (Ltd.).

Second. The Du Pont Co. further agrees to sell and deliver to said Edgar Levinstein such dyes as he may select and order f. o. b. cars at its works, Carneys Point, N. J., at the lowest net price current charged by Du Pont Co. or its subsidiary for the same article to its most favored customer in the United States (except subsidiaries or sales agency branches of the Du Pont Co.) less 15 per cent, which allowance of 15 per cent shall cover all expenses and profit of said Levinstein for handling said dyes purchased and resold.

Third. The Du Pont Co. further agrees that it will reserve for Edgar Levinstein from its manufacture and production of such dyes as aforesaid a supply of 600 tons in each and every consecutive 12 months, and that it will make every effort to enable said Edgar Levinstein to continue to supply the dyes aforesaid to the customers obtained by him in the United States while he was doing business under the name and style of I. Levinstein & Co. (Inc.).

It is that policy which the Du Pont Co. has declined to carry out. It is that contract the benefits of which it proposes to secure by the usual monopolistic methods—that is to say, by ignoring its covenants and defying the injured party.

The last page of this communication recites:

DU PONT CO. CHANGES.

In the reorganization of the Du Pont Co., C. W. Phellis, sales director of the explosives department, has been appointed general director of sales, which position carries with it the supervision of the various sales departments, each of which has its separate director. The new position has just been established by the new executive committee, and is one of great importance, in view of the rapidly increasing peace-time activities of the company's various departments.

Mr. Phellis has been with the Du Pont Co. since January, 1901, and has had wide experience with the sales department. For his first year and a half of service he was connected with the shotgun smokeless-powder division, with headquarters at Cincinnati. Then he was made a salesman in the explosives sales department with the Middle Eastern States as his territory. In 1906 he was made a district manager, with headquarters at Huntington, Pa. After 10 years of successful work in the district he was transferred to the Denver office as district manager, to take charge of the important sales work in the Rocky Mountain States. In November, 1918, he was again advanced, and went to Wilmington as the director of sales in the explosives branch of the Du Pont business.

I presume the significance of this change as regards the suit to which this document refers is that the new sales manager will be the representative of the Du Pont Co. in the absorption of the business of Edgar Levenstein.

Mr. President, just one word of comment. My information is the institution of this suit came at a most appropriate time. It immediately succeeds the letter of the publicity agent of the Du Pont Co. to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] yesterday placed in the RECORD, and which indicates the absorbing interest of the Du Pont Co. in the pending legislation, and virtually amounts to an assurance that unless the Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his objection to the bill the Du Pont Co. will withdraw its support of Gen. Wood; and what that support is, every Senator knows as well as I. This exposition of a step taken during the existence of the war, when the Allies were fighting for their lives, by which a great American monopoly combined with a great British monopoly to dominate the dye industry of the world, is, to my mind, convincing proof of the influences and the interests which are behind this bill, which initiated this legislation, which framed the language of the measure, which induced additions regarding license and embargo, and which depend upon this legislation as a valuable asset in the development of their ambitions and the accomplishment of their purposes.

Mr. President, if I am correct, it must follow that the remote purpose of this bill is little short of infamous, and that it should be rejected by the deliberate and indignant judgment of every Member of this body.

Mr. NUGENT obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McNary	Simmons
Ball	Hale	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Harding	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Capper	Harris	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Harrison	Nugent	Smoot
Colt	Henderson	Overman	Sterling
Comer	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Thomas
Cummins	Kendrick	Phipps	Townsend
Curtis	Kenyon	Pomerene	Trammell
Dillingham	Keyes	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fernald	King	Reed	Walsh, Mass.
Gay	Lodge	Robinson	Walsh, Mont.
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Glass	McKellar	Shields

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. DIAL] is unavoidably absent on important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, in my opinion the pending measure, which is commonly known as the dyestuffs bill, is one of the most important that has been considered by the Senate since I became one of its Members. I believe that the health of our people, the prosperity of our country, the very safety of the Republic, are inseparably connected with it.

At the time the so-called Longworth bill, H. R. 8078, passed the House and was presented to the Senate, it was, of course, referred to the Finance Committee. The acting chairman of that committee appointed a subcommittee for the purpose of holding hearings relative to the subject matter of the legislation. I was a member of that subcommittee, and the hearings held continued over a very considerable period of time and were exhaustive in their nature. Many witnesses were examined and a mass of documentary evidence was introduced.

I am candid enough to say that I entered upon those hearings prejudiced against the Longworth bill. As a Democrat, I was opposed to its high-protective tariff provisions and did not view its licensing features with very much favor.

It is true that I was entirely unfamiliar with the facts connected with the dyestuffs industry, and it was for that reason that I endeavored to retain an open mind in the matter. As the witnesses were examined and the facts were disclosed my prejudice was dissipated, and I concurred with the other members of the subcommittee in the unanimous report to the full Finance Committee recommending the passage of this bill, and the Finance Committee, with the exception of one member, ordered the favorable report of the measure now pending.

For the benefit of those Senators who are not familiar with the history of the dyestuffs industry, I shall endeavor to sketch it briefly. It appears from the hearings and from other sources of information that about 1865 the Germans embarked upon the manufacture of dyestuffs. The business gradually developed and expanded until it finally became a very important industry.

Some time prior to the war the dyestuffs industry of the world, to all intents and purposes, was controlled by six large German companies, which were known to the trade as the "big six." For a number of years those companies were in bitter rivalry. They were in keen competition with each other. They had agents not only in this country but in practically every other nation on the face of the earth. They endeavored by every means to put their competitors out of business. They engaged in price cutting; they engaged in dumping; they indulged in cutthroat competition, and in bribery and corruption, in order that they might accomplish their ends. The record in this matter demonstrates conclusively that there were tens of thousands of dollars expended in the United States by the different companies for the purpose of bribing and corrupting confidential employees of the textile manufacturers, particularly those employees who purchased the dyestuffs which were used by the firms they represented, and still more particularly the men who had absolute charge and control of the dyeing itself in the various establishments.

That condition continued for a number of years. Some time prior to the war, however, it ceased, in a large measure at least, and the six German companies were organized into two cartels, as they were called, and at the outbreak of the war they practically dominated the dyestuffs market, and, according to the record, it appears that when the war broke out they were manufacturing probably 90 per cent of all the dyestuffs consumed throughout the world.

They exchanged information, they absorbed losses, they divided profits, and they exerted themselves to the very limit of their ability and their influence to secure a monopoly of the dye and the chemical markets of the earth, and, as before stated, they succeeded to the extent of about 90 per cent of the consumption, so far as dyestuffs were concerned.

At this time those great dyestuff manufacturing companies have been organized into one great trust, known as the "I. G.," and they are supported by the German Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator state in what way they are supported by the German Government?

Mr. NUGENT. According to my information, Mr. President, that Government has guaranteed to the trust sufficient funds to enable it to pay all losses, or rather such losses as might be sustained in the effort to bring back to Germany the monopoly of the dye and chemical industry which was enjoyed prior to 1914.

About 1878, if my recollection serves me aright, certain Americans engaged in the manufacture of dyestuffs. It very rapidly developed into an exceedingly important industry, and about 1879 or 1880 there were nine flourishing dyestuff manufacturing establishments in this country.

The undisputed testimony of witnesses who were heard by the subcommittee demonstrates beyond peradventure of a doubt that the industry was killed in the United States because of a coalition entered into between certain of the textile manufacturers and the German dye manufacturers, acting through their agents in the United States, who were the dye importers. Those gentlemen did all they could to prevent the imposition of a sufficient tariff on dyes to protect the American industry, and about 1883 five American establishments were obliged to suspend operations.

In order that Senators may more fully understand the matter, I shall read a portion of the testimony of E. C. Klipstein, taken during the hearings before the subcommittee:

Mr. KLIPSTEIN. I have been in the business of importing dyestuffs in connection with A. Klipstein & Co., of New York, ever since 1880, beginning with the importation of dyes when there were not more than a dozen of them on the market, and I have been in that business ever since. For something like that same time we have been the agent of the Society of Chemical Industry, the Swiss manufacturers of dyes, and I have had the handling of all they produced in those 40 years. Consequently I know the importation side of the business pretty well.

I have been on both sides, and this whole thing, in my mind, comes down to two or three very simple propositions. There has been a great deal of talk and fuss made about all sorts of things—German influence, and this, that, and the other, but when we cipher it all down it comes to a very few plain propositions.

In the first place, you have got to take into consideration the fact that the buyer and the seller are natural enemies of each other. The man that wants to buy wants to get it as cheap as he can, and the man who wants to sell wants to get as much as he can. You have got it back in the Proverbs of Solomon: "It is naught, saith the buyer. Then he goeth away and boasteth thereof." It is the same principle; it does not make any difference who wants to buy dyestuffs, he is going to get them as cheaply as he can.

Senator NUGENT. And the man who sells them is going to get as much as he can.

Mr. KLIPSTEIN. He is going to get as much as he can, and he has to if he wants to live. He has to get enough to make a profit, or go out of existence.

What I was going to say is that when this class of business commenced prices were ten times higher than they are at present, and yet the consumer went on using them. They bought them and found a use for them at that time. Then the Germans—they are accused of committing a heinous crime by coming in here and trying to get things on the free list. But they understood human nature perfectly, and they used it. That is all you can blame them for. They knew that an American textile manufacturer wanted to buy—at that time the great thing was alizarin; he wanted to buy it as cheaply as he could get it. They had no influence with the United States Congress at all, but the Senators and the Representatives live in the different States, and the Germans simply went to those States and found the consumers in those States and said, "Look here; you go down to Washington; you can fix it up with your Senators and they will work for your interests." And they did, and the result of it was they put alizarin on the free list, and that was the first big dye that came in.

Other things followed in natural order ever since, so that when this war began 45 per cent of all the dyes were on the free list, and that 45 per cent included alizarin and all its products; it included indigo, but not the products of it, because they did not happen to be made by this German concern that had engineered this deal through its consumers. That was perfectly natural. You could not blame the Germans for doing it, and nobody else can blame them for doing it.

The final result was that we were in this position here: We had no raw materials at all. The raw materials for the dye industry are the products of coking. You make coke when you want to make steel. Now, in order to make these by-products, you have got to put up very expensive coke ovens. We could make coke over here without the coke ovens; we could just go and take an old beehive oven that cost hardly anything. But what was the use of making these by-products? You could not sell them if you made them. There was no industry over here to use them. England, France, and Germany were already producing all that the dyestuff industry could consume, and nobdy would think of going to work and putting in a coke oven to make these by-products, because it would not pay. They were not going to put money into a coke oven for nothing, just for the glory of having that stuff made here in the United States. The consequence was that when we came into the war we did not have any coke ovens, and we did not have any of these by-products at all.

Now, to illustrate what those by-products mean. I started into the manufacture of dyes about 35 years ago. I had to buy all the intermediates, so called, all these by-products; I had to buy them in Germany from the other dye makers. Well, I ran along for four or five years, and one lucky day for me the plant caught fire and burned down. I took the insurance money and put it in my pocket, very much to the disgust of the people we were employing; and I went over to Europe and looked around to buy the things that we had been making. I found that I could buy them—I figured it all out at the time—20 per cent cheaper than we could make them, and we could make them by the same processes as they. But, as you can very readily understand, the German dye maker was not going to sell raw materials to a competitor over here in the United States behind a tariff wall cheap enough to create competition.

Three or four other concerns kept on all those years, but I never heard of them making any money. The Schoelkopfs kept it up for the longest time, but I think it finally worried old man Schoelkopf to death.

It is true that when the war broke out in 1914 there were about six so-called dyestuffs manufacturing establishments in the United States, but they were not such establishments in the ordinary acceptation of that term, for the reason they were mere assembling plants; that is, they merely put together the intermediates that were imported from Germany. They employed all told somewhere in the neighborhood of about 500 men. To-day there are approximately 180 dyestuff manufacturing plants in our country.

I have already called attention to the fact that the German manufacturers at the outbreak of the war had a monopoly to the extent of 90 per cent of all the dyestuffs consumed in the world, and yet the value of those dyestuffs was only about $68,000,000. It is not the value of the dyestuffs themselves that is so vitally important, but it is the things that they go into, the things for which they can be and are used.

It may interest Senators to know that prior to the war the value of dyestuffs imported into this country from Germany was approximately $12,000,000. By the time those dyestuffs reached the consumers, the textile manufacturer and the manufacturer of leather goods, after having been assembled, after having the transportation charges on them paid, I apprehend, and after the payment of the charges of the importer, they cost probably $20,000,000. But those dyestuffs went into the manufacture of between three and four billion dollars' worth of goods in the United States, including leather goods of the value of about $750,000,000.

Senators will remember that when the war broke out Germany placed an embargo on the exportation of dyestuffs. She raised that embargo, however, within a very short period of time. That fact, however, made no particular difference so far as the general situation was concerned, because the allied blockade of Germany was sufficient to prevent the exportation of dyestuffs, and the result was that American manufacturers of textiles found themselves face to face with ruin. There were no dyes obtainable in this country. But American capitalists, American business men, came to the rescue. They immediately built plants and entered upon the manufacture of dyestuffs. The Chemical Foundation took over, by purchase from the Alien Property Custodian, about 4,000 patents for German dyestuffs that had been taken out in this country, so that the American dye manufacturer had from the very beginning those patents from which he could work in the manufacture of this vitally essential product.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NUGENT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. What became of those patents?

Mr. NUGENT. They are now the property of a corporation known as the Chemical Foundation.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know what was paid for them when they were sold under the alien-property act?

Mr. NUGENT. My recollection is—I am not certain in respect to this matter—that they were sold for $250,000.

Mr. REED. That was an American company?

Mr. NUGENT. That company is composed of Americans.

Mr. REED. And has those patents?

Mr. NUGENT. Yes.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NUGENT. I gather that one of the principal premises on which the arguments in opposition to the bill are based—and I gather this impression not only from speeches that have been delivered in the Senate, but from resolutions adopted by different commercial bodies and from newspaper statements—that there is a fear in the minds of a great many well-meaning men that if the pending bill becomes a law it will mean that the people of the United States will be unconscionably robbed because of the tremendous increase that there will be in the price of dyestuffs.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to ask another question?

Mr. NUGENT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator has stated that some 4,000 of the German patents which have been registered in this country have been sold. Did they embrace substantially all of the German processes?

Mr. NUGENT. I think they did. So far as the process itself was concerned, I think those patents set it out, but there were many things in connection with it that were not set out in the patents, and while it is true that the dye that was patented could be produced, it was in very small quantities, as there were certain steps in different processes that were not specified in the patents themselves and which our dye manufacturers could only ascertain after long months of experimental work.

Mr. REED. Just one further question, if the Senator will permit me. Have they now ascertained what those missing links or missing processes are?

Mr. NUGENT. In answer to the Senator's question I will say that to-day 90 per cent approximately of all dyes consumed in this country are of American manufacture. I will say, furthermore, that there are approximately 10 per cent of the dyes consumed in this country that are not now manufactured here. Those dyes are the particularly delicate dyes; they are dyes such as go into fine shirtings and things of that character, and notwithstanding the fact that very large sums of money have been expended in experimental work for the purpose of manufacturing those dyes, success has not yet attended the efforts of the manufacturers with respect to them to any very great extent, due to their lack of experience in dye manufacture and due to the lack of experience of their chemists. The Senator will readily appreciate the fact that those discoveries were due to research work on the part of German chemists that has extended over a period of 50 or 60 years.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator. I am asking these questions because I am honestly seeking light.

Mr. NUGENT. I understand.

Mr. REED. The Senator spoke of the expenditure of large sums of money in order to develop the industry and perfect the processes. Has the money been made back?

Mr. NUGENT. I apprehend that the manufacturers charge it to cost of production, but it has not been returned out of those particular dyes, because even now there are many of them that are not being produced in the United States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator stated that some 4,000 patents had been sold by the Alien Property Custodian to a corporation in this country for the very small sum of $250,000. I wish to ask the Senator if they were not sold to that corporation with a trust attached by which any American producer of dyestuffs might secure, upon complying with certain conditions and at a reasonable price, the use of any of those patents?

Mr. NUGENT. I will say to the Senator, in answer to that question, that I think he is substantially correct. In any event, any American manufacturer who desires to use one of these patents has the absolute right to go to the Chemical Foundation and secure the patent formula, whatever it may be. If I remember correctly, the stock of that corporation is distributed among the manufacturers of dyestuffs and chemicals throughout this country, not to exceed two shares of the voting stock to any particular individual or to any particular concern.

The officers of the Chemical Foundation, including the directors, are men of nation-wide prominence who volunteer their services. There is no salary paid to a man among them, according to my recollection. The principal reason that actuates those gentlemen, as I gather from the record, is to do all that it is possible for them to do to advance American interests by firmly establishing a dyestuff manufacturing industry in our country.

Mr. REED. The purpose of my question—and I say this lest I be misunderstood—is not to show that any concern in this country gained any special advantage, but to bring out the point that the use of these dye formulas is now available to some one in America at a very nominal price.

Mr. NUGENT. In order to illustrate the matter of the cost of these dyestuffs, I will say that one gentleman, who has been for many years the owner of a dyeing plant, testified before the subcommittee. On the particular day on which he testified I was wearing the coat and vest which I am now wearing. All of you, I presume, understand that it requires about 3¼ or 3½ yards of woolen cloth to make a suit of clothes for a man. This witness testified that the cost of the dye necessary to dye the 3¼ yards of woolen cloth that went into this suit of clothes is 32 cents. He also testified that the cost of the black dye necessary to dye a dozen pairs of cotton hose is 1¼ cents. So it will be very readily perceived that the cost of the dyestuff is ridiculously low; and I contend that, so far as the masses of the American people are concerned, it will not make a particle of difference to them if this bill become a law, as the cost of the textiles which they consume would not be increased because of the price paid for the dye entering into them. That cuts absolutely no figure at all.

It may also be of interest to you to know that although we had no dyestuff industry in America when the recent war broke out, in 1917 there were manufactured in the United States about 46,000,000 pounds of dyestuffs, and they were sold at an average price of about $1.25 a pound, or about $57,000,000. In 1918 there were produced in the United States approximately 58,000,000 pounds of dyestuffs, selling at an average rate per pound of $1.07, making an aggregate value of about $62,000,000.

You will realize the significant fact that the dyestuffs sold in 1918 were sold at a price about 20 cents a pound lower, on the average, than in 1917; and I have been advised that the dyestuffs sold in this country during 1919 were sold at an average price of about 85 cents a pound, which is a still further decrease. Mr. John P. Wood, of Philadelphia, one of the witnesses appearing before the subcommittee, and from whose testimony the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] quoted quite extensively, testified that there were certain dyes that are selling in the United States for a less price than they were sold before the war.

In order that you may have some idea of the tremendous importance of this industry, I desire to call attention to the following facts: There are 11,037 establishments in the United States, employing 1,070,460 people, which are directly dependent on dyestuffs; and there are 56,949 establishments, employing 1,037,183 people, which are indirectly dependent on dyestuffs.

There was a time a few months after the outbreak of the war in Europe when, because of lack of dyestuffs, there was a very strong probability that several millions of our people would be thrown out of employment. That probability appealed with such tremendous force to Count von Bernstorff, who was the German ambassador to this country, that he wired his Government on March 13, 1915, to that effect. It appears that he took that action in the belief that there was such a dire and crying need for dyestuffs here that, rather than have our factories closed and millions of people thrown out of employment, the American Government would take such action as might be necessary to induce Great Britain to permit free access to Germany and her markets and permit Germany to trade with the other nations of the earth, or, in any event, to cause Great Britain to lift her blockade to such an extent as to permit the exportation of large quantities of German dyestuffs.

Mr. President, there are now about $200,000,000 invested in the dyestuff manufacturing business in America; and I desire particularly to impress this fact upon the minds of Senators: The consumption of dyestuffs in this country is approximately 30,000 tons per annum, and the importation of that quantity of dyestuffs from any nation or all other nations will, to all intents and purposes, destroy the industry here.

I contend, with all the vigor of which I am capable, that it is vitally necessary to the well-being and prosperity of our country that there be an uninterrupted and adequate supply of dyestuffs for use in the manufacture of textiles, etc., and that if that supply is at any time or for any reason cut off, not only will the textile manufacturer face ruin but the cotton grower and the wool grower will likewise be disastrously affected, except in the event the people consent to wear white clothing only.

There is another matter to which I desire to call attention, which, in my judgment, is very important: Germany's condition of terrible preparedness at the outbreak of the war was based primarily on her dyestuffs industry. The hearings disclosed, and it is a conceded fact, that great quantities of chlorine and phosgene are used in the manufacture of dyes. It is also a conceded fact that many of the constituent elements entering into high explosives are derived from the dyestuffs industry. T. N. T. is a by-product obtained from the manufacture of certain dyes, and picric acid is manufactured by the same processes and out of the same materials, up to the very last step in the operation, as is the well known dye, sulphur black.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator has said that if there are any dyestuffs imported from abroad that means the destruction of all the American institutions engaged in making dyestuffs. The Senator did not tell us why.

Mr. NUGENT. Perhaps I did not make myself clear. What I intended to say was that 30,000 tons of dyes are adequate to supply the needs of our people for the period of one year, and that if that quantity of dyes came into this country, in sufficient variety, of course, it would be sufficient to cause the dyestuff manufacturers in the United States to close their establishments because, as a matter of course, they would have no market for their product.

Mr. REED. Exactly; but they would have the same market that the 30,000 tons that came in would have, and all the domestic manufacturers would have to do would be to meet the price of the foreign product, and then the 30,000 tons of foreign dyes could not be sold. Are there anywhere in the world 30,000 tons of dyes to be shipped here and take our market? Why is it that our manufacturers can not compete?

Mr. NUGENT. If the Senator will bear with me for a short time it is my purpose to discuss that matter in some detail.

Mr. President, there can be no question in respect to the matter of which I am about to speak. The record clearly discloses that, so far as the dyestuff manufacturing establishments of Germany are concerned, they are absolutely intact; they were not injured in any way, shape, or form during the war; and they are even now in a condition to commence production in quantity lots. Bear in mind, furthermore, and at all times, that Germany furnished 90 per cent, approximately, of all the dyestuffs consumed in the world at the outbreak of the war.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NUGENT. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like the Senator to say whether the statement I have often seen published is correct, to the effect that the Germans did not allow any of their chemists to engage in actual warfare, but held them all at home to carry on in the most energetic manner the famous investigations which they had been conducting before the war?

Mr. NUGENT. I have just reached that point in my discussion.

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not mean to break in upon the sequence of the Senator's argument.

Mr. NUGENT. It appears from all the evidence taken by the subcommittee, from the testimony of naval officers, from the testimony of Army officers, from the testimony of some of the most distinguished chemists in the world, that one of the primary things in which we should be interested is the training of an adequate number of efficient chemists. The remarkable achievements commercially and in war of the German Empire were due very largely to the 30,000 highly trained, splendidly efficient chemists that she had, a very large proportion of whom had for years been engaged in research work in the dyestuffs manufacturing establishments.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator intend to answer that part of my question concerning the action of the German Government in relieving their chemists from service in the army? Does the evidence disclose that to be the fact?

Mr. NUGENT. According to the hearings, a chemist in Germany is considered a very highly important personage; according to the testimony of witnesses as dislosed by the record, there were about 30,000 chemists in Germany at the outbreak of the war; and the services of those men were considered so vitally necessary and of such an essential character by the German Government that they were withheld from all service in the trenches, and, as a matter of fact, remained in the rear, and during the war were engaged in experimental and research work to advance the interests of the empire.

Mr. RANSDELL. So that there are practically as many, if not more, chemists in Germany now than there were when the war broke out, so far as the evidence discloses?

Mr. NUGENT. I should naturally assume that that statement is correct.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony given before the subcommittee by Maj. Gen. W. L. Sibert, Director United States Chemical Warfare Service. I read now from page 10 of the hearings:

> Gen. SIBERT. I have been very much impressed during the war by a statement which I read somewhere that every great chemical industry was a potential arsenal. If you examine the products of any large chemical plant you will find that some one or other of its products is necessary in the production of high explosives, toxic gases, medicines, or some other substance essential in war. This is more nearly true in the dyestuffs industry than in any other industry. In the destructive distillation of coal incident to the manufacture of dyestuffs we find that certain products are obtained which are essential to the manufacture of high explosives. Five of our most important gases have, as one of their constituent elements, either a by-product or an intermediate product formed in the manufacture of dyestuffs.
> We found in the beginning of this war that only about 30 per cent of the ovens engaged in the production of coke were using the by-product method. During the war that increased to 50 per cent—that is, we were utilizing and saving at the end of the war about one-half of the by-product from the destructive distillation of coal in the manufacture of coke, and 50 per cent of it was still going to waste and not being used.

Germany, as I understand, furnished about 90 per cent of the dyestuffs of the world at the beginning of this war. That meant that she had available all the material that she could possibly utilize in the manufacture of high explosives for shells; it meant that she had available all the material she needed in the manufacture of certain gases—in the manufacture of many of her dyes she utilized chlorine, which is not a direct product of the distillation of coal, but is essential to the dyestuffs industry. Chlorine is the basis of more than half of our gases; and the five I mentioned must have as an element one of the direct products of the distillation of coal.

One may readily see, therefore, that a nation which has no dye industry is weak in high explosives, weak as to its capability to manufacture gases, medicines, and many other products. This Nation was especially weak in this respect at the beginning of the war.

The value of these great chemical plants is threefold: First, the phase that I have covered; second, the plants themselves are of great military value, because nearly all of them can, with slight changes, be made to manufacture things needed in war; and, third, the plant personnel is a great war asset.

After the spring drive of the Germans in 1918—which, by the way, almost defeated the Allies through the unexpected use of gas in quantities that had never been dreamed of before—it was decided to increase by 800 per cent our program in the manufacture of mustard gas in this country. Col. Walker, who had charge of our gas production division, held a meeting at Baltimore, at which I was present, to determine how we could meet the situation. Mustard gas is made from salt, sulphur, and alcohol—that is, these are the basic materials used in the manufacture of this gas. We found that we could get the sulphur, and we could make the chlorine and we could get the alcohol, but when the question was put up to manufacturers as to the actual making of mustard gas none of them wanted to attempt it, because they said they had no trained personnel. They did not have men who had the necessary experience to justify their attempting to make such a dangerous substance. So the Government concluded that it would have to make this material itself. However, later on two or three manufacturers decided to try it. I mention this experience to show the value that such personnel would have in this country. If we had great chemical industries, such trained personnel would be always available.

Senator WATSON. Does the manufacture of mustard gas have anything to do with the dyestuffs industry itself? In other words, is there any relation between those two industries, aside from personnel?

Gen. SIBERT. Not directly.

Nevertheless, in the manufacture of many of the dyes chlorine is essential, which would mean that chlorine plants would have to be developed in our country along with the dye industry.

Senator WATSON. To what extent did our dye industries in this country manufacture high explosives at the close of the war that were used in warfare?

Gen. SIBERT. I can not give you the figure, but it was an immense amount, and it met the situation at the close of the war. We were meeting the situation then.

Senator WATSON. That is to say, you were supplying the demand of the American Expeditionary Forces?

Gen. SIBERT. We had plants and had started production that would do it.

Senator WATSON. How soon?

Gen. SIBERT. I think you better ask the Ordnance Department that question. I can answer that question with respect to gas better than I can with respect to high explosives.

Senator WATSON. Very well; what do you say about it with reference to gas?

Gen. SIBERT. We were manufacturing gas at the end of the war faster than Germany, England, and France all put together. We did not have the projectiles in which to put this gas, but we shipped to France nearly 4,000 tons of gas in containers that went into shells that were made in France and England, and we got our shells from France primarily.

Senator WATSON. Was that gas made in the dye plants in the United States?

Gen. SIBERT. No, sir.

Senator WATSON. What is the relation, then, between the manufacture of dyes and the manufacture of gas?

Gen. SIBERT. Five of our gases have as one of their constituent parts material produced in the manufacture of dyestuffs. In the preparation of toxic gases, high explosives, and dyestuffs up to a certain point the same substances are produced. The process, in other words, is the same up to this point when these substances become the raw materials used in the production of either a toxic gas, a high explosive, or one of the dye materials, as the need may be. The dyestuff industry, therefore, may be said to furnish the necessary ingredients for either toxic gases or high explosives.

Senator SIMMONS. A chemical plant furnishes the material and then you use that material so as to produce high explosives or gas; is that it?

Gen. SIBERT. Yes. The distillation of coal or of coal tar produces materials which are constituents of gases, of high explosives, or of the dyes. Toluol is an example of such a material. This is one of the principal ingredients used in making such an explosive as T. N. T., which we had adopted for use in our shells.

I now desire to call attention to the testimony of Admiral Earle, commencing on page 13 of the hearings:

Admiral EARLE. My name is Ralph Earle; I am Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, and have been since December, 1916.

Senator WATSON. You may proceed with your statement.

Admiral EARLE. Mr. Chairman, I have been asked to explain what influence the protection of the dye industry would have upon the production of explosives, etc., in time of war. As Gen. Sibert has stated, a large number of explosives depend upon coal tar and its derivatives for their main body. Practically all the substances that we use in our high explosives work, for loading shells, loading our torpedo war heads, and loading our mines, depend upon the nitration of some form of these distillates.

During the war we used as much toluol as could be obtained, but the production of that material was not sufficient, so that we were led to adopt other substances, one of which was xylol; but the main reason why we were short in this country, or one of the main reasons, and I think the main one, was the fact that we had no well developed dye plants in existence. Had we had such plants in existence we would not have been forced to build plants during the war, at a tremendous expense to the Government and at great loss of time, in order to produce toluol and xylol, not to mention phenols and various other substances.

Senator WATSON. In other words, if we had had a dye industry at that time it would not have been necessary to build special plants to make that product; is that it?

Admiral EARLE. Well, it would take only about three weeks to convert the most of the dye-making industries of the country directly into war use, and, of course, without building plants. The Navy had to build one for the manufacture of xylol—one alone, and the Army helped and encouraged everybody to produce a larger amount of toluol from illuminating gas, etc.

Time is a very important element in these things, I mean in reference to war. Of course, we had time in this last war; there was no invasion of our country threatened at any time, and therefore we had time to do it. But from the standpoint of national defense we do not think we ought to be put in that position again, and I think it would be wise in time of peace to have industries fostered in this country, by regulation or otherwise, so that we would be ready at any time in the future.

As to the present situation, the war having concluded, these war plants must, quite naturally, go out of existence, and the only way to get distillation of by-products, etc., including coal tars and gases, and increase production in this country, is by protecting the dye industries.

Again, Admiral Earle says, on page 15:

Of course, to develop a dye industry would give you a large body of trained men, who are essential from the standpoint of military and naval preparedness. For instance, you must have them if you are going to develop plants for either the manufacture of gas or explosives. You must have trained and experienced men for that purpose.

Again, on page 16:

Senator NUGENT. Is there any reason why the governmental institutions can not continue in being; that is, any particular reason?

I referred there to the plants that had been constructed during the war for the manufacture of gases, and so forth. The Admiral replied:

There will be no incentive to manufacture or to increase distillation of toluol and xylol, for instance, if they are not wanted.

Senator NUGENT. Can not they be stored?

Admiral EARLE. No, sir; there is no way we can pay for it or have them stored.

Senator WATSON. Is that all you have to say, Admiral Earle?

Admiral EARLE. There is only one more point. I have brought out two points, but want to call attention to another point, and that is the fact that the industry is of——

Senator SIMMONS (interposing). Before you leave that let me ask: You say the Navy had to build these plants?

Admiral EARLE. Yes, sir.

Senator SIMMONS. How long did it require you to build and equip these plants?

Admiral EARLE. Well, it took us a little over a year to get the xylol plants going in the Navy. The toluol that we had been able to obtain up to that time had been sufficient; and the xylol plant came into production in time, which was one year.

Senator NUGENT. Well, do the constituent elements of those high explosives, etc., you have mentioned deteriorate if they are kept for any length of time?

Admiral EARLE. Not necessarily so; no, sir.

Senator NUGENT. Could not they be stored in containers after having been manufactured in one of these Government plants?

Admiral EARLE. Yes, sir. What was left we have stored, of course.

Senator NUGENT. Could not they be manufactured in such quantities in these Government plants as to supply what might reasonably be determined to be a sufficient quantity to meet emergency?

Admiral EARLE. That could be done, yes, sir; there is no doubt about that. But, of course, a great many of the plants—and I am speaking of the one the Navy built more particularly—that has been dismantled already and its machinery diverted to other uses.

Senator NUGENT. Then it is your judgment that, so far as the manufacture of these various elements that enter into high explosives, etc., is concerned, the Government could manufacture them at the plants which are now in existence, or which were in existence at the close of the war, and that the matter of their manufacture is not solely dependent upon the dyestuffs industry?

Admiral EARLE. No, sir; not wholly. Of course——

Senator SIMMONS (interposing). Aren't you dependent upon the dyestuffs industry for your basic material?

Admiral EARLE. We are dependent upon it for our chemists and trained men.

Again:

There is only one other point I wanted to speak about, and that was that the manufacture of dyes is a very intricate chemical work, and in its manufacture it calls for men of the very highest skill and chemical knowledge, and in that way it tends to research work and a study in many abstruse and intricate problems, which will be covered by having a large body of chemists engaged on the subject, a service we could not hope to obtain in any other way. But, having in this country a basic industry like the dye industry, these men will naturally be lined up with the industry and available on call.

I also desire to refer to the testimony of Col. Fries, commencing on page 25. Col. Fries was Chief of the Chemical Warfare Service of the American Expeditionary Forces throughout the war, with rank in the latter part of the war and until afterwards of brigadier general. Col. Fries was asked by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] whether or not he had had any experience in gas prior to the time he went to France in July, 1917, and he replied:

I had not. When they made me Chief of the Gas Service we had no masks over there, we had no gases, we had no determined policy as to masks or other defensive appliances or gases, and we had developed no trained personnel.

I desire at this point to call attention to the fact that all of these gentlemen frequently refer to the supreme importance of a trained personnel, made up of trained chemists, men who have had years of experience, men who are thoroughly familiar with research work, men who are continually engaged in experimental work along chemical lines generally. Here is the third witness who has laid stress upon the vital necessity for having a trained personnel in this country, particularly for preparedness purposes, and each and every one of them is of the unqualified opinion that that trained personnel can be developed only through the medium of a dyestuffs industry.

I continue to read from the testimony of Col. Fries, page 25:

The first thing done was to get masks, because we had 10,000 or 12,000 troops within 30 or 40 miles of the German lines without masks and without any training in other gas defensive measures. We adopted the English type of mask, which, in a measure, was adopted a little before, and efforts were being made in this country to produce them. We immediately ordered 100,000.

I immediately set to work to get a trained personnel, and that was throughout the war one of my most difficult problems. We could not get chemists enough even at the end of the war. We finally got a general order issued in the A. E. F. to have every man with chemical training reported to us, and we made every effort to get each of them into the Chemical Warfare Service. It was very difficult to get them many times, as many of them did not want to change the service they were in, while the commanding officers of many others did not want to let them go. In that connection we only wanted about one out of four of the Chemical Warfare Service officers as chemists, because a great deal of the training and a great deal of the questions of supply and many other questions could be handled by men who were not chemists—better if they were chemists, but even at that we could not get them.

As an example of the difficulties we had with the question of personnel, I desire to state that during the last week in December or the first week of January, 1918, we received a cable from the United States requesting that we send a half dozen expert glass blowers to the United States to make the glass-lined shell needed for certain tear gases. I took it up with the French at once, and they said, "We can not do it; we have not got enough trained men of our own. But if you will send technical men over here we will put them into our factories and research laboratories, or any other place, and train them." We cabled back promptly for 50, so that we could put them into the French factories. To that we got no answer. We cabled again, but we never got an answer and we never got the men. They were just as short over here.

That, to my mind, is one of the most serious problems connected with this dyestuff industry or any industry that will build up the chemical industry and provide us with a trained personnel for war. You can not train a chemist in six weeks, six months, or a year. We had to have men who were experts. If the Germans put over a new gas or if they used an old gas in a new way, or used a new mixture, we got hold of the "duds" or unexploded shells and opened them—which we had trained men to do—and we rushed them to the laboratory. There we made an investigation to see if there might be a new gas, and if it turned out to be a new gas we tried to find out methods to protect ourselves against it, because various gases have various effects on the human body, as they also have varied abilities in going through the masks.

Senator WATSON. How many different kinds of gases did the Germans employ?

Col. FRIES. I do not know; probably 15 or 20. They made a great many experiments on us, and toward the last when they began to run a little short of supplies we figured out they were using anything in that line they could get hold of. But their dye industry afforded them plants and personnel that put us at a terrible handicap; for instance, they began using mustard gas on the nights of the 12th and 13th of July, just a month before I arrived in France. I made a visit to the British gas headquarters, which was close to where they first used the gas, on August 25, 26, and 27, 1917.

The British were terribly worried over this mustard gas. They had some 20,000 casualties within six weeks, and they did not know just what they were going to do. But they knew within 48 hours what the gas was by opening shells and testing their contents, and they found where Victor Mayer gave a description of how he made it in 1886, and they knew the old German method of making it, and they knew the general symptoms it produced in the human body, because Victor Mayer had stated that he stopped experiments because it produced the same effect on the men experimenting with it as it did on animals.

We cabled back right away to start investigations as to the quantity of glycol chlorhydrin that could be gotten in this country, that being one of the essential elements needed in the manufacture of mustard gas by the only method then known.

The Germans produced this in their big plants, I think probably for photographic and similar supplies more than in the dyestuff industry; and they proceeded to make their glycol chlorhydrin by that method.

Senator WATSON. Was that related to or did it grow out of the dye industry in Germany?

Col. FRIES. I imagine it grew out of it. There is another very important point right here; that is, the discovery of mustard gas was made by one of the great chemists undoubtedly while investigating dyestuff materials.

We have got to depend in the future on research men in the colleges and in the great laboratories of manufacturing plants and other places for the discovery of new things. The Government can not afford to build up and maintain a big enough research institution for that purpose.

Let me say, by way of digression, that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] during his discussion of this bill evidently took the same position I took when I entered upon the hearings in this matter. The Senator from Colorado, if I remember correctly, made a statement to the effect that it was not necessary to build up the dyestuffs industry for the purpose of training chemists; that that work could be done by the Government at a far lesser expense.

I entertained the same view, and I sought to weaken the statements made by the witnesses before the subcommittee and endeavored to demonstrate what I at that time believed to be a fact, that a separate department, if necessary, could be established at the Military Academy and the Naval Academy for the purpose of educating chemists. The witnesses, of course, agreed that it was possible to do that. Dr. Bogert, a chemist of international reputation, stated, however, that it required six years to graduate a chemist after a boy left the high school, and all of said witnesses testified, in substance and effect, that it was not the education of the chemist that counted for so much as it was the continued research and experimental work after graduation. As a matter of course, when the facts were presented it at once became plain to me that the mere education of a chemist could not accomplish the result desired; that in order that he keep up with the times, keep abreast of conditions, it was imperatively necessary that he be engaged in some industry which would enable him to prosecute research work.

Col. Fries continues:

Just as in ordnance, where perhaps two-thirds of all inventions come from men in civil life, just so we must expect our progress in chemical warfare to come in the future, because there will be a thousand men in these plants to one the Government can afford to maintain.

Senator WATSON. Have you any idea how many expert chemists were at work in the dye plants of Germany seeking to discover new methods of manufacture of dyes or some of the constituent elements of dyes?

Col. FRIES. I have no idea. Those figures are probably available. They undoubtedly had a very great many.

But they took these dye plants and converted them right into poisonous-gas plants. I want to give you a few more facts about mustard gas.

Dr. STEPHENS, of the Federal Health Service. May I interrupt? I understand they had 1,500 expert gas men, well-trained doctors of philosophy in the universities and technical high schools.

Col. FRIES. We could not manufacture mustard gas by the German or glycol-chlorhydrin process, because we did not have the production of those essential materials; neither could the French or British, because they had not the production of those materials in the dyestuff industry. So all three nations started out to develop a new process. We manufactured ours eventually by the sulphur monochloride method, which does not depend very greatly on dyestuff materials. Since we had to build our own plants, we lost 11 extremely valuable months. When the great German drive started in the latter part of March, 1918, I have not any hesitation in saying that 5,000 tons of mustard gas would have absolutely stopped them—yes; 1,000 tons probably would have stopped them—but we did not have it, and neither did the British or French have it. We did not have any mustard gas until June, 1918, 11 months afterwards. During that time there were probably over 300,000 casualties caused among the British, French, and Americans by that one gas alone. We had to develop an entirely new method. But the first efficient development of that new sulphuric monochloride method was in a French chemical plant, the Usine du Rhone, where I think they made dyestuffs.

Again:

Senator NUGENT. Then the mustard gas manufactured by the Government of the United States was not only a better gas, if I may use that word, than that employed by the Germans, but it was not dependent upon the dyestuff industry for its constituent elements?

Col. FRIES. I do not know that it was a better gas, but we were dependent on the chemists who had been in the chemical industries and, as I say, we lost a year of extremely valuable time because we did not have that knowledge and trained personnel to start in with, and that is where we would be in another war if we did not have a big industry which could furnish this personnel, plants, and material.

Senator NUGENT. Then, as I understand you, it was merely a question of personnel?

Col. FRIES. It was a question of plants, also; because all these plants had to be built. We have, for instance, at Edgewood, a 100-ton chlorine plant available—25 tons were operating, 25 tons were all ready to put into operation, though held up because we got our gas production ahead of the production of shells—and another 50-ton chlorine plant ready.

If there had been enough peace-time uses for chlorine the Government would not have had to build a 100-ton chlorine plant to furnish chlorine.

Then, of course, in the future there are two or three gases that may become equally important with mustard but which were not used in this war by us because we could not get around to making them. Moreover, we did not develop—neither did the Germans—efficient ways of putting them over. They put over a gas in 1917–18 that went through our masks like water through a sieve. We spent some exceedingly anxious months in 1918 endeavoring to develop a method of stopping that gas, though, fortunately, the Germans never succeeded in putting it over in sufficient quantity to be troublesome. We learned how to put it over in sufficient quantity, and we were afraid they would learn how to do it first. That gas, which is well known, may have a very great use in the future. One of its main constituents is a product of the dyestuff industry. Moreover, that series of gases is apt to be more greatly developed than any other.

Other military witnesses testified along the same line, but I shall not take up the time of the Senate by reading the testimony of those gentlemen, as I think I have already read sufficient to demonstrate absolutely the vital necessity of the establishment of a dyestuff industry in this country on a firm and enduring basis, in order that we may be prepared, in a measure, at least, to defend ourselves should another war come upon us, which I fervently hope will not happen.

I now desire to call attention to another branch of this subject, that relating to chemistry generally, and medicines, and I shall read a portion of the testimony of Dr. Bogert.

At the time of the hearing Dr. Bogert was professor of organic chemistry in Columbia University, also senior professor of the chemistry department. He had been president of the American Chemical Society for two terms; president of the International Chemical Society; a member of the Raw Materials Division of the War Industries Board; organized the division of chemistry and chemical technology of the National Research Council, with its 32 divisions, and remained its chairman until he entered the Army. He had been consulting chemist for a number of the Federal departments. Also a member of the United States Board on Gas Warfare from its organization to its disbanding. He was appointed a lieutenant colonel in the Army, chief of the Chemical Service section, being acting director of the Gas Service in this country until the organization of the Chemical Warfare Service under Gen. Sibert, at which time he became a full colonel in the Army and remained such until his honorable discharge in May of last year.

Dr. Bogert said:

The dyestuff industry is tremendously important, but it serves to supply the necessary material for these collateral industries, notably the drugs, the canning materials, and photographic materials. May I illustrate that to show how these different lines are locked up together and to what extent they are dependent upon the dyestuff industry?

I might say, in the first place, that the extensive distillation of coal tar is dependent primarily upon its demand in this industry. When tar is heated for distillation and these various products pass through, they are separated by fractional distillation, taking the temperature up to a certain temperature and then changing the receiver, and the tar is first separated into the rough portions and then each one distilled, and that process is carried on until we get certain material, and each one of these materials, like benzol—I am embarrassed by the amount of material I have to draw upon for illustration—that benzol can be converted into a host of other materials; that is, into what is known as phenol, known to the layman as carbolic acid. That carbolic acid is then treated with a dilating acid and converted into a compound, one of which through a series of processes becomes phenacetin, a drug we are all familiar with. Or, if that carbolic acid is subjected to another treatment, if it is dilated still more, it becomes a nitric or sulphuric acid, and then it is converted into a picric acid, a powerful explosive; and the picric acid is also developed through a series of processes to become chloro-picrin, one of the poisonous gases used on the western front.

If the carbolic acid is treated in a little different way, if it is chloroformed, it is converted into a substance known as salicylate fluorid. And by the use of a sodium and acetic acid there is derived a valuable perfume known as coumarin, which is the base of many of our best perfumes, particularly the new-mown hay—which is as near as it gets to new-mown hay. On the other hand, if that is treated with carbon dioxide, which is taken from the air, it is converted into salicylic acid, which may be developed into aspirin, which we were in need of and could not develop, and Gen. Ireland, the Surgeon General of the Army, will tell you that if you ask him.

And so I might go on and elaborate and extend this story out; but I am taking only one of a host of materials. Each one of these cases, as I could show you, is dependent upon an interlocking and interrelated to the coal-tar industry, out of which Germany has made its great profit; the coal-tar industry is the way Germany has opened the way to her dye trade. And Germany has recognized that in its contribution, not only in chemistry but to the advancement and security of her industry and civilization, there is no more potent factor than a well-developed dyestuff industry.

Senator WATSON. In other words, it has taken years of research to bring about the present situation.

Dr. BOGERT. Forty years they have been working at that problem over there, and have been able to look up the various lines of the product so that one material goes on to another.

Senator WATSON. But the basic industry of all is the dye industry.

Dr. BOGERT. The dye industry is the basic industry of all; and it was the necessity for these dyes, Mr. Chairman, which was responsible for all kinds of developments, not only in applied sciences but in pure science itself.

Again, on page 41:

One or two questions have also been asked here concerning the direct dependence of gas upon dyestuffs. I would like to point out, as I have already pointed out, that chlorine is a very essential ingredient, and is, in fact, the backbone of most of our toxic gases; and that it was the development of the dyestuff industry which provided Germany with an immense amount of chlorine, particularly of liquid chlorine, which she had, and which she was in a position to use at the time of the first gas attack, which was at the beginning of the second Battle of Ypres, on the afternoon and evening of the 22d of April, 1915.

They had, in the second place, phosgene, of which Col. Fries has spoken, which was a common product of the German dyestuff industries, because they were using phosgene for the synthesis of certain important dyestuffs and intermediates. An important intermediate which is known as Mechler's ketone, for example, is the basis of at least a dozen valuable dyestuffs. Phosgene was also being used as the basis for the synthesis of certain useful synthetic drugs. In the case of mustard gas, these dyestuff factories had also prepared what was known as chlorohydrin, which Col. Fries has also mentioned. So they were ready in a moment to start in to make mustard gas by that process. It was the presence of these dyestuff industries with their large personnel which made possible these things which, if we had had them, would have saved American lives in the early days of our participation in the war.

A complete dyestuff industry needs an enormous staff of research men. It has already been pointed out that in the case of the Badische, which is one of the largest concerns on the other side—the Badische and the Elberfeldt being, probably, the two largest—an enormous number of research men are necessary. In the Badische, for example, there were before the war probably in the neighborhood of from 500 to 1,000 university-trained men, Ph. D. men, men of the highest kind of training. For us before the war to have produced that number of men over here would have meant the output of at least five years of all the Ph. D. graduates of chemistry in the country.

It is that reflex action of the industry upon the whole field of synthetic organic chemistry, with which all of these things are locked up, which means so much not only to our lives and happiness, but to the security of the whole Nation. It is that with which I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, and which brings me here to testify in the hope that I may be able to convince you and the other members of the Senate committee and enable you to see this imperative need as I see it for the development of a full-fledged synthetic color industry in this country.

Again, on page 43—

At the beginning of the war we figured that we had about 15,000 trained chemists in this country. According to our information Germany had in the neighborhood of 30,000 skilled chemists ready to carry on this work. Those men, if we are correctly informed, were maintained as the last line of reserve by the German general staff; they were kept back of the lines; they were kept at work there because it was felt that they were of the utmost importance to the safety of the country.

Again—

The importance of research to this kind of work, where we are dependent upon trained men, can not be overestimated. The wars of the future—my military colleagues will disagree with me, perhaps, on this—are going to be determined more and more in the laboratories, and scientific research institutions of the country, by the scientists of the country, and unless we are in a position to meet those weapons with similar weapons or adequate means of defense, we are absolutely at the mercy of the other nation.

It is perfectly possible at any moment for a scientific organic chemist, in the quiet of his own laboratory, to discover a new gas which, in point of toxicity, will surpass anything we now have and which will go through the masks of any other nation. If he does that the armies of the other nation are absolutely at our mercy. That is what I mean by "research." To that extent we are dependent upon the maintenance of an adequate supply of men of this type.

I also request the consideration of Senators of the testimony of Dr. Stieglitz. At the time he testified Dr. Stieglitz stated:

I am professor of chemistry at the University of Chicago and chairman of the department at the university. I have been chairman of the committee on synthetic drugs of the National Research Council during the war, and am still chairman of that. For 15 years I have been connected with the council of chemistry and pharmacy of the American Medical Association.

I am here to-day to tell you the relation of the synthetic drug work to the dye industry. As chairman of the committee on synthetic drugs of the National Research Council I had to find out what drugs were absolutely necessary and could not be obtained during the war in this country and to determine which men in the country could manufacture such drugs and help them develop methods for preparing these drugs.

Senator WATSON. This organization of which you speak was a war organization?

Dr. STIEGLITZ. Yes; a war organization—the National Research Council.

As a result of that experience I have come to the conclusion that we would have saved a great deal of suffering and a great many lives in this country if we had had an organic chemical industry, as they have in Germany, before we started in the war.

This organic chemical industry involves three branches—one, the explosives and the poison gases, which are used only in warfare; the second, the dyes; and, the third, the synthetic drugs and synthetic medicaments and related finer organic chemicals, such as photographic developers and the like. The bulk of the work in peace times must be in dyes, because we require huge quantities of dyes; but, in my judgment, the really important feature of the synthetic work is in the synthetic drug line, because that involves the health and the future of the people of the country. It requires, however, the materials that come with the manufacture of dyes, it requires research facilities, and it requires the research men that we can get through a thriving dye industry.

Each citizen of this country, I imagine, spends not more than 50 cents or a dollar a year on dyes. He spends quite a little more on synthetic drugs, and his health and the health of his family are involved. That is a far more vital question, and I think I can do best by giving you a specific illustration of the development of two or three drugs in this country, especially of arsphenamine, 606, or salvarsan—three different names for the same product. As you know, this is a specific for the cure of syphilis, and it is insisted on by the physician and by the patient.

Even before we started in the war importations were prevented, and the demand was so enormous that for a time absolutely fancy prices were paid for the drug. As soon as it was seen that there would be such a shortage some of the research chemists of the country started preparing arsphenamine, and the results at first, following the patent specifications, were so poor that some of these men thought of appearing in court to have the patents annulled, stating that the product could not be prepared according to the patent specifications. That was wrong: one can prepare arsphenamine according to patent specifications, but just about enough to look at, not enough to use. It is altogether a question of yield.

Again, on page 52:

This drug is exceedingly poisonous. It is injected directly into the veins of the patient, and unless it is quite pure it is likely to lead to severe reactions and even to death. Government control was instituted at an early date, and the maximum toxicity which was permitted to go into trade was 60 milligrams; that is, about a grain for 2 pounds of white rat. That was the original quality of the American product.

The German product sold before the war—that is, before 1914—at $3.50 a dose. The first price fixed by the Federal Trade Commission was from $1 to $1.50 a dose, which showed already the tremendous advantage of American manufacture.

In the course of these two years the following developments have occurred: In the first place, the purity of the drug has risen to such an extent that the official standard instead of being only 60 is 100 milligrams, which is over a 50 per cent improvement. But, as a matter of fact, the American brands run now from 120 to 130. There is practically none on the market now that will not run from 120 to 130. That is twice as good as it was originally. That is the result of research work of about a year and a half. In the second place, the drug is now being sold wholesale to hospitals at 60 cents and I was told this noon some even at 30 cents a dose. That, of course, means that the drug is from five to ten times as cheap as it was before 1914, and the blessing to the country can not be overestimated.

Again, on page 53, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] asked:

Is there enough being made in this country to supply the home demand?

Dr. STIEGLITZ. I think there is enough made even to supply the markets in South America, Mr. Chairman. One manufacturer can make in one day some 15,000 doses.

Senator WATSON. What has the manufacture of this drug to do with the dye industry in this country at this time? How are they related, if at all?

Dr. STIEGLITZ. The original crude material should come from the dye manufacturers.

Senator WATSON. You now get your crude material for the manufacture of salvarsan from the dye plants?

Dr. STIEGLITZ. From the dye or coal-tar plants. In the second place, one of the most successful large productions has been carried out by a manufacturer who has had dye-making experience. He has put it on a large scale, producing from 8,000 to 15,000 doses in a day, in a room smaller than this one here.

I would like to turn to a second drug, procaine, or novo cocaine. During quite a long period in the war we had no local anesthetics for our hospital work in surgery—that is, anesthetics injected under the skin for local operations, and we had what we called among ourselves "Bulgarian" operations; that is, operations without anesthetic, throwing us back some 50 to 70 years in civilization.

Senator WATSON. You mean by that that you had no cocaine?

Dr. STIEGLITZ. Very little; and cocaine is exceedingly expensive. This drug procaine, or novo cocaine, which is a substitute for cocaine, is manufactured from coal-tar products. It is better and less dangerous. The injection of cocaine occasionally causes death—a few cases, but sufficient to make the doctor often unwilling to use it unless he is absolutely compelled to use it.

* * * * * * *

The third drug that I would like to mention is atophan. That is the sovereign remedy for gout.

* * * * * * *

Now, I want to make two points, to draw two lessons from our experience with synthetic drugs. The first is this: It is only a question of time until we can succeed in solving all the intricate problems connected with any compound whatsoever, whether it is a drug or a dye. Probably it would take only two years with any individual dye, which would be my estimate, to produce it in quantity, so that we could even export it. The difficulty with the manufacture of dyes is that there are not half a dozen dyes, as there are essential drugs, but a large number. They can not take hold of them all at the same time; they must solve one problem after another. But taking up one problem after the other, I think it is probably a matter of only two or, perhaps, three years on an average before production on a commercial scale can be successful.

* * * * * * *

The second lesson I want to bring out is this: If we have brought into being a sovereign remedy for syphilis; if we can at least remove the pain of gout; if we can produce a local anesthetic better than cocaine; if we have in quinine a natural drug and specific for malaria—then we have every reason to believe that with proper research we will find remedies for the other great diseases from which humanity is suffering, notably tuberculosis, pneumonia, and cancer. Those are the three great diseases which, with syphilis, cause the greatest loss of life.

In fact, we already have something for the pneumococcus externally; for instance, in a pneumococcus infection of the eye. If we had had a remedy like arsphemanine for pneumonia during the influenza epidemic, we would probably have saved from 100,000 to 150,000 lives in this country alone.

That means that there is a tremendous amount of most important research necessary to develop new remedies, and that research can be stimulated best, I think, through a thriving commercial industry in fine organic chemicals like the dye industry. That will give us the resources; it will be a going thing. We will have the output of the dyes, and as an additional gain for the country we will have this research work. We will have research work not only on dyes, which will be valuable, but research work on medicaments, which I think will be invaluable, of far greater value than any work on dyes, no matter how great the income therefrom may be. That is the way I look at the future.

Such work is going on now, but in order to find a remedy you have got to have concentrated effort. The more workers there are, the quicker we will get the result. For instance, I find people now saying, "If we had only had arsphemanine 10, 15, or 20 years ago, how many lives we could have saved, how much suffering we could have prevented." The only way to accomplish this is to intensify research, to have a great many more men working than we possibly can have at present. Every year saved means lives saved and suffering saved and the Nation put on a better footing.

Now, Mr. President, it is a well-known fact that each dye that is manufactured is the product of many separate and distinct steps or operations, and in each of those steps not only is the material desired obtained, but material that is not desired. When the fact is taken into consideration that thousands and thousands of distinct and separate dyes are manufactured and that from each one of those dyes there are certain by-products produced from every single step and operation in the process of their manufacture, the further fact will be appreciated that there is an inexhaustible field for research on the part of chemists. In view of the tremendously important materials that have been discovered during the past quarter of a century because of the research work conducted in the dyestuffs industry, no man can say what the future may have in store, either from a preparedness standpoint or from a commercial standpoint, or from the standpoint of drugs. I have long since reached the conclusion that nothing is longer impossible; and, provided we continue the dyestuffs industry in the United States, knowing as I do that American chemists can not be excelled by the chemists of any other nation on the face of the earth, I shall not be surprised if within the next few years, as a matter of fact and as Dr. Stieglitz hopes, a cure shall be found for cancer, for pneumonia, for tuberculosis, and for other dread diseases which occasion the greatest mortality in this country.

There is another thing in connection with this matter to which I invite attention: We are indebted to the coal-tar industry for many of the constituent elements of high explosives, for certain poisonous gases, for photographic materials and commodities of similar character, also for tar, for materials used in road building, for pharmaceuticals, for waterproofing, and for many other articles of commerce.

The record also discloses, Mr. President, as I have heretofore stated, that the German dye-making establishments are in perfect order; that they are in a position almost immediately to proceed with quantity production. At the time the hearings were held the statement was made—and was not contradicted—that even then Germany was shipping dyes to Brazil and to Spain, and I was advised recently—whether correctly or incorrectly I do not know, and I have failed to secure official verification of the rumor—that an investigation of the licenses issued by the Rhineland Commission showed that during the past several months Germany has exported about 10,000 tons of dyestuffs.

The testimony taken by the subcommittee is decidedly unsatisfactory with regard to the dyestuff situation in Germany at the time the hearings were held. The statements made concerning it were based very largely on rumor. One gentleman asserted that he had been informed by somebody that, as a matter of fact, there was no accumulation of dyestuffs; another gentleman testified that he had been informed by a French officer of the army of occupation that there were 250,000 tons of dyestuffs stored in the interior of Germany. I am candid enough to say to the Senate, as I said in the committee, that so far as I am personally concerned I do not believe that there is a large accumulation of dyes in Germany. I do not believe it, because of the fact that practically all of the dye-manufacturing establishments are within territory which has been occupied by allied forces since the armistice was signed, and it is a certainty that prior to that time those factories were engaged in the manufacture of the constituent elements of high explosives and in the manufacture of poisonous gases. So I very much doubt that there is now, or was at the time of the hearings, any great quantity of dyes in Germany.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NUGENT. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator was a member of the subcommittee before which the witnesses who were presented on behalf of the proponents of this measure testified. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the witnesses whom they brought before the committee, in the beginning of the hearings at least, all represented to the committee that after full and thorough investigation it was well established that there was in Germany at that time a great accumulation of dyestuffs already prepared and awaiting the termination of the embargo in order to flood this market?

Mr. NUGENT. In answer to the Senator, I will say that there were certain witnesses who, if I remember correctly, testified that that condition existed. Their statements were based largely on hearsay, and I am very strongly inclined to the belief that as a matter of fact no such condition did exist.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree with the Senator that it has been thoroughly disclosed since that no such situation exists; but the point I am trying to bring out is whether, in their efforts to secure favorable action from the committee and from the Congress, it was not persistently recommended to the committee holding these hearings that investigations had been made, and that these great stores of dyestuffs, ready to be dumped upon this market, were in actual existence in Germany.

Mr. NUGENT. There is no question that that was the situation believed to exist, and I do not doubt that the gentlemen who so testified were acting in absolute good faith in the matter. I disagreed with them, however.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not impugning their good faith at all; but I wish to ask the Senator further if the committee, in the favorable consideration that it gave to this proposition, was not largely influenced by these representations that have since turned out to be unfounded?

Mr. NUGENT. I can not say that the committee was largely influenced by reason of those representations. I am very strongly of the opinion that those representations did have some effect on all of us, and that there was a disposition on the part of certain of us not to take any chances for fear that as a matter of fact that situation did exist. So far as I am personally concerned, I am frank enough to say that I was actuated by that fear in a measure. I believed that the conditions were such that I could not afford to take the chance that the situation portrayed by some of the witnesses prevailed in Germany. Furthermore, I believed from the testimony of the witnesses, taken as a whole, that it is a matter of supreme importance, not only from the standpoint of the health of our people but from the standpoint of the prosperity and security of the Nation, that a dyestuffs manufacturing industry should be firmly and enduringly established in this country in order that we might not ever again be placed in the precarious position from an industrial and a preparedness and a medicinal standpoint that we occupied at the outbreak of the war.

Mr. SIMMONS. In all of those considerations I entirely agree with the Senator. I simply wanted to develop the fact that those representations were made and believed; but I think it is now thoroughly understood that those representations were not based upon the actual facts with reference to the amount of dyestuffs in Germany that were available for importation into this country.

Mr. NUGENT. I am strongly inclined to agree with the Senator in the latter part of his statement.

I shall now read from the testimony of Dr. Herty, who visited Germany in an official capacity for the purpose of securing certain dyestuffs which were to be distributed, if I remember correctly, under the direction of the reparation commission and through the medium of the Textile Alliance of the War Trade Board. Dr. Herty said, on page 186:

I would like to submit for insertion in the record two rather startling things. One you have doubtless seen before. The other I have seen no discussion of in this country. It is in regard to the capital being invested in Germany in two lines. The one article appeared in the New York Times of December 8, an article by George Renwick, from Berlin, regarding the enormous expansion of the capital of the dye plants of Germany.

(The article referred to is here printed in full as follows:)

"GERMAN DYE TRUST TO FIGHT FOR WORLD TRADE—DOUBLES ITS CAPITAL AND WILL PRODUCE NITRATE.

"[By George Renwick.]

"BERLIN, December 1.

"The firms composing the German dye trust have decided to increase their capital to an extent without parallel, I believe, in the history of German industry. The trust, which consists of three great and four minor concerns in the industry, valued at, roughly, 15,000,000,000 marks, is extending for two reasons: It is determined to reassert German supremacy in the dye industry; in the second place, there is the question of nitrate, so important for the agricultural life of the country.

"The trust is aiming at making the fatherland independent of foreign supplies and to increase production so that it will be able to export large quantities.

"Before the war the seven main concerns which form the industry were constantly drawing closer together. The Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik of Ludwigshaven linked up with Elberfelder Ferbstoffwerke, while the Hoechster Farbwerks, the third of the large concerns, came to similar agreement with Messrs. Leopold Cassella & Co., of Frankfort-on-Maine, a private company. With the first-mentioned combine the Anilin-Fabrikation of Treptow entered into trust relationships shortly afterwards. In 1916 these five firms were joined by the Griesheim Elektron and Weilertermeer companies. In 1917 the three leading companies each increased its capital from 54,000,000 to 90,000,000 marks.

"The six public companies are now not only going to double their capital to 716,800,000 marks, but will also issue preference shares to the value of 286,700,000 marks to the holders of the ordinary shares. As only a quarter of the amount of the preference shares is to be called up, and as the holders will have a double vote, control of the trust, with a nominal capital of 1,000,000,000 marks, will be in the hands of the old shareholders, who exercise that authority by virtue of having paid a little more than 70,000,000 marks for their preference shares. By this it is hoped to keep out all foreign influence.

"With this vastly increased capital the trust will at the earliest moment begin a vigorous onslaught in the markets of the world.

"The trust also intends to pay particular attention to the production of nitrate. Before the war Germany's agriculture required 222,500 tons of nitrate, half of which came from Chile, but the trust calculates that, as soon as the whole of the present and projected plant is working, there will be something like 250,000 tons for export."

And let me say, parenthetically, that the testimony shows that the Badische plant alone during the war produced nitrates sufficient in quantity to make up the amount lost because of failure to secure importation into Germany of the nitrates theretofore had from Chile.

I also read a translation of an article appearing in the Cologne Gazette, November 16, 1919, to be found at page 188 of the hearings:

[From the Koelnische Zeitung (Cologne Gazette), Nov. 16, 1919.]

INCREASES OF CAPITAL IN THE CHEMICAL INDUSTRY.

The extraordinary (special) general meeting of the Dye Works, formerly Meister Lucius and Bruening, in Hoechst-on-the-Main, in which 26 stockholders represented 45.14 million marks of capital stock, sanctioned the proposed increase of the original stock from 90 to 252 million marks by the issuance of 90 million marks of original (common) stock and 72 million marks of 3½ per cent preferred stock with double voting power. The new common shares are being taken over by a group of banks at 107 per cent and are offered at the same rate to the old shareholders. The preferred stock is being exchanged within the group of those interested (or community of interests). The board of management in rather lengthy arguments established the necessity for the financial measures of the community of (combined) interests and then remarked apropos of the present daily business routine of their own enterprise that this, on account of the scarcity of coal, was not satisfactory. The works have for weeks been shut down for the most part, yet they have succeeded in keeping the pharmaceutical plants in operation. Similar conditions are to be found in the case of the other firms in the group of combined interests. The management nevertheless believes that it is possible to hold out the prospect of the declaration of a moderate dividend under certain circumstances by making use of the reserve amassed earlier. If the coal famine is eliminated and railway traffic should improve, there is hope, in view of the whole market and world situation, that satisfactory, if not large, earnings would be realized. For technical reasons Dr. Walter von Bruening and Dr. Adolf von Bruening retired from the board of overseers; they are to be elected members again later.

At the extraordinary general meeting of the "Badische Anilin und Sodafabrik" (Baden Aniline and Soda Factory) in Ludwigshafen, in which 14.97 million marks of capital stock were represented by 68,292 votes, the proposed increase of capital stock from 90 million marks to 252 million marks by the issuance of 90 million marks of common stock and 72 millions of 3½ per cent preferred stock was sanctioned unanimously. The common stock is being taken over by the Deutsche Bank as the leader of a group of banks and is being offered to the old stockholders at 107 per cent in such a way that for every 1,200 marks of old stock the same amount of new stock can be acquired. In other respects the conditions of issuance for both kinds of stock agree with those of the other companies in the group of combined interests.

The extraordinary general meeting of the "Chemische Fabrik Griesheim-Elektron" (the Chemical Factory Griesheim-Electron) in Frankfort-on-the-Main, in which 14 shareholders represented 6,524 votes, likewise sanctioned the proposed increase of the original capital stock from 25 to 45 million marks and the issuance of 18 million marks of 3½ per cent preferred stock. The new common stock is being taken over at 107 per cent by a group of banks under the direction of the "Bank für Handel und Industrie" (Bank for Trade and Industry), Branch Frankfurt, and is being offered to the old shareholders at the same rate. In regard to the business situation the management states that, so far as it can be surveyed at the present time, an unfavorable result is to be expected in consequence of the difficult conditions generally known. The management nevertheless hopes to be able to make declaration of a dividend, although not so high as those in previous years, under certain circumstances by making use of former reserves.

(Translated by J. P. Hoskins, E. B.)

I also read what purports to be a translation of an article printed in the Frankfurt Nachrichten (the Frankfurt News) of October 28, 1919, under the caption "Doubling of capital in the explosive group," to be found at page 189 of the hearings:

[From the Frankfurt Nachrichten (Frankfurt News), Oct. 28, 1919.]

DOUBLING OF CAPITAL IN THE EXPLOSIVE GROUP.

The German explosive companies combined in the Rhine-Siegen group in common with their Hamburg Kartell (confederated) Works, are proposing to double their capital stock. Concerned are the Cologne-Rottweil Stock Co. (capital stock 33,000,000 marks), the Rhine-Westphalian Explosive Stock Co. (capital 13,000,000 marks), the Siegen Dynamite Factory in Siegen (capital 600,000 marks), and the Dynamite Stock Co., formerly Alfred Nobel (capital 36,000,000 marks). All these companies are doubling their capital stock and issuing the new shares at the rate of 110 per cent. The reasoning for this runs as follows: The concerns are in need of very considerable new means in order, in view of the extraordinary high prices, to carry through the important program of transformation already set on foot and further in order to be able to acquire the plants necessary for the development of the concern.

(Translated by J. P. Hoskins, E. B.)

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call attention for a moment to the size of some of the German dyestuffs manufacturing establishments that were not injured in any way, shape, or form during the war—the dye plants that up to 1914 produced practically 90 per cent of all the dyestuffs consumed in the world. I read from an article appearing in a publication known as the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), purporting to have been taken from the report of the Alien Property Custodian, page 12:

It will be noted that all of these establishments, with the single exception of Berlin, are concentrated in a narrow strip of territory near the Rhine and its tributaries. Their growth may be illustrated by a few figures as to two of the largest. Hoechst was organized in 1863, and started with 5 workmen. By 1880 it employed 1,800 workmen and 57 chemists, using 1,840 horsepower. It then produced 1,750 different colors. In 1912 it employed 7,680 workmen, 374 foremen, 307 chemists, and 74 engineers, and used 30,000 horsepower. The number of colors reached 11,000. The works of the Badische, which was organized in 1865, covered, in 1914, 500 acres, with a water front of a mile and a half on the Rhine. There were 100 acres of buildings, 42 miles of railway within the works, and the power plants comprised 368 steam engines and 472 motors; 11,000 workmen were employed, and the company was capitalized at 54,000,000 marks.

Incidentally, let me say that I was advised a day or two ago—whether correctly or incorrectly I have no means of knowing—that a statement was recently published in a Berlin paper to the effect that at that time there were twenty-four thousand and some hundred workmen employed in the Badische plant and 850 chemists.

Mr. President, it is contended that there is absolutely no necessity for the enactment of this legislation, because of the alleged fact that Germany is in no position to supply dyes in any very considerable quantities to this or any other country. It is asserted very vigorously, and I agree with the contention, that there are not, as a matter of fact, any large quantities of dyestuffs stored in Germany. Such dyes as will be exported will be manufactured after this time, in all human probability, as I am quite inclined to believe that the quantity manufactured heretofore has been, comparatively speaking, small.

Those of us who favor this legislation are not doing so in the belief that our dyestuffs industry will be destroyed this month unless this bill is enacted; we are not doing so in the belief that it will be destroyed next month, or in six months. But if the other Senators who are supporting the bill view the matter from the standpoint from which I do, they are supporting it because they believe it is a matter of prime necessity that this industry shall be firmly established in the United States, and that the only way in which that can be done is to prevent, for a specified time, the importation of dyestuffs into the United States in the event similar articles or satisfactory substitutes therefor are being manufactured here.

That Germany will be in a position in the comparatively near future to produce a sufficient quantity of dyestuffs to enable her to again take her place as the monopolizer of the world in that very necessary article is, in my judgment, beyond question; she is in that position.

I have in my hand a copy of a circular letter bearing date March 22, and sent out by St. John Perret, chief of the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State. It reads as follows:

Pursuant to the terms of an arrangement which is now in contemplation between the allied and associated Governments and the German Government under the provisions of paragraphs 2, 3, and 5 of Annex VI of part 8 of the treaty of peace with Germany, Germany agrees to deliver for a period of five years from stocks to be produced by her, beginning May 1, 1920, dyes and intermediates used in the manufacture of dyes in quantities sufficient to satisfy the total bona fide requirements of the respective allied and associated countries for domestic consumption irrespective of whether or not these requirements are in excess of 25 per cent of the German daily production.

Senators will remember that under the treaty Germany was to place at the disposal of the reparation commission 25 per cent of all dyes manufactured by her for the period of five years, commencing, if I remember correctly, with the 1st day of January of this year. Evidently, from this letter, there is to be a revision of the treaty provision in respect to dye matters, and I will say that I have been advised that such revision was agreed upon by a subcommittee of the reparation commission, and I have been further advised that it was approved by the commission itself, and a statement was read yesterday to the effect that such approval was given over the protest of the American representative.

Every man familiar with this industry knows that Germany, because of the intimate knowledge of the manufacture of dyes, because of the fact that she has experienced chemists and workmen, has at all times been in a position to manufacture dyestuffs more cheaply than any other country on the face of the earth, and I do not entertain the most remote doubt that she is in that position to-day.

What is the situation, according to this letter? The German Government agrees, beginning August 1 next, to furnish all dyes and the intermediates which enter into the composition of dyes sufficient to supply the bona fide requirements of all of the allied and associated powers for a period of five years. Of course, Mr. President, if that agreement has been entered into, it necessarily follows that a certain proportion of those dyes will be turned over to American consumers. It also means that upon the proclamation of peace, when the war legislation will be wiped off the books, when the War Trade Board and its rules and regulations relative to the importation of dyestuffs cease to exist, the consumers of dyestuffs in this country will be at liberty to import from Germany, or from any other country manufacturing dyes, all they desire. Regardless of their actual requirements, no matter whether they desire a supply for six years or for six months, they will be entitled to bring it into the United States upon the payment of certain charges, in the nature of tariffs, under the law of 1916.

What will that mean? I have already pointed out that it is a conceded fact that 30,000 tons of dyestuffs will meet our consumption needs for the period of 12 months, and I again make the assertion that if that quantity of dyestuffs, in sufficient variety, is brought into this country our dyestuffs industry will again be killed.

It is true, Mr. President, that the dyes which are being manufactured to-day in the United States are the same dyes that are being manufactured in Germany, because in very large measure the dyes being produced in this country are being produced in accordance with the specifications contained in the German patents which were taken over by the Chemical Foundation.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

Mr. NUGENT. There are certain dyes, however, about 10 per cent of those used, which are not now being manufactured here, notwithstanding the expenditure of large sums of money in experimental work in that behalf, but they will be made here eventually, and they can be manufactured in Germany now, and if the agreement outlined in this letter is carried out the consumers in the United States of those particular dyes can, as a matter of course, secure all they desire, sufficient to supply their needs for years, by paying the tariff provided by the act of 1916 plus the amount of royalty fixed by the Chemical Foundation. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has in his last statement covered a point I was going to suggest, that in addition to the tariff duties now in existence, the manufacturer of all these dyes will be required as well to pay whatever royalty or imposition the Chemical Foundation, as the owner of these patents, may see fit to impose.

Mr. NUGENT. That is true. But, Mr. President, that fact cuts absolutely no figure, in my judgment. The imposition of no tariff, the imposition of no royalty, will protect the industry in this country for this reason: It was stated by witness after witness during the hearings that he did not care what rate of tariff was imposed on dyestuffs being imported into the United States. They do not, because they would pass along that tariff to the ultimate consumer, and then some, in amount sufficient to permit them to undersell their competitors in the European markets.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Did not those insistences regarding the ability or the purpose of dye consumers to obtain these dyes, if possible, regardless of the amount of duty, apply to the small class of dyes included in the 10 or 15 per cent which are not manufactured here?

Mr. NUGENT. That, Mr. President, is true in a measure, although the statement was general and included all dyes. It is that comparatively small percentage of dyes which is particularly desired.

It developed during the progress of the hearings that nearly all dyes sold in this country are bringing a much higher price than before the war. In other words, every consumer of dyestuffs in the United States is now obliged to pay a considerably higher price for them than he was compelled to pay when the war broke out, and a higher price than would be charged by a German manufacturer to-day, in my judgment.

To proceed with this letter:

In making deliveries under the terms of this arrangement, Germany will give priority to the needs of the allied and associated countries over the needs of every other country, but due consideration will be given to the requirements of the German textile industry. The dyes and intermediates delivered by Germany under the terms of this arrangement will be invoiced at prices which will not exceed the lowest prices quoted, article for article, by Germany during the month of delivery to any other purchaser, German, neutral, or allied.

I state again, Mr. President, what I have heretofore said, that it is a fact that Germany can manufacture these dyes at a much lower cost, and has manufactured them at a lesser cost, than it was or is possible for an American manufacturer to make them for. Therefore, Germany will be able to dispose of her dyes to the consumers in this country at a considerably lesser figure than they can purchase those same dyes for from American producers, and a large number of American consumers will, of course, buy where they can buy the cheapest.

The letter proceeds:

Under the terms of the contemplated arrangement, the allied and associated Governments will give assurances to the German Government that the dyes and intermediates delivered to them under the terms of the arrangement will not be reexported as such. If the arrangement is completed all stocks of dyes and intermediates produced by Germany, beginning May 1, 1920, will be subject to the option of each allied and associated country to the extent to which those stocks may be required to satisfy the requirements of each allied and associated country.

In order that Germany may be apprised of the dyes and intermediates which the allied and associated countries will require to satisfy their requirements for domestic consumption, and in order that Germany may enter upon the production of those particular dyes and intermediates, the allied and associated Governments will immediately furnish to Germany a program of manufacture detailing the kinds of dyes and intermediates and the quantities of each which each allied associated country will require to satisfy its own particular requirements.

The United States has already furnished a list of dyes which will serve as a basis for production by Germany of dyes required by consumers in this country.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator if there is anything in that agreement which relates to the price that is to be paid?

Mr. NUGENT. Nothing that I am aware of, except that the price shall be the lowest price quoted to any other country, even to the German textile manufacturers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is in accord with the requirements of the treaty.

Mr. NUGENT. I apprehend that that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NUGENT. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I understand what the treaty provides, but I should like to see whether it accords with the Senator's idea. My recollection is that the treaty provides that this cost to our Government, for instance, or any other allied or associated power, shall not exceed the lowest price at which Germany offers the dyes or quotes the dyes to any other manufacturer or any other country, including her own people. Is that correct?

Mr. NUGENT. That is it in substance.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that that in substance is the agreement.

Mr. NUGENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. Perret continues:

It now becomes necessary to furnish immediately to Germany a similar program of manufacture covering the intermediates used in the manufacture of dyes, which will be required to satisfy the requirements of users thereof in the United States.

Accordingly, you are requested to advise the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State, on or before the 31st day of March, 1920, of the kinds and quantities of German intermediates which will be required by you for your own consumption during the six months' period beginning August 1, 1920, and ending January 31, 1921.

I will say, in relation to that particular paragraph, that under the rules and regulations promulgated by the War Trade Board there can be imported into this country dyes in sufficient quantity to satisfy the needs of a particular consumer for a period of six months only.

It is regretted that so short a period of time is accorded to you for reporting your requirements, but inasmuch as the arrangement referred to above will be discussed by the allied and associated Governments and the German Government during the first week of April, the program of manufacture of intermediates must be cabled to Paris not later than April 1, 1920.

August 1, 1920, has been selected as the date on which the period for consumption shall begin to operate on the assumption that Germany will be able to manufacture within the two months' period beginning May 1, 1920, and ending July 1, 1920, such quantities of the necessary intermediates as will be required to satisfy the immediate requirements of users thereof in this country. Should Germany be in a position to make earlier deliveries from stocks, the production of which will begin May 1, 1920, the initial date of the period of consumption will be advanced correspondingly.

In reporting to the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State the German intermediates which will be required by you to satisfy your requirements for consumption for the six months' period, you are requested to limit yourself to those intermediates which are not obtainable from United States sources on reasonable terms as to price, quality, and delivery.

The program of manufacture to be submitted will not constitute orders or obligations on your part to accept any part of your estimate.

If, and as soon as the representatives of the allied and associated Governments and of the German Government agree to the arrangement referred to above, you will be advised of the fact by the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State in order that you may avail yourself of the opportunity thus created to satisfy your requirements from that source.

The War Trade Board Section of the Department of State will continue to license the importation of intermediates of German origin when the same are not obtainable from United States sources on reasonable terms as to price, quality, and delivery.

Very truly, yours,

ST. JOHN PERRET,
Chief War Trade Board Section,
Department of State.
By C. S. HAWES.

The bill, Mr. President, is not directed against Germany alone, but is directed against all nations in which dyestuffs are manufactured. The subcommttee, by a unanimous vote, recommended the enactment of the bill now before the Senate in the belief, as I said, that it is vitally important from very many standpoints to establish a dyestuffs manufacturing industry in this country, and the full Finance Committee adopted the recommendation of the subcommittee.

Section 504 of the pending bill is the all-important one, and it provides, in substance, that no dyestuff shall be imported into the United States during the period of three years, unless the Tariff Commission shall determine that the particular dyestuff or a satisfactory substitute therefor can not be obtained here on reasonable terms as to price, quality, and delivery.

Mr. NORRIS. May I interrupt the Senator again?

Mr. NUGENT. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not been able to be in the Chamber all the time during the Senator's discussion, and it may be that he has answered the question I rose to ask. If he has and will so state, it will be satisfactory. This idea has occurred to me from what the Senator said.

Suppose we pass the bill and the dyestuffs are kept out of the country, and, for instance, England or some other country—but taking England as an illustration—should take her share of the dyestuffs that Germay may furnish and use them and thus enable her then to supply the clothing or the material or the shirting or the hosiery—whatever it may be—upon which the dyestuffs are used and send them into this country. In order to protect the American manufacturers would it not be necessary practically to place an embargo on such materials as come from other countries that had been treated with German dyes?

Mr. NUGENT. No; I think not, for two reasons——

Mr. NORRIS. Would there be any danger of such a condition existing?

Mr. NUGENT. I do not think so. In the first place, under the law of 1916, if I remember correctly, a duty is imposed on certain textiles. Cotton and wool are on the free list, but there is a duty on very many of the manufactures of cotton and of wool.

In the next place, the pending bill only prohibits importation into this country of dyestuffs when the same article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is manufactured in America, so that if the article, the particular dye or dyes desired by the consumer, or a satisfactory substitute therefor, is not manufactured in this country he is at liberty to import such quantity as will satisfy his needs for a period of six months. In addition to that, even though the dyes that he desires or satisfactory substitutes for them are manufactured here, if they are unobtainable by him on reasonable terms as to price, quality, and delivery, he is entitled to import.

Mr. NORRIS. That last provision would probably fix it all right, but who would determine what would be reasonable terms and a reasonable price?

Mr. NUGENT. The Tariff Commission will administer the law. I know that some Senators take the position that that is an unsatisfactory arrangement. I am aware of the fact that some dye consumers contend that it is entirely unsatisfactory, that no man or body of men should be permitted to determine whether an article which they desire is manufactured in this country, or whether a satisfactory substitute for that article is manufactured in this country. But I submit that we must trust some one. Every law must be administered by some man or some body of men. It may be the Attorney General, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, or the Tariff Commission, or the Federal Trade Commission. Furthermore, I desire to say that no monopoly, in my opinion, can be created in this country in the manufacture of dyestuffs under the provisions of the pending bill unless the members of the Tariff Commission, who are to administer the law, permit it to be organized or created, and I am firmly convinced that the members of the commission will not do that.

Mr. President, on May 20, 1919, President Wilson delivered a message to the Congress relative to a number of important matters, and included among them is a recommendation with respect to the enactment of legislation for the protection of the dyestuffs industry. I ask that there be printed, without reading, the first and second paragraphs on page 8 of the President's message, both of which paragraphs relate to the dyestuffs industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Without objection, leave is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

There is, fortunately, no occasion for undertaking in the immediate future any general revision of our system of import duties. No serious danger of foreign competition now threatens American industries. Our country has emerged from the war less disturbed and less weakened than any of the European countries which are our competitors in manufacture. Their industrial establishments have been subjected to greater strain than ours, their labor force to a more serious disorganization, and this is clearly not the time to seek an organized advantage. The work of mere reconstruction will, I am afraid, tax the capacity and the resources of their people for years to come. So far from there being any danger or need of accentuated foreign competition, it is likely that the conditions of the next few years will greatly facilitate the marketing of American manufactures abroad. Least of all should we depart from the policy adopted in the tariff act of 1913, of permitting the free entry into the United States of the raw materials needed to supplement and enrich our own abundant supplies.

Nevertheless, there are parts of our tariff system which need prompt attention. The experiences of the war have made it plain that in some cases too great reliance on foreign supply is dangerous, and that in determining certain parts of our tariff policy domestic considerations must be borne in mind which are political as well as economic. Among the industries to which special consideration should be given is that of the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals. Our complete dependence upon German supplies before the war made the interruption of trade a cause of exceptional economic disturbance. The close relation between the manufacturer of dyestuffs, on the one hand, and of explosives and poisonous gases on the other, moreover, has given the industry an exceptional significance and value. Although the United States will gladly and unhesitatingly join in the program of international disarmament, it will, nevertheless, be a policy of obvious prudence to make certain of the successful maintenance of many strong and well-equipped chemical plants. The German chemical industry, with which we will be brought into competition, was and may well be again a thoroughly knit monopoly capable of exercising a competition of a peculiarly insidious and dangerous kind.

Mr. NUGENT. The Council of the American Chemical Society, representing more than 15,000 chemists from every State in the Union, held a meeting at St. Louis, Mo., on April 13 and adopted certain resolutions in which they earnestly urge that the Congress of the United States enact the pending bill. I ask that the resolutions be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

The American Chemical Society, through its representative council, urges upon our Senators the necessity of prompt passage of the Longworth bill in the form reported by the Senate Finance Committee. Under the absolute protection afforded by the blockade of German ports and encouraged by the favorable legislation of the preceding Congress, the coal-tar chemical industry has grown by leaps and bounds, but to meet the unusual competition threatened from the present unified German industry far greater safeguards must be established than were formerly considered necessary. The delay in enacting such legislation has caused the withholding of large amounts of capital and the creation of an atmosphere demoralizing to research and to the technical development of the industry. We feel that the fate of this industry lies now with the United States Senate, and we urge the enactment of the bill as originally reported to the Senate by its Finance Committee, convinced that this legislative support will speed the industry's complete development, thereby assuring American consuming interests freedom from outside domination and providing a powerful factor in national defense.

CHAS. L. PARSONS, Secretary.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, it is contended that no disastrous results will flow to the men in this country who have invested $200,000,000 in the dyestuffs industry, even though this bill were defeated, even though no legislation were enacted to give them protection aside from that afforded through the medium of a tariff. It is contended by some people that even though the doors were thrown wide open to the importation of dyes from other countries into the United States in sufficient quantities to supply all our demands American textile manufacturers would not purchase them. I should like to believe that that is a fact, but I do not believe it is.

We must judge the future by the past, and the undisputed testimony in this matter shows beyond question that certain of the textile manufacturers of the United States did, as a matter of fact, enter into a conspiracy with German dye manufacturers in 1882 to destroy the dyestuffs industry in this country. They succeeded in their efforts in that direction, and they have seen to it that it has since remained dead.

To-day there are certain of these dye consumers who are pursuing precisely the same policy that was pursued in 1882 and 1883, and in the years that have since intervened. They are doing all that lies in their power, through the adoption of resolutions and otherwise, to induce Members of Congress to vote against this bill. In other words, I am entirely convinced that certain of those gentlemen believe that it is vital to their interests to kill this industry in order that they may be enabled, without restraint of law, to purchase their dyes at a lesser price than they are obliged to pay to American manufacturers.

Permit me to say, parenthetically, that I hold no brief for the manufacturers of dyestuffs. The only interest I have in this matter is that of an American citizen. I am fully conscious of the fact that there are many most estimable men in the Congress who disagree with me in toto so far as my conclusions concerning this legislation go. I am not criticizing them. They are honest men; they are good Americans; and they, as a matter of course, have the same right to their opinions as have I. But I am entirely convinced that it is absolutely necessary to see to it that this industry is not destroyed, in order that we may never again be placed in such a position as we occupied in 1914, and I am willing to go to very considerable lengths to see to it that the view I have just expressed is carried out.

Now, Mr. President, it may be said that my statement relative to the attitude of certain textile manufacturers toward this bill is rather broad in its scope, and that it is based entirely upon a wrong premise; that I do not understand the situation; but I do know this, as it is disclosed by the record, that certain textile manufacturers are bitterly opposed to the bill. I apprehend that probably every Member of the Senate received a copy of the resolutions recently adopted by the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers at a convention at Philadelphia on April 28, 1920.

I will read the resolution which they adopted. It is as follows:

Therefore be it resolved, That we, the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers, in sixteenth annual convention assembled, in the city of Philadelphia, April 28, 1920, representing more than 1,000 textile factories, producing annually more than $700,000,000 of manufactured products, and paying to American labor more than $200,000,000, emphatically protest against the passage of the dye-licensing bill, and call upon our members generally to oppose by every lawful means in their power the stifling of American business, the suppression of American enterprise, and the strangling of American initiative, which this bill, if passed, will inevitably cause, with no resulting benefits save to a monopoly already grown strong enough to invade the halls of the American Congress with their insolent, threatening, selfish, and un-American demands.

Those gentleman, Mr. President, in my opinion, at the outbreak of the war, were faced by a situation that probably spelled something in the nature of disaster to them. They were without the dyes necessary to dye the goods the manufacture of which was essential to the life of their business. American business men invested capital, erected plants, entered upon the manufacture of dyes, and probably saved these self-same gentlemen from loss of very large sums of money. And yet they adopt a resolution which, in substance and effect, gives the people of the country to understand that they have no use for the men who in a large measure saved them and their business in 1915 and during the war. They abuse them to the extent of referring to them as "a monopoly," as "insolent, threatening, selfish," and say that the "demands" they are making on Congress are "un-American."

I do not care the snap of my fingers for the Du Pont Co.; I do not care the snap of my fingers for the National Aniline Co., or any of the other corporations or individuals engaged in the manufacture of dyestuffs; I am not interested in them in any way, shape, or form, directly or indirectly, except as, in my view, every American citizen should be interested in the perpetuation of the vitally important industry they have established here. I submit, Mr. President, that it is at least reasonable to assume that if the gentlemen, or very many of them, who go to make up the National Association of Hosiery and Underwear Manufacturers at any time find themselves in a position where they can buy their dyes in other countries cheaper, even a fraction of a cent per pound cheaper, than they can purchase them from American manufacturers, they will not hesitate a single, solitary moment to buy from the foreigner, utterly regardless of what the results may be to the dyestuff industry in the United States.

It is my desire to assist the dye makers here, for the important reasons I have stated, until such time as they have a trained personnel and are sufficiently experienced in the manufacture of dyes to produce them at a minimum cost and are able to compete with foreigners who have been in the business for 50 years.

Judging from the tone of the resolution referred to, I doubt very much that those gentlemen would not be willing to pay the same price for dyes to some foreign manufacturer rather than patronize the men who saved them in their hour of need and of whom they now speak as "selfish," "insolent," and as making "un-American demands."

There is another concern, Mr. President, that is in opposition to this bill. Its attorney appeared before the subcommittee. I refer to the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., which is located in the State of New Hampshire. I shall read into the RECORD the following article from the Evening World of March 12, 1920, under the caption "Is this profiteering?":

Cotton and worsted goods could be reduced in price, still beat prewar profits.

Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. had common dividend balance of $4.71 per share in 1917; in 1919 it was $42.92.

With the cost of shoes and other necessities mounting higher and higher 18 months after the armistice was declared, the Evening World to-day continues a survey of the increased profits of corporations engaged in the manufacturing and handling of clothing and food.

The attention of Attorney General Palmer, especially, is called to the Evening World's articles.

AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING CO.

In recent months there have been few necessities that have shown such sharp advances in price as cotton and worsted goods. Manufacturers have complained that current high prices have been forced by the higher price of raw material and higher operating costs. They have laid great stress on the perpendicular rise in the price of raw cotton, as shown by the New York Cotton Exchange quotations; on wage advances, higher machinery costs, and the so-called "burdensome" taxes of the Government.

This explanation will not stand close investigation. How one big manufacturer has "suffered" by these adverse conditions is shown by the accounts of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. Not only has it shifted the burden of higher taxes, wage increases, etc., to the consumer through the medium of increased prices, but it has at the same time and through the same medium, been able to swell its profits in a manner that is not short of being sensational.

The Amoskeag Manufacturing Co.'s mills are located at Manchester, N. H. Their equipment consists of 660,000 spindles, 21,500 cotton looms, and 1,700 worsted looms. It produces ginghams, ticks, denims, and women's worsted dress goods. To show what a big factor the company is in the industry, it should be cited that in 1917 it produced over 200,000,000 yards of cotton and worsted cloth and 1,203,000 cotton bags.

In 1917, or before prices of cotton and worsted goods began to aviate so alarmingly, the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. did a gross business of $30,439,215, and its ratio of manufacturing costs to gross sales was 97.14 per cent. In that year, after deducting expenses of every kind, including the dividend on the preferred stock, the surplus remaining equaled $4.71 for each share of common stock.

That present prices of cotton and worsted goods are inordinately high and have been established simply for the purpose of offsetting higher operating costs but to immoderately expand profits as well would seem to be proved by the following:

(1) Although the amount of cotton and worsted cloth sold by the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co. in 1919 was 24 per cent less than in 1917 and the amount of cotton bags sold in 1919 was 47 per cent less than in 1917, receipts from sales in 1919 were more than 44 per cent larger than in 1917.

(2) Higher prices charged for its output not only offset higher manufacturing costs, but permitted the company to save for operating income 15.66 cents out of every dollar of sales, compared with 2.8 cents in 1917. In other words, the margin of profit on its business expanded nearly six times within the span of two years.

I ask that the remainder of the article be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(3) Whereas gross sales for 1919 showed an expansion of 44 per cent over 1917, net profits from sales during the same period increased from $869,843 to $6,891,833, or 681 per cent.

(4) In 1917 the common dividend balance, as previously stated, amounted to $4.71 per share. The average annual common dividend balance for the preceding five years was $3.31 per share. But the common dividend balance, thanks to greatly increased prices, jumped to $26.24 per share in 1918 and $42.92 in 1919. This is graphically shown by the following:

	Ratio of manufacturing costs to gross sales.	Operating income.	Earned on common stock per share.
	Per cent.
1919	84.34	$6,891,833	$42.92
1918	88.81	5,535,125	26.24
1917	97.14	869,843	4.71

Also, during this time the company has increased its net working capital, including the value of its inventories, from $10,543,000 to $35,480,000.

The more these figures are studied the more it appears that present record prices for cotton and worsted goods can be substantially reduced and still give the manufacturer a handsome profit on invested capital.

Mr. NUGENT. Mr. President, in connection with the same matter, I will say that since the decision of the Supreme Court in the stock-dividend case on or about March 8, the Amoskeag Co. has declared a stock dividend of 100 per cent.

I now quote from the New York World of April 29, 1920, under the caption "Living costs soar 21 per cent in year," the following:

Clothing is the budget item for which greater price increases were recorded. The advance of 177 per cent between July, 1914, and March, 1920, represents a rise of 18 per cent since November, 1919, and of 53 per cent since March, 1919. These estimates are based on replies to questionnaires returned by 209 dry goods dealers in 72 cities.

The largest advances since 1914 continued to be for cotton yard goods. Percale, formerly selling for 7½ cents a yard, in March, 1920, brought an average of 39 cents; this is an increase of 422 per cent. Muslin underwear and women's blouses, on the other hand, had advanced in price only 142.5 per cent and 139.2 per cent, respectively. Other important increases noted were 230.2 per cent for men's overcoats, 204.4 per cent for women's coats, 230 per cent for women's knit vests, 211.6 per cent for men's union suits; 247.2 per cent for overalls, 228.4 per cent for men's work shirts, 209.4 per cent for women's shoes, and 217.1 per cent for women's cape kid gloves.

Since November, 1919, average advances of 25 per cent or more were reported for percale, gingham, longcloth, knit underwear, women's stockings, coats, gloves, and hats.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] a day or two ago called attention to the fact that there were a number of cotton manufacturing establishments in the South which recently declared stock dividends of from 100 per cent to 300 per cent. The same thing is true with respect to other cotton manufacturing establishments, particularly in the State of New Hampshire. In addition to the Amoskeag, the Nonquit and the Nashua companies, also in New Hampshire, have very recently declared 100 per cent stock dividends.

So it must be apparent, Mr. President, that, so far as the cotton manufacturers of the country are concerned, they have not been particularly adversely affected in their profits because of the fact that they are obliged to purchase and have for several years past been obliged to purchase from American manufacturers the dyes they use in the manufacture of their goods.

I will say also that the profits of manufacturers of woolen goods have not been quite wiped out because they, too, have been required to purchase dyes from American producers. I quote from the New York World of April 28 the caption: "American Woolen common earned $40 a share in 1919 compared to $14 in 1918; $14,500,000 to surplus after all taxes and expenses; net profits footing $15,613,414."

It may be interesting in this connection to refer to a speech delivered in the Senate on January 24 last by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], during the course of which he made the following statement:

The net profits of the American Woolen Co., after Federal taxes had been deducted, were $2,778,600 in 1914, $5,160,295 in 1915, $8,210,761 in 1916, $15,664,985 in 1917, and $12,324,084 in 1918. All on an invested capital of twenty-two millions. The earnings of its common stock were $10.80 a share in 1915, $27.05 a share in 1916, $47.62 a share in 1917, and this year, according to best Wall Street information, will exceed $100 a share, or more than the stock's par value. A year ago the watered stock of the American Woolen Co., the chief textile company in the United States, was quoted on the stock exchange at 45. To-day it is close to 150, and in recent weeks has been quoted at 156.

For the wool that goes into a suit of clothes which sells for $100 the woolgrower receives $7.37, says the Wool Growers' Association. This makes the finished garment cost the consumer more than twelve times the price of the raw material. The price of clothing has made enormous advances and is still advancing notwithstanding the American Woolen Co. cleaned up net profits of 56 per cent in 1917 and in 1918—or $2,000,000 more than the $20,000,000 total of the company's authorized outstanding stock.

The profits stated by the Senator from Kansas for the five years mentioned by him, in addition to the net profits of $15,513,414 for 1919, earned by the American Woolen Co., disclose the astounding fact that the net profits of that company in six years, commencing with 1914 and ending the 1st of last January, were $59,652,139 on an authorized outstanding stock of $20,000,000 and an actual invested capital of $22,000,000; or, to put it another way, during the past six years—when, with the exception of possibly a portion of last year, all dyes used by that company, in all probability, were purchased from American dye manufacturers—the American Woolen Co. made net profits to the extent of very nearly three times the capital it had invested in its business. So I say again that the textile manufacturers of this country have not suffered to any material extent because of the fact they were obliged to buy their dyes in the United States.

Mr. President, I apprehend that every man of intelligence will concede that in the event another war afflicts the world—which God forbid—it will be a chemical war to a far greater extent than was the Great War. I am a man of peace, and the RECORD will disclose that I have done about all that lay in my power to bring peace to a war-torn world. Notwithstnding those facts, however, I am of the opinion that I would be untrue to my country and to myself if I did not do everything that a reasonable man can be expected to do to see to it that never again shall my country be placed in such an absolutely defenseless, unprepared, helpless position from a chemical standpoint as she occupied in 1914. Believing, as I do, that the enactment of this bill is of transcendent importance, not only from the standpoint of national defense but from the standpoint of the health of our people and our continued prosperity, I earnestly hope that it will pass.

Mr. President, I desire to incorporate in the RECORD, without reading, a speech delivered by Hon. Francis P. Garvan before the National Cotton Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator make that a part of his speech?

Mr. NUGENT. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only way I should like to have it go in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE GERMAN MENACE.

[Address delivered by Francis P. Garvan, Alien Property Custodian, before National Cotton Manufacturers' Association on Apr. 23, 1919, at the Biltmore, New York City.]

For 19 months I have been engaged in a study of German industrial life and its manifestations and activities in the United States, and I come here to give you as briefly as I may a few of the incontrovertible facts which my experience has made clear.

First and foremost, be it understood that this was an industrial war, brought on by industrial Germany in her lust-mad haste to capture the markets of the world. Industrial Germany, in its arrogance and pride, preferred the formidable hazard of battle to the progressive and sure infiltration which within 10 or 20 years might well have given her the world domination she sought from complacent and unthinking peoples.

Industrial Germany was in control of imperial Germany. Industrial Germany sympathized and participated in the preparation for this war. Industrial Germany waged this war. Industrial Germany was the first to see defeat, and forced the military peace in order that with her industrial equipment intact she might continue that same war by intensified and concentrated economic measures.

Her ambitions are the same in peace and in war. Her methods are the same in peace and in war. Destroy your business competitor by State aid, cartel combination, dumping, full-line forcing, bribery, theft of patents or inventions, espionage, and propaganda. Destroy your military adversary by tearing up sacred treaties; by unlicensed and unbridled submarine and poisonous gas warfare; by the destruction of factories, mines, and vineyards; by terrorism and vandalism.

You or I have yet to hear one word of a change of heart or purpose; one word of regret or shame; one word of dispraise for any leader in the past holocaust. On the other hand, hold to the fact that at this moment the four men best fitted to conduct a ruthless economic war upon his country, the four men who planned, instigated, and paid for all the black history of lawlessness under which we suffered for two and a half years—Dr. Albert, Dr. Dernburg, Capt. Boy-Ed, and Von Bernstorff, are the helmsmen of the present German Government. Dr. Heinrich Albert is now undersecretary of state; Herr Bernhard Dernburg is now minister of finance; Boy-Ed is director of the intelligence section of the foreign office, the espionage and propaganda division; and that archcriminal, Bernstorff, is over them all, directing and leading the new Government.

Has the war ended for you?

It was Germany's chemical supremacy that gave her confidence in her avaricious dream of world empire. It was Germany's chemical supremacy that enabled her to wage four years of pitiless warfare. And it is Germany's chemical supremacy upon which she relies to continue this war; and for that supremacy she pays homage to her dye industry, and counts upon that dye industry to maintain it.

Since 1866 Germany has recognized the fact that upon the development of the dye industry rested her entire development of organic chemistry; that upon the development of organic chemistry rested, in an ever-increasing measure, all the development of modern business and modern warfare.

And so she cherished the industry with wisdom and prevision while it was still in its childhood, and by her patience, by her persistence, by the willingness of her people to sacrifice in unselfish cooperation, she has gradually transformed the plans made in the year 1866 into the reality of to-day.

And now she realizes that her dye industry constitutes her keenest wedge with which to force her way back into the world trade. She calls the dye industry her chief "protective industry," and has laid out for it a program of State protection and aid which should startle us. She proposes to use the alleged necessities of the world for her dyes to force all her other exports. In other words, she proposes to use it as a club with which to fight her way back into commercial society.

Prior to the war the German dye industry was united into three cartels with some independent companies outside. All are now united into one monster cartel, the I. G. Co., with Mr. Weinberg, the old head of the Cassella Color Co., as its president, and a capitalization of hundreds of millions of dollars. Germany has taken it under State aid and protection; she has decided to establish a guaranty fund whereby all industries share the losses the cartel may be compelled to face through dumping, bribery, or other expense incurred in reasserting her dye monopoly of the world. She looks forward to granting it trade export premiums, freight rebates, intensified consular service, and State guaranties against labor troubles.

As a result, our young but vigorous industry stands here to-day in direct competition, not only with the great cartel I. G., but with that great cartel sustained and supported and subsidized by the entire strength and wealth of the German Kingdom.

Over $3,000,000,000 of annual business in America, including yours, are dependent upon the dye industry. Is there any doubt that the destruction of the American industry means your enslavement to that cartel, and your destruction when it becomes the whim of that cartel?

For years that $3,000,000,000 of annual business was dependent upon the graciousness of German ambition. The time had not come when it seemed to their self-interest to cripple or destroy it, but when the war came on, in an instant Germany felt the force of your dependence and attempted to use your necessities to influence the policies of your Government. There was a considerable period when Germany could have relieved your distress; but would not. There was a period thereafter when her branches here might have assisted you; but they would not.

Listen! April 25, 1915, Boy-Ed, of ill-smelling fame, writes to Albert: "Very Honorable Privy Counsellor: To-day's World prints the inclosed short article on the alleged erection of dye factories in New Jersey by Germans. In case you are not able to take any steps to prevent an undertaking of this kind, I am requesting you to indicate to whose attention I could call the matter. With greetings, etc." Signed, Boy-Ed.

Albert answers, April 28, 1915: "Very Honorable Captain: With regard to dyes, I got into touch with local experts in order to determine what truth there is in the news. According to my knowledge of things, the matter is a fake inasmuch as our factories have bound themselves orally and by word of honor to do nothing in the present situation which might help the United States."

Thank God! That day your independence began. That day our industry was born. And supported by you with loyalty, patience, and sacrifice, it has grown until to-day $450,000,000 is enlisted in the cause, and we see the end forever of the past slavery and we stand unafraid in the face of any threat.

But even greater than the importance of the dye industry in commercial life is its absolute necessity in modern warfare. I quote from Dr. Schweitzer:

"In no other field has German efficiency proven its superiority as in that of chemistry. While this was anticipated before the present war, it is no exaggeration to state that the German chemist has so far contributed as much, if not more, to the success of the campaign than the strategist, the army, and the navy, and that, therefore, the present holocaust may be justly called the 'chemists' war'."

Eighty per cent of her explosives, and all her poisoned gases, were manufactured by Germany's dye factories.

And does anyone for a moment imagine that you are going to handle, or that the women of America are going to buy or wear, the by-product of the destruction of their 70,000 sons?

A commission appointed by the allied Governments has just reported to their respective Governments: "At first, chlorine and phosgene were the main requirements, but afterwards a variety of organic substances were employed, all of which were made by the factories of the I. G. combination, and many of these substances were new and difficult to prepare, and rapid production was only possible owing to the speed with which the peaceful organization of the dye factories could be utilized for these purposes. When the Government wished to introduce a new gas, a conference of the various firms was held at Berlin to determine how the manufacture should be subdivided in order to use the existing plant to the best advantage. For instance, the initial stages of the manufacture of mustard gas were carried on at Ludwigshafen and the final stage at Leverkusen."

They go on: "In the future it is clear that every chemical factory must be regarded as a potential arsenal, and other nations can not, therefore, submit to the domination of certain sections of chemical industry which Germany exercised before the war. For military security it is essential that each country should have its chemical industry firmly established, otherwise we are leaving Germany in possession of a weapon which will be a permanent menace to the peace of the world.

"The key to Germany's war production of explosives was the Haber process for the production of ammonia from atmospheric nitrogen. Without such a process Germany could not have made the nitric acid required for her explosive program nor obtained fertilizers for food production after the supply of Chile saltpeter had been stopped by your blockade, and it is probable that she could not have continued the war after 1916. In the event of another war we might be cut off from supplies of saltpeter, while Germany would be independent of them."

Gas warfare and its development, even if forbidden by the League of Nations, can not safely be left in German hands, and organic substances will be employed which we do not know to-day. Any country without a well-developed chemical industry is in danger.

Useless your armies and your navies, your U-boats and your aeroplanes, unless by means of a developed dye industry you keep abreast with modern chemical warfare.

But this industry has had, and now has, another great function in Germany's machine. It was, and is, the basis of her espionage and propaganda system.

True it is that we had in this country the Orenstein Arthur-Koppel Co., a German concern, owning a large plant at Koppel, near Pittsburgh. The chief business of that company was the manufacture and installation of what is known as "inside transportation"; that is, narrow-gauge railways, dump cars, traveling cranes, and machinery of a similar sort used in large industrial plants. It was the American branch of a great German house with connections in all the great countries of the world. For 20 years it has put in bids based upon the plans and specifications of every big industrial plant built in this country; and for that same 20 years blue prints of these specifications and floor plans and elevations have gone on file in the Government office in Berlin.

True it is that in this country we had 18 branches of German insurance companies, largely engaged in the reinsurance business; and that these companies collected for their own use detailed plans of all property insured by them, with especial reference to the hazard of the insured buildings from fire, explosion, or other causes; and duplicates of these plans and drawings also found their resting place in the Berlin office. And we wondered at the accuracy of our factory fires and explosions!

True it is that Germany, through the Bosch Magneto Co., the Eisemann Magneto Co., and the Boonton Rubber Co., had a practical monopoly of the ignition systems in America, and through this combination the files of the central office in Berlin were kept up to date with all plans for improvements in military trucks, gasoline boats, and aeroplanes.

Let me read you Manager Otto Heins's report to Dr. Albert of the activities of the Bosch Magneto Co. in this your country, at that time neutral:

"Honored Mr. Albert: In connection with the obstruction policy upon which we agreed at the beginning of the war in matters concerning deliveries of our products, especially the special magneto apparatus, I should like in the following to make several statements, from which one will clearly see that the accomplished obstruction policy has in every way been successful. In short, we had great difficulty at the beginning of the war in withholding the much-needed special aeroplane apparatuses from the Allies, and in preventing the Allies, especially the English, from immediately attempting to manufacture them for themselves. Special apparatuses are involved in flying machines, airships, and speed boats. These apparatuses are very different from the normal apparatus used on automobiles and motorcycles. We have freely supplied them with ordinary apparatuses; but, in accordance with our agreement, we have entered into apparent negotiations with the representatives of the Allies, creating in their minds the impression that they would receive also the special apparatuses at the present time. These negotiations began immediately after the first declaration of war, and it was possible, on account of their technical character, to extend them many months into the war. Our policy lulled them into the certainty that they would receive the special apparatus, and only now, November 30, 15 months after war began, have they realized our duplicity."

He goes on to state that this policy has been carried out despite the fact that these contracts were in many instances subcontracts with American firms; and he gloatingly continues that as a result of his activities in this country England, in October, 1915, found herself unable to defend London against their air raids, and states that France was in a much better position to protect herself against air raids because of her confiscation of the Bosch factories in Paris at the beginning of the war. I wonder how many women and children were killed!

True it is that the Hamburg-American Line and the Nord Deutsche Lloyd kept faithful tab for Berlin on a thousand details of our business life which came under their observation; that not a ship left our harbors, not a cargo was loaded or unloaded, but that some member of its organization watched and reported every detail to be sent by code to the German Government.

But greater than all, and forming the foundation of her entire espionage and propaganda system, stood the dye industry. Her trained observers enjoyed full access to the business they supplied and regularly and faithfully reported each and every detail of the $3,000,000,000 of annual business dependent upon the dye industry in this country. As long as you were supplied by the "Big Six" your business had no secret unknown to Berlin. In Berlin you will find a card index system which recites every fact connected with each and every one of your concerns that can be of any possible value to your rivals over there.

The head of that system in this country for years before the war was Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, president of the Bayer Co. Right here you will be glad to know that the Bayer Co. is now 100 per cent American, having been bought by loyal Americans. He was given his secret service number by the imperial minister of war, 96319637. He came to this country, became a citizen on the instruction of the German Government, eventually was made the head of the Bayer Co., and led the espionage and propagandist movements here down to the day of his sudden death in November, 1917. His regular reports to Germany are the story of your prewar slavery and the story of the activity of each and every representative connected with the old "Big Six" to perpetuate that slavery. When Albert came here to assume the leadership of that system it is to Schweitzer he first turns. And then we find Schweitzer bringing to Albert's office from day to day those other smiling gentlemen who sold you the "peerless dyes" in the past. From that moment Germany's trade outposts in this country were turned into ministers of lawlessness and destruction.

A word or two of his activities: Schweitzer was the inventor of the idea of the purchase of the New York Evening Mail. Schweitzer was the inventor of the idea of the German Publication Society, formed to publish, for our delectation, the literature of German kultur. Schweitzer, with Henry Weissmann, president of the German-American Alliance, we see forming the Printers and Publishers' Association, another attempt to create an English-language newspaper to present Germany's side of the war. Over 30 trained chemists, his lieutenants, are now interned.

We find Albert about to go home in January, 1917, turning over to Schweitzer $1,178,882.08; and again, on February 2, $300,000, all to be spent in espionage and propaganda. We find Schweitzer using the chemical branches of the "Big Six" in this country to form the Chemical Exchange, by which all available phenol supply in America was turned away from the manufacture of picric acid for explosives for the Allies, with a profit, out of America's pocket, to Germany of $1,650,000.

Listen to Albert's praise:

"The breadth of high-mindedness with which you at that time immediately entered into the plan has borne fruit as follows: One and a half million pounds of carbolic acid have been kept from the Allies. Out of this 1,500,000 pounds of carbolic acid 4,500,000 pounds of picric acid can be produced. This tremendous quantity of explosive stuffs has been withheld from the Allies by your contract. In order to give one an idea of this enormous quantity the following figures are of interest:

"Four million five hundred thousand pounds equals 2,250 tons of explosives. A railroad freight car is loaded with 20 tons of explosives. The 2,250 tons would therefore fill 112 railways cars. A freight train with explosives consists chiefly of 40 freight cars, so that the 4,500,000 pounds of explosives would fill three railroad trains with 40 cars each.

"Now, one should picture to himself what a military coup would be accomplished by an army leader if he should succeed in destroying 3 railroad trains of 40 cars, containing four and a half million pounds of explosives.

"Of still greater and more beneficial effect is the support which you have afforded to the purchase of bromine. We have a well-founded hope that, with the exclusion of perhaps small quantities, we shall be in a position to buy up the total production of the country. Bromine, together with chloral, is used in making nitric gases, which are of such great importance in trench warfare. Without bromine these nitric gases are of slight effect; in connection with bromine, they are of terrible effect. Bromine is produced only in the United States and Germany. While, therefore, the material is on hand in satisfactory quantities for the Germans, the Allies are entirely dependent upon importation from America."

Gentlemen, did you intend by your support of the German dye industry to leave the Allies defenseless against the poison gas made by that German dye industry?

But that is not the worst. At Bogota, N. J., in the New Jersey Agriculture Chemical Co., Dr. Schweitzer employed Dr. Walter Scheele, who was the inventor, in that little town of New Jersey, in 1913, of mustard gas, the formula of which he transmitted through Capt. von Papen to Germany as soon as the war broke out. This is the mustard gas which laid low your brothers on the plains of France. And for Scheele Dr. Schweitzer laid out the plans for the preparation of the bombs which destroyed your ships in your harbors.

Untold millions were spent by this man in propaganda and espionage in the United States. In the two years before we entered the war the Bayer Co. drew $2,000,000 from the profits of its Orient and South American houses, which money was spent here, for what purposes we can well imagine. Practically all the dye salesmen you saw were only nominally in the employ of the branches here; all had secret and personal contracts with the home office.

All that I have said of Schweitzer is typical of practically all representatives of German dye houses in this country. Wherever we have found espionage or propaganda activity, there you will find those names so familiar to you in the days of your slavery. You will find the same gang returning, decrying our dyes, selling apparently Swiss or unmarked dyes, telling you tales of German distress, serving as ever their Fatherland. Be on your guard.

Coincident with the development of Germany's dye industry came the general development of her chemical strength. It offered great incentives to young men. It developed a large body of trained scientists. It encouraged and fostered the spirit of research in all lines and added to the effectiveness of practically every industry in the Empire. Nowhere is this more striking than in the supremacy Germany was attaining in chemical medicine.

One other thought I want you to have in mind is this: For four years now the chemical science developed by the dye industry of Germany has focussed its mind largely upon substitutes for the raw material she has hitherto received from the outside world. The leader of her chemical industry in this country, Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, of whom I will have more to say later on, wrote to his Government:

"All these endeavors to substitute cotton may appear ridiculous to us who have been brought up with the idea that cotton is king and that America has been designed by fate to supply this fiber to the civilized world. The farmers who cultivated the madder root, and the planters who raised indigo, were also inclined to jest when they were apprised of the fact that German chemists had succeeded in reproducing in the laboratories the dyes which their crops furnished; but when the manufactured materials drove the natural products from the market and left the farmers and planters without a job hilarity ceased. History may repeat itself and willow-bark and nettle, or some other substitute, raised on German soil, may in the near future depose King Cotton. The German chemist has a duty to perform, and with his perseverance and application he does not shrink from any problem, however difficult it may appear to outsiders."

Gradually Germany was obtaining control of the pharmaceutical industry of the world, and gradually it was dawning upon her that this development, too, might put in her hands an even more powerful weapon than explosives or poisonous gas in her conscienceless conquest of the world. Most of the great discoveries in chemical medicine came directly from the dye laboratories. Are you content that the development of chemical medicine shall remain the exclusive possession of the German Nation as we now know it?

Briefly, then, I have tried to give you a picture of the situation of this country in its relation to the dye industry as our daily experience of the past 18 months unrolled it before us. Do you wonder that A. Mitchell Palmer and all those who fought under him were shocked beyond measure and could not rest until Congress had amended the act and had given us the power under which we have rooted out each and every branch of that system and sold it into the hands of patriotic Americans?

But that was not enough. Germany had misused our patent system, just as she had misused and violated our Sherman law, our antidumping laws, our antibribery acts, our business code, and our common code of honesty. She had taken out patents for all her developments, covering in many instances not only the processes to prevent manufacture here but also the product, to prevent our taking advantage of any possible development in the dye industry of other countries.

Four thousand five hundred of these patents which applied to chemistry Mr. Palmer has sold for the benefit of American industries to a quasi-trustee corporation called the Chemical Foundation. This company is capitalized for $500,000, $400,000 being 6 per cent preferred stock and $100,000 common stock, also limited to dividends of 6 per cent.

The stock has been all underwritten by members of the Dye Institute, each and all taking their share, and is now in process of distribution through the dye producers and eventually through the consumers. It is the intention that ultimately no one will own more than a thousand dollars' worth of stock, eight hundred preferred and two hundred common.

All license fees accruing to the foundation will be used first to pay back the preferred stock. All surplus then above the 6 per cent actually invested will be expended for the development of research and the encouragement of the chemical industry of America.

Its executives serve with enthusiasm and without pay. All its stock is trusteed for a period of 17 years. Its management and its policies are controlled by a board of trustees, consisting of Otto Bannard, president of the New York Trust Co., chairman; Cleveland H. Dodge; George L. Ingraham, late presiding justice of the appellate division of the New York Supreme Court; Ralph Stone, president of the Detroit Trust Co.; and Benjamin Griswold, of Brown & Son, Baltimore. These gentlemen have been serving as the advisory sales committee of the Alien Property Custodian for over a year. They represent the highest standard of American patriotism and disinterestedness. Long lives of manifest ability, long lives of unselfish service to their country, guarantee the character of the Chemical Foundation.

Its counsel is Joseph H. Choate, who as a dollar-a-year man has given 18 months of tireless and efficient service in the exclusive study of the chemical situation. Its patent counsel is the fighting Ramsay Hoguet.

This foundation proposes to license to any competent, equipped, and patriotic American individual, firm, or corporation such of these patents as, with the help and encouragement of the foundation, may be utilized. This foundation proposes to begin to fight at the customs gate against any violation of the patents now owned by it, whether they appear as denationalized or camouflaged products seeking to enter through neutral sources. It proposes to establish an intelligence department which will coordinate, preserve, and utilize all the chemical information gathered by every department of the Government during the war and make that information available to the American public, that they may know the exact truth as to the past and may be kept apprised of all German activity, either through its own agents or its American connections during every stage in the coming struggle.

It proposes to match with watchfulness and pitiless publicity all future attempts at espionage or propaganda in our land. It proposes to expose all unfounded criticism directed against our productions, and, on the other hand, to do what it can to prevent producers or dealers here casting reflection upon our industry by the marketing of inferior or dishonestly described products.

It proposes to encourage and foster chemical research by cooperation with the forces already at work; by offering some hope of protection and reward to the loyal research men in the United States Government service, who now by department rule have to dedicate their inventions to the public, a course which results only in Germany transferring these inventions to her own laboratory system for development or exploitation.

It proposes to bring about a closer union of the university and the factory. It has taken over all German copyrights, and will thus free much scientific literature from the shackles of the German language. It proposes to place all possible information on our situation before Congress, and ask the passage of a law establishing a license system governing all chemical importations for a period of 10 years. It is intended that this license system shall act at one and the same time as a guaranty to you and all other dependent industries for proper importations to enable you to meet the competition of other lands, and to protect and guard our growing chemical independence. In this we ask no more than England, France, Italy, and Japan have already decided to grant on behalf of their own independence. This request we base upon the following grounds:

1. Fairness to the $450,000,000 invested in the chemical business by loyal Americans in the hour of our need.
2. Independence and freedom of the textile, leather, paper, paint and varnish, pharmaceutical $3,000,000,000 essential American business.
3. The necessity of our national defense.
4. The destruction and prevention of the German system of propaganda and espionage in our land.
5. The advancement of pure science and research.
6. The advancement of medical science.

The granting of this license system is not a question of conflicting economic schools. It is the question of our national independence, safety, and education.

Once we are assured time in which to work out our salvation, we hope to turn to our dearest objective. Already we have started to make a survey of our laboratory equipment—governmental, university, and factory. Already company after company have passed resolutions through their boards of directors placing at the disposal of our trustees, under such terms and conditions as those trustees may dictate, their entire research capacity. Government laboratories and university laboratories have also been assured us. Gentlemen, we know that offer will be unanimous.

We will soon be able to go to the medical profession of America and offer to them the entire capacity of the country for experiment and research for the betterment of mankind. One medical chemist in one dye factory in Germany discovered the cure for syphilis, the deadliest enemy of mankind. The same medical chemist, in the same dye factory, discovered the cure for the sleeping sickness of Africa which made a continent habitable. What can we not hope for when the American medical profession is given unbounded scope and opportunity?

We are assured that somewhere within that realm lies the hope of the cure for consumption, cancer, and many of the seizures which rob us of our little ones. Can it be that herein lies the opportunity of converting the forces which up to now have been directed only toward desolation and destruction into the channels of alleviation and helpfulness to humanity? Can it be that through this medium idealist America may snatch the torch of misapplied science from the barbarian and place it in the hands of an enlightened civilization?

Gentlemen, Drs. Albert and Bernstorff reported to their Government that America could never establish the dye and pharmaceutical industry in this country, as we lacked the moral power for the creation of such an industry; that here each party pursued its own selfish interests, but nobody kept the whole in mind; that this problem could only be solved through regard for all points of view, and that the conflicting selfishnesses of this country rendered that solution impossible.

The Chemical Foundation answers this statement with a challenge, and if it can only become the coordinating forum for American patriotism, American sacrifice, and American ability, it awaits the issue with serenity.

Gentlemen, we are the boys who stayed at home. True, the reasons seemed sound and sufficient yesterday. But to-day they seem only excuses, ever decreasingly satisfying. It is not enough that with envious tears we cheer their homecoming.

Would they know our admiration, they must sit by our fireside and listen to us teach our children the character-building tales of their sacrifice. Would they know our love, they must lean over the cribs of those little ones and listen to the prayers of gratitude those little lips are lisping in their behalf. Would they know the depth of the realization of our obligations, and the strength of our resolve that they shall not have suffered and died in vain, we call upon their spirits to watch us in this fight. Peace, peace, and there is no peace!

Mr. NUGENT. I desire to insert in the RECORD the article to which I referred a short time ago, as appearing in a publication known as the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), under the caption "How Germany dominated the American chemical and dyestuff industry," purporting to have been taken from the report of the Alien Property Custodian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Alien Property Custodian's Report.]

HOW GERMANY DOMINATED THE AMERICAN CHEMICAL AND DYESTUFF INDUSTRY.

The great field of chemical industry presented, at the outset, perhaps the most difficult of the many problems which the Alien Property Custodian was expected to solve. It was, or had been until importations ceased, saturated through and through with German influence. In regard to no branch of human endeavor was the myth of German invincibility more firmly fixed in the public mind. The country was flooded with German chemists; and those who were not German by origin were mostly German, directly or indirectly, by training. A vast proportion of the persons engaged in the business bore German names. Connections more or less close between American and German houses were frequent and obvious. There was unquestionably a considerable German interest in such manufacturing as was being carried on. In view of the well-known and uniform policy of the great German Government-aided combinations to embark in foreign manufacture only when export from Germany was not feasible, this interest seemed unlikely to be large; but, unless it could be discovered and rooted out, no substantial Americanization of the industry was possible. The German chemical industry, which had so thoroughly penetrated and permeated our own, was gigantic, perhaps the strongest, and certainly the most remunerative of all Teutonic industries. The task of identifying and taking over its property in the United States was thus a direct attack upon a most formidable opponent; while the information on which the work had to be based, had to be derived, to an exceptional extent, from men hostile by birth or tradition.

In order to give a fair understanding of the situation, it is necessary to sketch briefly the history of the German chemical industry. From about the middle of the nineteenth century the practical application of chemical science began to occupy the attention of a constantly increasing number of the best scientific and industrial minds of Germany. A combination of natural advantages and national characteristics led to rapid advance. The industrial district in which the necessary materials and other facilities were found or developed was exceptionally compact. Distances were short and transportation easy. Labor was cheap, docile, and stable. On the other hand, the national habit of mind was peculiarly fitted for chemical research work, and particularly for the interminable tasks presented by such research, in the way of exhausting the immensely numerous possible combinations available within a particular field. From the first scientific attainment, and particularly accomplishment in the field of research, appealed strongly to the public mind. Men of science, and particularly research workers, were more highly regarded than in other countries. This tendency was strongly fostered by the Government, which, by conferring honors and titles, did everything possible to exalt the position of the successful scientist.

As a consequence of these conditions, the universities were at an early date provided with the most elaborate and advanced equipment for research work, and attracted to themselves an extraordinary proportion of the ablest young men of the nation. They accordingly proceeded to turn out a constantly increasing number of highly trained technical men, whose services were available to the rising chemical industry. The number of these men was such that the inevitable competition between them for places made the average salaries exceedingly small. Highly skilled service was, therefore, available to the German chemical manufacturer at an extraordinarily low cost. In this respect he had a marked advantage over the manufacturers of any and every other country in the world.

These advantages were made use of to an extent nowhere else approached, because from a comparatively early date the importance of research work to practical industry was firmly grasped by both the industrial and governmental ruling classes. The alliance of the manufacturer and the university professor became constantly closer and more complete. To meet the needs pointed out by the industrial leaders, armies of plodding, but nevertheless skillful, chemists completed hundreds of thousands of separate researches. The results of these kept the German chemical manufacturers constantly in the van—always somewhat ahead of their competitors in other countries in the way of new processes and products.

While all that has been said above applies in a measure to every form of chemical activity, the German advantages were naturally less in the manufacture of the heavy chemicals than in the more difficult and complicated processes involved in other forms of the industry. Chemicals which are consumed in great quantities, like sulphuric acid or soda ash, are produced at prices so low that costs of transportation are often a controlling factor. Accordingly, in this branch of the trade the Germans never attained supremacy. The natural tendency was for each country to supply itself with these essential materials, and this natural tendency had not, at least so far as the United States was concerned, been overcome.

In two other great branches of chemical industry, however, the Germans had attained not only the first place but to all intents and purposes a world monopoly—that is to say, in the practical application of organic chemistry to the manufacture of dyestuffs and medicinals. Although the first coal-tar dye was made in England by an English chemist and the next important step in the development of the industry—the production of fuchsine, or magenta—was the work of a Frenchman, the Germans almost immediately advanced beyond the rest of the world in the development of this infinitely complex industry.

This complexity of the manufacture of dyestuffs as a business proposition is almost beyond belief. Tens of thousands of distinct dyes were produced in the German factories, and over 900 of these were actually sold in appreciable quantities in the American market alone before the war. Each of these nine hundred and odd products required a separate and distinct process of manufacture, one differing from the next, in many cases as widely as if the products had been those of unrelated industries. While all these dyestuffs and a host of pharmaceuticals have a common source, in that they are derived originally from coal tar, they descend from this common ancestor by an enormous number of separate family lines. From the hundreds of distinct substances found in coal tar, 10 so-called crudes form the starting points of substantially all the processes which result in dyes. From these more than 300 so-called intermediates are produced by a variety of more or less complex chemical reactions. Most of these reactions require the use of large quantities of acids and other chemicals not produced from coal tar. From the intermediates thus obtained an infinite number of possible dyestuffs can be produced. Many thousand such dyestuffs have been actually produced and marketed.

In carrying out the processes which result in the extraction of the crudes from coal tar, the conversion of crudes into intermediates, and of intermediates into dyes, the quantities of each substance produced depend not upon the will of the manufacturer but upon the inexorable laws of chemistry. The proportion of the various substances obtained can be varied slightly by skillful manipulation, but only to a small extent. The manufacturer can not avoid producing large quantities of certain materials in order to secure perhaps smaller quantities of others. Again, at the very starting point of the industry, in extracting the crudes from the original coal tar, an analogous situation arises. The tar's content of anthracene, from which the most valuable of all modern dyes are derived, is relatively small; that of naphthalene, for instance, is immensely larger. The tar distiller can not obtain anthracene without producing or wasting much greater quantities of naphthalene, benzol, and other crudes. The same truth holds good in every subsequent step of the immensely complex processes of dye manufacture. At each step by-products are produced in addition to the products sought. The obvious result is that, unless the final product can be sold at a colossal price, uses or markets must be found for most of these innumerable by-products. Many of them, fortunately, are useful in the manufacture of intermediates and dyes. Many have been found to have important medicinal effects and have taken permanent rank as pharmaceuticals. For others no use has been found, and the unavoidable production of these represents pure waste.

The most important feature, however, of this production of by-products is the relation which it bears to the explosive industry.

All the most important explosives of the present day are either coal-tar products or the result of chemical processes requiring the use of coal-tar products. In a large dyestuff factory there is an unavoidable production of considerable quantities of substances which are directly available for conversion into explosives. Moreover, in addition to these by-products which can be used for manufacture of explosives, many of the materials which are not by-products but are directly useful for the production of dyes, can also, by slight alterations in the processes employed, be converted into explosives. For example, in the production of sulphur black, one of the most important black dyes, a slight variation in the final step of the long and complicated process of manufacture will transform the ultimate product into picric acid. A still more striking example is that of paramononitrotoluol. This is an intermediate necessarily made in quantities often beyond the needs of the dye makers. To the end of the last century many thousand tons of this substance had accumulated in the German dye works, which were making frantic efforts to find uses for it in dye making. About 1904 these efforts suddenly ceased. Trinitrotoluol (T. N. T.) had been adopted as a military explosive, and every pound of the accumulation was directly available for easy conversion into this most formidable of high explosives. More important still, however, than this unavoidable production of materials for explosive manufacture is the fact that the technical skill required for the manufacture of explosives is precisely that possessed by the chemical staff of a successful dye works and is to be found nowhere else.

Three things are apparent in regard to a business conducted under such conditions. One is that unless limited to the manufacture of a very few carefully selected products, it must be carried out on a large scale with the aid of immense resources in the way of capital and technique. Another is that, if carried out on a large scale, one of its most important features will inevitably be the maintenance of large research laboratories to work out the infinite problems raised by the necessity of disposing of by-products. A third is that the connection with the explosive industry is so close that no Government which gave any serious consideration to the possibilities of war could fail to see the necessity of aiding and controlling the industry. The truth of each of these propositions was at once demonstrated in the history of the German dyestuff industry. From an early period, the manufacture became concentrated in a few important companies.

These companies, ultimately six in number, developed into enormous establishments producing practically complete lines of dyes and manufacturing most of their own crudes and intermediates, as well as many of their acids and heavy chemicals. Several of these establishments also became large producers of pharmaceuticals in order to procure an outlet for their by-products. Outside of these very large houses, the industry was confined for the most part to small establishments producing only a limited number of carefully selected dyes, so chosen as to minimize the by-product difficulty, and so organized as to enable the owners to save most of the overhead expense by themselves furnishing the required technical skill and superintendence. These, indeed, were mostly little more than assembling plants. In the great establishments the research laboratories became large and highly efficient institutions. In these laboratories hundreds of chemists were constantly employed. Their facilities were placed at the disposal of research chemists from universities—often men who had no connection with the dye industry whatever. Many of the manufacturers' own chemists were allowed and encouraged to proceed with researches which had no probable immediate commercial utility, but which tended to increase the existing supply of knowledge in those general regions of the world of organic chemistry in which the dyestuff concerns were operating. The result of all this inevitably was the accumulation of an immense mass of scientific data which usually afforded a quick and easy solution to each industrial problem as it arose. The results were sometimes startling. The most striking instance, perhaps, is the case of the Pfleger patent. The invention covered by this patent solved, by the use of sodium amide, of which an overproduction was available, the problem of producing indigo direct from aniline, and thus afforded a process far simpler than and at least as cheap as any theretofore known. As an instance of how closely such matters are followed by the German public, it may be noted that the announcement of the purchase of this patent by the great Hoechst works, one of the largest German dye manufacturers, advanced the company's stock 150 points on the stock exchange in a single day. The importance of this research branch of the industry is thus hard to overestimate. Finally, the connection with the explosives industry resulted, as is well known, in constant governmental assistance to and control of the dye industry. Much was done by the German Government to insure the prosperity of the dye industry and its immediate convertibility to the production of munitions.

These conditions soon produced in the dye industry certain results similar to those which occurred in all the other important German industries during the great period of expansion at the end of the nineteenth century. The improvements in processes brought about by research laid heavy emphasis on the value of quantity production. Quantity production, carried on by competing houses, led to overproduction. Overproduction led to a determined effort to establish and maintain a large export trade. The natural advantages of the German industry, as compared to the industry in other countries, prevented serious competition in Germany itself. The Government's tariff and other policies enabled home prices to be kept up. It was then evidently to the advantage of any manufacturer to produce far more than he could sell in the home market, even if his export trade had to be carried on at a loss, when by doing so he could use a process so economical that his profits on home trade would be largely increased. Accordingly, German dyestuffs began to appear in every country at prices which domestic manufacturers could not meet. The inevitable result was that in country after country the domestic manufacture was destroyed or stifled in its cradle. As soon as this had been accomplished it was no longer necessary for the German exporters to sell at or below cost. Prices were immediately raised and handsome profits realized. The tendency to this result was recognized by the German Government from the first and every facility was afforded to the growing export trade. It was fully realized by both the civil and military authorities that if a world monopoly in the dyestuff industry could be built up the military strength of Germany would be colossally enhanced, since it alone of all the great powers would then be in a position to secure immediate supplies of the vast quantities of munitions likely to be needed in a modern war.

The methods under which this dumping policy was conducted and its extent may be illustrated by a few specific instances. Most of these occurred in branches of the chemical industry other than the manufacture of dyes, for the simple and sufficient reason that in this country, at least, the dyestuff industry never reached a point where it required much discouragement. When, however, in 1910 the first determined effort was made in this country to establish the manufacture of an important intermediate, when, that is to say, the Benzol Products Co. was organized by a group of men interested in the heavy chemical industry, to manufacture aniline oil on a large scale, the German hand was immediately shown. The price of aniline oil at the time of the establishment of this company averaged 11½ cents. As soon as its manufacture was fairly under way the German exporters commenced to cut the price. Apparently no definite prices were made by the Germans, but they adopted the simple policy of offering any customer of the new concern supplies at less than the price he was paying. For example, one of their most important customers refused an advantageous contract at 8½ cents, stating that he had assurance from the Germans that whatever price the Benzol Products Co. made would be met and bettered by them. Accordingly, the new company struggled on, conducting its operations without profit and only because it was supported by a group of men of exceptional determination and insight was it able to survive until the war gave it an opportunity to establish its business on a firm foundation. Among other examples are the following: In 1903 there were in the United States five manufacturers of salicylic acid. By 1913 three of these had failed. Of the two survivors one was the Heyden Chemical Co., a mere branch of a German house, which, as such, I have since taken over. During the latter part of the decade referred to salicylic acid was selling in Germany at from 26½ to 30½ cents. During the same period the German houses were selling it in this country, after paying a duty of 5 cents, at 25 cents, or from 6 to 10 cents below what they were getting at home.

A similar situation developed in the manufacture of oxalic acid. In 1901, when there was no American manufacture, it was sold by the Germans at 6 cents. In 1903, when the works of the American Acid & Alkali Co. were started, the price was immediately dropped to 4.7 cents, at about which figure it remained until 1907, when the American factory was shut down for a number of months. During this shutdown period the price was instantly raised to 9 cents. When the factory reopened the price was again dropped until 1908, when the company failed. It was then reorganized and in 1909 secured the imposition of a 2-cent duty on the acid, from which time up to the beginning of the war the price ran at about 7½ cents a pound. The same process was carried on in regard to bicarbonate of potash. In 1900 there was no American manufacture and imports ran about 160,000 pounds. In 1901 American manufacture began. This succeeded so well that in 1906 imports had dropped to 45,000 pounds. At this time the American manufacturer's price was 6¼ cents, while the import value was given at 4.9 cents. In the following year the Germans made a determined and successful onslaught. Their import value was lowered to 2.2 cents, with a result that, instead of 45,000 pounds, 310,000 pounds were imported. Accordingly, in 1908, the American manufacturer failed. The price was immediately raised to 7½ cents and remained thereabouts thereafter until the war. Many similar instances might be cited, but these sufficiently indicate the method and its results.

This determined onslaught upon the competing industries of other countries, this definite attempt to secure world monopoly naturally created a strong tendency toward combination. As has been stated, by the end of the nineteenth century the real manufacture of dyes on a large scale was concentrated almost exclusively in six great firms. These were the following:

Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik, Ludwigshafen on the Rhine, hereinafter known as Badische; Farbenfabriken vorm. Friedr. Bayer & Co. in Leverkusen, hereinafter referred to as Bayer; Actien-Gesellschaft für Anilin-Fabrikation in Berlin, hereinafter referred to as Berlin; Farbwerke vorm. Meister Lucius & Brüning in Hoechst am Main, hereinafter referred to as Hoechst, Leopold Cassella G.m.b.H. in Frankfort; and Kalle & Co. Aktien-Gesellschaft in Biebrich.

Each of these six great companies had attained enormous proportions long before the war. Only two other concerns have carried on manufacture on a scale in any sense comparable. These are the following: Chemische Fabrik Griesheim Elektron of Frankfort A. M., a company which has absorbed a number of smaller manufacturers, and Chemische Fabriken vormals Weiler-ter-Meer, Uerdingen.

It will be noted that all of these establishments with the single exception of Berlin are concentrated in a narrow strip of territory near the Rhine and its tributaries. Their growth may be illustrated by a few figures as to two of the largest. Hoechst was organized in 1863 and started with 5 workmen. By 1880 it employed 1,860 workmen and 57 chemists, using 1,840 horsepower. It then produced 1,750 different colors. In 1912 it employed 7,080 workmen, 374 foremen, 307 chemists, and 74 engineers and used 30,000 horsepower. The number of colors reached 11,000. The works of the Badische, which was organized in 1865, covered, in 1914, 500 acres, with a water front of a mile and a half on the Rhine. There were 100 acres of buildings, 42 miles of railway within the works, and the power plants comprised 368 steam engines and 472 motors; 11,000 workmen were employed and the company was capitalized at 54,000,000 marks. The establishment of Bayer was on a scale entirely comparable with these two giants of the industry. The works of Cassella and Berlin were slightly smaller, while those of Kalle were the least important of the six. Weiler-ter-Meer was important largely because of its connection with the great Swiss house of Geigy & Co. Griesheim Elektron, prior to the war, had enormous works chiefly devoted to the manufacture of electrolytic chemicals and became an important factor in the dyestuff business only within recent years, when by absorption of the Oehler Works and the Chemikalien Werke Griesheim its color production reached a scale approaching that of the larger houses. Of these eight great concerns each had active agent houses in the United States, which were among the most important factors in the American industry and accordingly in the work of the Alien Property Custodian in connection therewith.

The tendency toward combination, however, by no means exhausted itself in the creation of these giant enterprises. The same causes which produced the enormous concentrations of capital in other German industries in the form of cartels were also working in the chemical industry. By 1904 two such immense combinations had been formed in the dyestuff industry, each including three of the largest six houses. One of these comprised Bayer, Badische, and Berlin; the other Hoechst, Cassella, and Kalle. Indirectly, through their financial transactions with the great banks, and also directly, each of these cartels was aided and guided by the Imperial Government. By pooling profits, by so arranging capitalization that each company held stock in the other companies of its own cartel, and by other familiar means, the risks incident to the enormous expansion of the business and the immense increases of export trade were minimized. The centripetal tendency, however, did not stop here. In 1916 the two preexisting cartels were combined with Griesheim Elektron, Weiler-ter-Meer, and various smaller companies in one gigantic cartel, representing a nationalization of the entire German dye and pharmaceutical industry. The combination is extremely close. Profits of the companies are pooled and after being ascertained each year on common principles are divided according to agreed percentages. Each factory maintains an independent administration, but they keep each other informed as to processes and experiences. To stimulate and keep up a spirit of competition between the factories it has been arranged that each product shall be manufactured by two or more factories. There is also an agreement that in order to circumvent tariff obstacles in other countries materials are to be produced outside of Germany by common action and at common expense whenever and wherever desirable.

At the time of the formation of this enormous organization the capitalization of each of the principal component companies was largely increased. Hoechst, Badische, and Bayer each increased their capitalization by 36,000,000 marks, bringing the capital of each up to 90,000,000 marks. The new stock was offered to the old stockholders at 107, which was a melon of some magnitude, since the last available quotations for the stock of one at least of these companies at the end of 1916 was 490. Berlin increased its capital from 19,800,000 to 33,000,000 marks. Other increases brought the total nominal capital of the group to over 382,000,000 marks. For many years a large part of the enormous profits of these concerns has been put back into the works with the result indicated by the stock quotations. The real capitalization is thus much greater than this nominal figure. In fact, it is estimated that the actual investment in the works comprising the cartel is not less than $400,000,000. It can not be doubted that this enormous engine of commercial warfare has been created expressly for the expected war after the war, and that it is intended to undertake still more efficiently and on a larger scale the various methods by which German attacks upon all competition were carried on.

In addition to the favorable effects of the foregoing factors, an important aid to the success of German export trade in dyes and pharmaceuticals was the advantage taken of the patent laws of the several countries. Owing to the immensely greater number of research chemists engaged in this work in Germany than in other countries, far more patentable inventions in organic chemistry were made by the Germans than by the chemists of any other nation. In the United States alone they took out patents by the thousand. For example, Bayer alone accumulated in the neighborhood of 1,200 such patents which were placed in the hands of one of its subsidiary companies. The Badische had approximately 500 such patents, while each of the other members of the cartel held patents by the score. As there was substantially no effort (with small exceptions) by any of the German concerns to manufacture in the United States, these patents were obviously obtained and held in order to prevent the formation of an American dye industry and to make impossible importation from other countries. The latter of these two purposes seems to have been the more important in the German mind. They seem to have had no fear that any American industry could be established on a competing basis. They had, however, some respect for the Swiss, French, and English industries, though at the time of the commencement of the European war Germany was supplying approximately nine-tenths of the world's needs in dyes. With the aid of the patents, especially the product patents, they could and did exclude all importations of competing dyes in the most important classes.

As if the legitimate advantages of the German industry, supplemented by the ruthless if legal tactics of dumping and destructive underselling, were not enough, the methods of the great German houses in carrying on their business in this country were from the first honeycombed with corruption. Bribery of dyers was carried on almost universally and on a large scale. The head dyers of the various mills and other chief customers of the dye manufacturers were subsidized in many direct and indirect ways. These dyers frequently controlled the situation, since if anyone of them wished to have his superiors cease using the dye of one manufacturer and buy instead the dye made by some other company, nothing was easier than to control the complicated process of dyeing in such a way that the dyes furnished by the house which was the least liberal to the dyer would produce wretched results. It would then be an easy matter for the dyer to get the manager of his mill to try the dyes offered by the more liberal briber, and with the exercise of a little care the new dye would be sure to produce satisfactory results. So extensive was this corruption that I came across only one American consumer that had escaped its ill effects. This concern, the United Piece Dye Works, of Lodi, N. J., avoided the difficulty by having all its dyes purchased by the head of the company himself under contracts providing that no barrel or package should show the name of the manufacturer. The company was thus able to designate the dyes which its dyers were to use solely by its own arbitrary numbers, and the dyers were thus unable to determine whose dyes they were using and to whom they should look for their graft. Against these illegitimate methods practiced by concerns having such resources and compelled by such an imperious necessity to seek and maintain supremacy in foreign fields, honest domestic competition found the utmost difficulty in maintaining itself and it is therefore not strange that until the outbreak of the war the American industry was of little importance.

Besides the obstacles, legitimate and illegitimate, thus placed by the Germans in the way of the establishment of an American industry, it would appear that there was considerable organized propaganda intended to discourage American attempts. It seems to have been regarded as the duty of a good German chemist in the United States to preach the doctrine of the invincibility of the German chemical industry, the impossible difficulty of the processes involved in the manufacture of many important dyes, and the hopelessness of procuring the necessary technically trained men and skilled labor outside of Germany. How far this was an intentionally organized movement and how far merely a sample of the prevalent German megalomania, it is difficult to say, but the results were analogous to those of the well-known potash propaganda, by which it would seem that the farmers, and to some extent even the scientific men, of the United States were persuaded that far more potash was required for our soil than was actually needed. Whether intentional or not, this propaganda had its effects. At all events prior to the war only a few Americans had the temerity to believe that anything could be done in this country against the German advantages in the way of technical skill, cheap labor, governmental support, and unscrupulous methods.

Indeed, up to August, 1914, the American industry in dyestuffs and medicines consisted of little more than a series of rather small assembling plants. In spite of the fact that enormous supplies of coal tar were available and that several of the crudes could be secured in this country under most advantageous conditions, hardly any of the necessary intermediates were made here, and the manufacture of dyes was almost entirely confined to working upon intermediates imported from Germany.

At one time the industry seemed to have taken a real start. Between 1879 and 1883 nine establishments had commenced the manufacture of dyes and were apparently prospering. In 1883, however, there was a sudden reversal of conditions, and within a year five of the nine shut down. The other four continued on a close margin and were still in existence at the outbreak of the war. Of these by far the largest was the Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works, of Buffalo. This company, organized and maintained by an American family of German origin, which had at its disposal very large resources derived from other business, had continuously made a strenuous and honest effort to establish a real dye industry. From time to time they commenced the manufacture of various intermediates, including at one period aniline oil, which was manufactured on a large scale.

In every instance, however, the manufacture was almost immediately brought to an end by German price cutting, and at the time of the war the dyes made by this establishment were the product of intermediates imported from Germany. The company, nevertheless, had established a considerable business and, while operating on a very small ratio of profit, supplied the greater part of the non-German dyes consumed by the trade. Of the other three concerns Heller & Merz had likewise established a fair business in a few colors also made from German intermediates. The same may be said of the Central Dye Works and the Consolidated Color & Chemical Co., which were operating on a still smaller scale. The latter of these companies, it may be noted, was owned almost exclusively by Mr. Herman A. Metz, the American representative of Hoechst, one of the largest German dye works, and since the outbreak of the war Mr. Metz has likewise become the controlling factor in the Central Dye Works. In addition to these four, a fifth plant was established a few years before the outbreak of the war at Albany by the American subsidiary of the great German house of Bayer.

These five concerns comprised the entire American industry, and it will readily be seen that operating as they did on German intermediates they existed purely on sufferance, and were absolutely at the mercy of the German producers. They made neither alizarin nor anthracene colors nor synthetic indigo, which being the fastest known dyes are the most valuable product of the industry. The exclusive ability to provide these fast colors, most of which were protected by patents, would have placed the entire trade in the hands of the Germans, even if no other factors favorable to them had been present. These dyes were indispensable to the textile manufacturers, and by refusing to supply them except to houses which would buy their other supplies from the German manufacturers—that is, by the familiar process of "full-line forcing"—the latter could have retained complete control of our market, even if our manufacturers had been otherwise fully able to compete in the manufacture of the simpler colors. The 30 per cent duty payable on almost all of the coal-tar colors apparently afforded no real protection, nor, as will be shown, was it possible for the American industry to secure any relief under the Sherman Act.

The condition of the other branches of the American chemical industry was, as has been stated, not quite so bad. The manufacture of acids and heavy chemicals was well established on a profitable basis, though even in this manufacture the employment of numerous German chemists and processes gave a certain Teutonic color to the industry. In the manufacture of fertilizers there was, in a measure, a balance of power. The Germans had a complete monopoly of potash and its salts owing to their ownership of the only considerable known easily worked potash deposits. This was somewhat offset by our possession of phosphates of which the Germans had no considerable supply. There was a certain amount of German ownership in companies operating in the phosphate field, most of which ownership has been unearthed and taken over. In nitrates, of course, the United States, like the rest of the world, was mostly dependent upon the Chilean supply.

In the manufacture of chemicals in which electrical processes, requiring large and cheap supplies of electric power, played an important part, the situation was such that the Germans had been induced to enter to some extent into the manufacture in this country. They had organized and owned the Niagara Alkali Co., which, utilizing the cheap electric power of Niagara, became the largest domestic manufacturer of caustic potash, the latter produced from German raw materials. This company also supplied the chlorine gas which was the raw material used by the only considerable American manufacturer of liquid chlorine. In the same way the great Frankfurt chemical works known as the Deutsche Gold und Silber Scheide Anstalt, had, through its American subsidiaries, the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., the Niagara Electric Chemical Co., and the Perth Amboy Chemical Works, established the only large American production of cyanides and the largest American production of formaldehdye and wood distillation products.

The importance of these industries will be recognized when it is remembered that cyanides are indispensable to the mining and electrotyping industries, while formaldehyde is the basis of the only new and important chemical industry of American origin, the manufacture of synthetic resin products such as bakelite, condensite, and redmanol.

In medicinals very little real American manufacture existed. A few of the coal-tar pharmaceutical products were produced by two American houses in St. Louis, the Mallinkrodt Chemical Works and the Monsanto Chemical Works. By far the most important factor in this field, however, was the New York house of Merck & Co., which was a branch of the world-famous firm of E. Merck, of Darmstadt, and has accordingly as such been taken over. The enormous dispensing and distributing business of such firms as Parke, Davis & Co., Lilly & Co., and Powers-Weightman-Rosengarten Co., successful and efficient as it was beyond comparison with similar businesses in any other country, seems to have involved very little real manufacture, and the materials used were largely imported. There seems to have been but little, if any, German interest in this branch of the industry, except among small brokers and dealers.

From all the foregoing it will be seen that the all-important portion of the chemical industry, the branch in which the work of the Alien Property Custodian would necessarily be most arduous and in which its results might be most beneficial, was the dye industry. The vital character of that industry was due not to its financial importance, since the consumption of dyes in the United States at the time of the outbreak of the war did not exceed $25,000,000 a year in cost to the consuming industries, nor to the fact that these dyes were absolute essentials to industries producing perhaps $2,500,000,000 of goods annually, but most of all to the fact that the technical skill and equipment provided by a successful dye industry furnished the means, and almost the sole means, to which every nation must look for advances in the application of chemical science to practical undertakings. No other industry offers a livelihood to any such large numbers of highly-trained scientific chemists nor any such incentive to continuous and extended research.

As has been stated, the opening of the year 1914 found nine-tenths of the dyes used in our industries supplied by German houses and the great bulk of these by the largest six German houses. At this time each of these six giants was represented in this country by a subsidiary American corporation. The agent of Bayer was Bayer & Co. (Inc.), a New York corporation, while in the Synthetic Patents Co. (Inc.), another subsidiary, was vested the ownership of the 1,200 American patents taken out by the parent house. This New York company also owned other subsidiaries, including the Hudson River Aniline Works, through which it had established its Albany factory. Berlin was represented by the Berlin Aniline Works, also a New York corporation. Kalle & Co. were operating through a third New York corporation, also called Kalle & Co. In these three cases all of the stock of the American house was admittedly owned outright by the parent organization. All three were accordingly taken over at the outset. The great Badische Co. acted through the Badische Co., of New York, the stock of which appeared on the books to be owned by Messrs. Adolph Kuttroff, Carl Pickhardt, and their chief employees. Leopold Cassella & Co. were represented by the Cassella Co., also a New York corporation, the stock of which appeared to be owned by its president, Mr. William J. Matheson, and its vice president, Mr. Shaw. Hoechst operated through a New York company known as Farbwerke Hoechst, of which the stock stood in the name of its president, Mr. Herman A. Metz. Of these gentlemen Messrs. Kuttroff and Pickhardt were Germans by birth and Americans by naturalization, Messrs. Matheson and Shaw American by birth and tradition, and Mr. Metz American by birth. An extensive investigation was instituted by my bureau of investigation under the direction of Mr. Francis P. Garvan, and as the result of a long-continued and strenuous effort it was at last shown that the ostensible ownership of the stock of these three branches was not genuine, but that each remained in fact owned by its German progenitor. As will hereinafter appear in the detailed accounts of these proceedings, each of these three companies has also been taken over.

The outbreak of the war cut off the importation of dyes from Germany.

There immediately sprang up a number of American companies, mostly small, organized to embark in the manufacturing business. By strenuous efforts these companies contrived to avert the threatened dye famine which the curtailment of the German supply apparently rendered inevitable. Commencing with those dyes which were easiest to produce and gradually extending to a limited number of the more essential and well known of the nonpatented colors, the production increased until at the time when I took office the requirements of the textile trade were being met and a considerable export business had sprung up. The quality of dyes produced was, except in the matter of standardization, comparable with the German dyes of similar character, but the fast alizarin and anthracene colors were not being produced, nor was synthetic indigo, the consumption of which is larger than that of any other dye. The largest of the existing producers, that is to say Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works, W. Beckers Aniline Co., and the Standard Aniline Co., of Wappingers Falls, have been combined with the aniline oil works of the Benzol Products Co. and with the appropriate portions of the business of the General Chemical Co., the Semet Solvay Co., and the Barrett Co. into a single large corporation known as the National Aniline & Chemical Co. This combination has since produced considerably more than half of the dyes consumed in America. During the same period the Du Pont Co. had begun to construct an enormous plant at Deepwater, Del., established an immense laboratory employing approximately 200 chemists, and had bought the plant of the United Piece Dye Works, in which the latter company had succeeded in producing a number of the most valuable dyes applicable to silk. Among other important concerns, the Dow Chemical Co., Messrs. Ault & Wiborg, the Sherwin-Williams Co., and the Newport Chemical Works were preparing for the production of colors on a large scale, while many other companies were turning out appreciable quantities. The prices, of course, rose enormously and the results for a time were correspondingly profitable.

In the meantime the German agencies had been making every effort to retain their organization and their customers. They had on hand in 1914 a considerable stock of German materials. One or two of the companies, notably Bayer & Co. (Inc.), sold out at once at a colossal profit. The others, apparently determined to retain their customers and their German connection at whatever cost, peddled out what they had in limited quantities, allowing each customer only a small quantity per month. These concerns made their sales at slight advances in price, hoping by this treatment to retain their customers' good will until the resumption of imports could be brought about. This process was assisted by the two voyages of the submarine Deutschland, each of which brought to the representatives of the six great houses a supply of the most essential dyes. Bayer & Co. (Inc.) increased its production somewhat, as did Mr. Metz (the American agent of Hoechst) in his Consolidated Color & Chemical Plant, while the Carsella Co. organized a new subsidiary known as the Century Color Co. to commence manufacture under the familiar C. C. C. trade-mark, under which it had sold the goods of its parent German house.

At the time when I took office, therefore, the American dye industry was active and profitable and in almost undisturbed possession of the field; but it required only the slightest investigation to show that the new-born industry's hold on life was of the most insecure description. The supply of crudes had been so expanded by the needs of the explosive industry and the consequent increase in the number of by-product coke plants and recovery installations in gas works that our supply of raw materials was unsurpassed. We were, however, producing only a few of the essential intermediates. We had a plentiful lack of even such technical knowledge as was required to produce dyes in the laboratory, to say nothing of the vastly greater amount of similar knowledge required to translate laboratory into commercial production. In the case of all the faster dyes Germany's patents had prevented every attempt at American production, and while the trading with the enemy act authorized issuance of licenses under these patents, the terms were such that no licensee could hope to continue the manufacture in competition with the Germans after the war. In the meantime the representatives of the great German houses were holding their organizations together and keeping their trade as best they could by doling out their remaining stocks and by selling under their own names American products, sometimes mixed with their own German goods.

These representatives were waiting for the end of hostilities, and were ready at a moment's notice to reembark in the importing business and assist their German parent houses to destroy the new American industry. It was, therefore, one of the most vital tasks before me to ascertain every trace of German ownership in the new industry, and particularly in the American representatives of the German trust. Unless the Germans could be deprived of the benefit of these branch houses their reentrance into the field would be all too easy.

This proved to be a hard task. Every variety of camouflage had been resorted to by the Germans to conceal their interests. A favorite method in this, as in other industries, was, of course, that of a fictitious transfer of stock. In a few cases such transfers were carried out after the severance of relations and before the declaration of war. In these cases the character of the transaction was fairly obvious and our course correspondingly simple. In other cases, however—and this was true of two of the three representatives of the great German houses which were ostensibly American owned—the apparent transfer took place at a period before the war was thought of—at least, by anyone outside of Germany. In these cases the transfer was the result of an attack made by persons ostensibly interested in the textile business upon the representatives of the German houses under the Sherman law.

Up to about 1910 all the great German houses shipped their goods to their American representatives on a pure consignment basis. The compensation of the American representative was wholly by way of commission. The American company in these cases was a mere selling agency or branch. In 1912 a group of Philadelphia lawyers brought about the prosecution of an officer of Bayer & Co. (Inc.) (or its predecessor, Farben Fabriken, of Elberfeld, another New York corporation) for some of the corrupt practices in the way of bribing buyers, which, as has been stated, had become universal among the German houses. In the course of this prosecution the lawyers in question became familiar with the general history of the German industry, and at once realised that it might be made the subject of an attack under the Sherman law, on the theory that each of the German companies was through its agent actually doing business in this country and that the two great cartels were conspiracies in restraint of trade. Acting on this theory, suits were commenced for triple damages against most of the American representatives. The institution of these suits, which were subsequently settled, resulted in at least two cases in a transfer by the Germans of their stock in the American company to the officers of that company. In the case of Badische Co., the stock of which was already in the names of the American representatives, it was only necessary to change the basis of the business from consignment to sale. This was done in all the cases, so that the German house might not appear to be doing business in this country through its representative but to be merely selling to an apparently independent American corporation. There was on the surface no apparent reason why these transfers should not have been genuine. Each German house really controlled the situation with reference to its agent, because it could instantly ruin its agent's business by withdrawing supplies. Accordingly for a considerable period these houses escaped more than mere general suspicion, and it was not until the Bureau of Investigation of my department had acquired considerable familiarity with German methods of camouflage that the true situation could be disclosed.

This investigation, of course, ran parallel with the similar investigations of several other departments of the Government, and the Bureau of Investigation received valuable aid from the offices of Military Intelligence, Naval Intelligence, and War Trade Intelligence, as well as from the Department of Justice and from the British, French, and other allied authorities. All these bodies worked in close cooperation, and their mutual assistance was of inestimable value. Information derived from these sources demonstrated that the chemical industry was a natural center for espionage, and that this had been true long before we entered the war—indeed, before the war began. The relation between the German Government and the great German chemical houses was so close that representatives of the industry were naturally almost direct representatives of the Government, and their work in this country gave them unequaled opportunities for examining our industries from within. Customers of the German import houses were constantly in need of expert advice in regard to the processes in which their goods were used. The advising expert supplied by the German houses naturally saw everything there was to see, and what he learned was seldom concealed from his Government.

After the war began the industry became a center not only of espionage, but of propaganda and of direct governmental activity. The number of striking instances of this development is so great that only a few can be detailed, but these appear sufficiently striking. Among the early examples unearthed by the Bureau of Investigation was that of the by-product coke plant established by the Lehigh Coke Co. The latter was a corporation organized by a syndicate represented by the Deutsche Bank. At the time the war broke out it had been in operation for a number of years and was promising considerable success. It had not, however, gone extensively into the manufacture of coal tar and its derivatives. In 1915, however, it established a considerable plant for these purposes. Every ounce of toluol and benzol which was produced was sold under contracts binding the purchaser not to use or permit the use of the product for the manufacture of explosives or for the benefit of the Allies. An examination of the correspondence between Hugo Schmidt, the agent of the Deutsche Bank in this country, and the bank, shows that the entire undertaking represented by this by-product plant was a direct effort by the German Government to prevent the making of these valuable materials for explosive manufacture in the United States, or rather, to prevent their use for the benefit of Germany's enemies. The undertaking was decided on because the Deutsche Bank had ascertained that the Bethlehem Steel Co., which had a contract with the Lehigh Coke Co. for the latter's coke and gas, had practically determined to build such a plant for its own purposes, but that this decision might be changed if forestalled by the erection of a plant by the Lehigh Coke Co. This actually occurred, with the result that large supplies of these invaluable coal-tar products were kept out of the munition industry, while the demand for them from other industries was prevented from having its natural effect in bringing into existence American plants which would have been free to supply the Allies. This condition continued until just before we entered the war, when the Deutsche Bank, doubtless better informed than most as to the probabilities, sold out the Lehigh Coke Co. to a nominee of the H. Koppers Co., which in turn immediately resold to the Bethlehem Steel Co.

A still more striking instance, uncovered by the Bureau of Investigation under the direction of Mr. Garvan, with important aid from the Department of Justice and the Secret Service, was that of the organization known as "The Chemical Exchange Association." The purpose, and for a time the effect, of this enterprise was to corner the supply in the United States of phenol, an essential of the explosive industry, and to prevent its use for the manufacture of high explosives (picric acid and trinitrotoluol, or T. N. T.). This undertaking was apparently initiated by Dr. Albert, the financial adviser of the German Government in this country, in direct collaboration with Von Bernstorff. Dr. Albert carried out the scheme through Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, the chemist and leading spirit of Bayer & Co. (Inc.), the American agent of Bayer, of Leverkusen. The outbreak of the war had instantly stopped the importation of phenol, which was not manufactured to any extent in this country. Mr. Thomas A. Edison, who required large supplies of phenol for the manufacture of his phonograph records, which were made of a synthetic resin of which phenol and formaldehyde were the chief ingredients, immediately set to work to solve the difficulties involved in the manufacture of this substance. By the most strenuous work the problem was solved in his laboratories in a few weeks, and he commenced the manufacture of very considerable quantities, producing a large surplus beyond his own requirements. This surplus would normally have supplied the means for the manufacture of fairly large quantities of the most valuable explosives. To prevent this, Dr. Schweitzer, on June 22, 1915, entered into a contract with the American Oil & Supply Co., which was the selling agency of the Edison works, for practically the entire surplus of phenol available for sale. As security for the faithful performance of this contract, Dr. Schweitzer put up $100,000 in cash, which was furnished to him by Dr. Albert, and also a $25,000 surety company bond. A week later Dr. Schweitzer made a contract with the Heyden Chemical Works (a mere branch of the German house of Chemische Fabrik von Heyden, of Radebeul), of which George Simon, a German subject, was the manager, by which the entire supply of phenol thus purchased was to be taken by the Heyden company and converted into salicylic acid and other harmless medicinal and flavoring products.

The arrangement was that the Heyden works were to return to Schweitzer 1 pound of salicylic acid for each pound of phenol and keep the surplus of the converted product. This involved a very large profit for both parties. In the meantime, to avoid doing business under his own name, Schweitzer registered as a trade name the "Chemical Exchange Association," which was described as a copartnership consisting of himself and Richard Kny. Kny was the father-in-law of George Simon, of the Heyden Chemical Co., and was the ostensible proprietor of the Kny-Scheerer Co., one of the most important manufacturers in this country of surgical instruments. This company, like the Heyden Chemical Works, was a purely German-owned concern, and both have since been taken over by me.

The net result of all this was a profit to the Chemical Exchange Association of $816,000, which was apparently equally divided between Schweitzer and Kny. Schweitzer's share of the profits seems to have gone straight to the German Government, but for some unexplained reason Kny appears to have been allowed to keep his. The attempt to prevent the use in explosive manufacture of American phenol was completely successful for a time. The success of the venture was celebrated in the latter part of 1916 by a dinner given by Schweitzer and Kny at the Hotel Astor in honor of Dr. Albert. Among other guests were George Simon, F. A. Borgemeister, Norvin R. Lindheim, and Capt. Wolf von Igel, of the German Embassy—a typical gathering of the most active German propagandists in the country.

Less striking examples of the same sort of thing might be cited by the score. An interesting instance is the case of Dr. Isaac Strauss, organizer and president of the Chromos Chemical Co. Dr. Strauss arrived in this country in September, 1914, apparently with a direct mandate from the German Government for propaganda among the Jews. He proceeded to establish a periodical known as the American Jewish Chronicle. Funds to the amount of $85,000 were supplied for his activities by Dr. Albert, and $15,000 by Von Bernstorff, and his chemical company, profiting by the enormous war demand and prices, rapidly began to supply further sinews of war. Shortly after the entry of the United States into the war his conduct attracted the attention of the military authorities, and the ensuing investigation led to his internment, whereupon his Chromos Chemical Co. and the American Jewish Chronicle were taken over by me.

At the time when I took office it, of course, became the duty of all companies in which any alien enemies held stock to report such ownership. About half of those American chemical enterprises which are now known to be German owned complied more or less promptly with this requirement. The rest, mostly relying upon pretended transfers by which the stock had ostensibly been put in the hands of American citizens, paid no attention to the act until the activities of the Bureau of Investigation had disclosed the true facts. In some cases, however, the camouflage which concealed the true ownership was of a much subtler and more effective description. In the case of more than one of the companies which promptly reported themselves as entirely German owned, measures had been taken to transfer, to companies which were presumably beyond the reach of the trading-with-the-enemy act, the essential value of the German property and business.

The most conspicuous instance of this method was Bayer & Co. (Inc.). This company at an early date reported all its stock as held by one of the officers, Mr. Seebohm, for three trustees who in turn held for the benefit of the German parent house. It was, on the whole, the most important of all the German branches. Besides representing, as sales agent, one of the three equal giant concerns at the head of the German industry, it was the only German branch which had established any considerable manufacture in this country. Through the purchase of the stock of the Hudson River Aniline Works, it had acquired and greatly expanded a considerable plant near Albany, N. Y., in which it produced a few of the simpler coal-tar colors and considerable quantities of pharmaceuticals, especially the most valuable single product of the German house—the drug known throughout the world by its trade name of aspirin. This was a patented coal-tar product on which enormous profits had been made. Practically the entire management of this company was in the hands of German subjects. The leading spirit, Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, was, as has been stated, among the most ardent propagandists and German agents in the country. The Albany plant represented the expenditure of many hundred thousand dollars, and the enterprise was exceedingly flourishing.

To conceal the profits for the purpose of taxation another company was organized, known as the Synthetic Patents Co. (Inc.), all the stock of which was also held by the German concern, to which were conveyed all the American patents of the German house, approximately 1,200 in number, and all the real estate, including the plant. By contracts between Bayer & Co. (Inc.) and Synthetic Patents Co. (Inc.) almost all of the profits of the former were diverted to the latter in the form of rentals and royalties. The investigation also covered a number of less legitimate evasions of the tax laws, and resulted in the recovery of a large sum by the Treasury.

The militant German character of the men in control of this company was so obvious that the ease with which they surrendered its stock was a matter of some surprise. The explanation was not unearthed until the very thorough examination of the company's affairs by the Bureau of Investigation had proceeded to great lengths. It was then ascertained that on the entrance of the United States into the war the men in control of the company had foreseen the danger of sequestration of the property. In casting about for a means of meeting this emergency they hit upon a small company which had recently been organized in Connecticut to manufacture dyes. This was the Williams & Crowell Co., established by two gentlemen who had some knowledge but little capital. They had succeeded in producing two or three valuable sulphur colors, notably one highly suitable for khaki, of which enormous quantities were obviously going to be required. The situation of these gentlemen was such that, although their company had been able to produce profits out of all proportion to its capitalization, they were not unwilling to sell, and accordingly the idea was conceived of buying this company with a view to the gradual transfer to it of such of the facilities of Bayer & Co. (Inc.) as could be turned over. The plan was laid before the counsel of the company, Mr. Charles J. Hardy, of New York, who was the chief adviser of most of the German houses in this line of business. He appears to have advised that the company itself could not safely make the purchase, owing to the danger of its being taken over by the Government, and that for the same reason the stock of the Williams & Crowell Co. should not be bought by the Bayer directors themselves, since they were alien enemies. At his suggestion, a new corporation, known as Williams & Crowell Color Co. (Inc.), was organized in New York and the stock taken in the names of American citizens. Williams & Crowell Co. was at this time making profits at the rate of $50,000 a month and, with the aid of the scientific and business knowledge which could be supplied by the Bayer staff, was in a fair way to immediate and immense success. Indeed, by this simple method it would have been possible under our very noses to drain the lifeblood out of Bayer & Co. and to transfuse it into the new organization, which the Alien Property Custodian apparently could not touch. The purchase of Williams & Crowell Co., however, required a substantial sum in cash, approximately $100,000, and it was at last possible to prove that the $100,000 thus paid was money of Bayer & Co. (Inc.) and therefore of the German parent house.

This was ascertained only after the Bureau of Investigation had discovered that the treasury of Bayer & Co. (Inc.) was one of the great sources from which German propaganda funds in this country were derived. The parent German house had enormous business connections all over the world. It supplies immense quantities of its products to the east, especially China. After the outbreak of the war, in 1915, payments for these goods could not be transmitted directly to Germany. As many of the goods had been sold on long credit, very large sums still remained payable to the German house many months after deliveries had ceased. The eastern debtors of the Germany house were therefore directed to make their payments to Mr. Seebohm, of Bayer & Co. (Inc.), of New York. These funds, amounting to millions, were accordingly received by him and disposed of without being put through the books of Bayer & Co. (Inc.). What became of most of them can not now be ascertained, as all of such records as may have been kept were promptly destroyed. It was possible, however, to demonstrate that part of the payment for the Williams & Crowell stock came from this source. I accordingly insisted that the stock be turned over to Bayer & Co. (Inc.). This was done, and the Williams & Crowell Co. thus formed a part of the assets of Bayer & Co. (Inc.) at the time of the sale of the latter.

Among other interesting facts in regard to Bayer & Co. (Inc.) disclosed by the investigation was the great care exercised by the parent house to restrain the manufacture of dyes by its American subsidiary. The purpose apparently was to limit this manufacture absolutely to colors in which genuine American manufacture was already well established. The German house was very glad to increase in this manner the competition with which the American infant industry had to struggle, but it was determined that American manufacture in other lines should not be commenced, even under its own control. When the cessation of imports after 1914 threatened a dye famine in this country, Bayer & Co. (Inc.) commenced to manufacture a few new colors, or, rather, colors which were new to the American industry. No sooner did this reach the ears of the German house than the most peremptory letters were written, absolutely forbidding any further extension of the business in this line. The enormous profits possible from such manufacture had no weight with the Germans when compared with the risk that such manufacture might aid the development of a real American industry.

The stock of Bayer & Co. (Inc.) and of Synthetic Patents Co. was sold by me at public auction, the successful bidder being the Sterling Products Co., a West Virginia corporation dealing in proprietary medicines. This company had previously agreed to dispose of the dye plant and patents, in case it secured the property, to Grasselli Chemical Co., one of the largest makers of heavy chemicals in the country. The price paid was $5,310,000, plus back taxes and other obligations of many hundred thousands more. Both purchasing companies appear, on careful investigation, to be thoroughly American.

Two other of the American branches of the six great German dye companies were also taken over at the outset. These were the Berlin Aniline Works and Kalle & Co. These companies were, however, little more than shells, each consisting almost solely of a selling organization without plant or other valuable fixed capital. In the case of the Berlin Aniline Works, there was an attempt to duplicate on a small scale the Williams & Crowell episode, but the resources available were insufficient. Neither of these companies accordingly had anything of great value to sell, and it has therefore been deemed the wiser course to liquidate them. The patents of the German concerns were in each case held in its own name and not transferred to the American branch.

Having taken over these three of the six American representatives of the German giants, my activities in this direction seemed to have been brought to a halt. The other three did not report any German ownership and on a preliminary investigation seemed to be American owned. A very careful examination of all available materials, however, sufficed to raise sufficient doubt in each case to force the company in question to offer to submit its entire books and records to our inspection, and to provide an audit at its own expense. An extremely thorough investigation was thus made possible, and in each case it has resulted in a demonstration that the stock of the branch was actually, in part at least, German owned.

In its relation to the American industry, the most important of these companies was the Cassella Color Co. This concern, the agent of Leopold Cassella & Co. G. m. b. H., was managed by W. J. Matheson and Robert A. Shaw. Both of these gentlemen are Americans by birth and tradition, but both of them had been for many years wholly or chiefly engaged in the business of marketing the products of the Cassella works. The stock stood on the books of the company in their name, and appeared to have been purchased for actual cash at par in 1913. The transcendent importance of this company was due to two facts: First, that it had apparently been absorbed by the National Aniline & Chemical Co. (Inc.), which up to the present has been by far the largest American manufacturer of dyes; and, secondly, that the headship of the new, all-inclusive German cartel, including all the great companies, is vested in Mr. Carl von Weinberg, who was for many years president of Leopold Cassella & Co., and closely associated with Messrs. Matheson and Shaw.

The importance of these facts was emphasized when the former Cassella organization became the selling department of the National Aniline & Chemical Co., and when Mr. Matheson assumed its presidency. A storm of rumor immediately arose, and it was suggested to me from every side that the National Co. was at least in part German owned. The facts, however, were found to be as follows: Prior to 1913 the majority of the stock of the Cassella Co. of New York was owned by the German house. In that year the antitrust suits above referred to convinced all parties interested that it was unsafe to allow the New York agency to continue even in part to be owned by a member of the German trust. Accordingly, the remaining stock was transferred to Messrs. Matheson and Shaw and paid for in cash. An option was, however, reserved. This was reduced to writing so far as it conferred upon the German house the right to take the stock at the book value on the death of either Matheson or Shaw. It was, however, orally agreed that the stock might be taken on the same basis at any time. In the meantime the contract between the German and American companies was so framed that the profits of the company continued to be divided as before, 57 per cent going to the German house and 43 per cent to the American house. The sale, therefore, made substantially no difference in the relative rights of the parties. Messrs. Matheson and Shaw gained nothing which they did not already have in the way of theoretical control of the American house. The German company retained complete practical control of the American house, because it could at any moment, by withdrawing supplies, render the American business worthless. The American patents owned by the German house had been assigned to the American company. In most cases, however, reassignments had been executed but not recorded, so that the real, though not the ostensible, ownership of the patents was in fact still vested in the Germans. The correspondence shows an understanding the legal effect of which seems to be to continue the German ownership to the extent of 57 per cent in the American company, and I have accordingly demanded and taken over 57 per cent of the stock.

When the dye famine began in 1914, Messrs. Matheson and Shaw determined to commence manufacturing, and for that purpose organized the Century Colors Corporation, this name being selected in order to retain the C. C. C. trade-mark of the Cassella goods. This company was organized with a capital of only $500, and Messrs. Matheson and Shaw took all the stock. The operations of the company were financed to a considerable extent out of the funds of Cassella Co., of New York.

In August, 1917, Messrs. Matheson and Shaw, desiring to dissociate themselves from the Cassella name, caused the Century Colors Corporation to purchase from the Cassella Co. all its tangible assets. On the same date the capital stock was increased from $500 to $200,000, Messrs. Matheson and Shaw paying in the difference. The tangible assets represented everything owned by the Cassella corporation except its patents, good will, and the contract with Leopold Cassella, G. m. b. H., for the sale and purchase of the German products. On September 11, 1917, Messrs. Matheson and Shaw sold to the National Aniline & Chemical Co. (Inc.) all of the stock of the Century Colors Corporation. Under this contract Messrs. Matheson and Shaw agreed to subscribe for $200,000 worth of the National Co.'s stock and to place their own services at the disposal of the National, in return for which the National Co. agreed to give them 4,000 full-paid shares of preferred stock and 40,000 shares of common stock, having no par value. It was also agreed that the existence of the Century Colors Corporation should be continued for at least one year. At this time, in explaining the failure to convey the Cassella Co.'s intangible assets, Messrs. Matheson and Shaw stated in a letter to the National Co. that they did not feel at liberty to dispose of the Cassella Co.'s intangible assets without first consulting the German house.

After this sale to the National, the personnel taken over from the Cassella and Century Colors Cos. rapidly became increasingly important in the national organization.

When Mr. Matheson assumed the presidency the Century staff became to all intents and purposes the National sales department. All this undoubtedly gave to the new organization a color which afforded considerable justification to the rumors of German ownership. Accordingly, the correspondence was examined with the utmost care. This correspondence, including, as it does, many of the letters which passed between Messrs. Shaw and Matheson themselves at a time when neither could have imagined that their transactions would be under investigation, shows that at the time of the sale to the National both desired not to sacrifice their German connection, and that neither believed with any great confidence in the success of the American manufacturing industry, though they may have believed that the formation of the National company offered an opportunity for success in America not theretofore available.

In October, 1917, the Cassella Color Co., in spite of the feeling previously expressed by Messrs. Matheson and Shaw that they could not properly transfer any of its intagible assets without consulting the German house, transferred to the National company a number of important patents. This was done without regard to the existence of the unrecorded reassignments to the German house. This transfer appeared to be invalid, and these patents, together with all other patents known to be the property of the German house, have accordingly been demanded and are vested in the Alien Property Custodian.

At the present time there appears to be no German ownership in the stock of the National Aniline & Chemical Co. (Inc.); the great majority of the stock is held by the following: Schoellkopf Aniline & Chemical Works (or its stockholders, chiefly members of the Schoellkopf family); General Chemical Co.; Barrett & Co.; Semet-Solvay Co.; W. Beckers Aniline Works; W. J. Matheson; Eugene Meyer, jr.

A complete working majority of the stock has been placed in the voting trust of which the trustees are as follows: William H. Nichols, president of the General Chemical Co.; H. S. Handy, of the Semet-Solvay Co.; William H. Childs, president of the Barrett Co.; W. J. Matheson; Eugene Meyer, jr.

A contract has been entered into which will result in the gradual elimination by purchase of the Beckers interest, which has been thought desirable because of Dr. Beckers's German origin. The Cassella Color Co., of New York, has been partially liquidated and its stock has been reduced from $200,000 to $500. The taking over of 57 per cent of this stock will at least permit the elimination of the Cassella name.

The American branch of the great Hoechst Co. had for many years been conducted by Mr. Herman A. Metz. Prior to 1912 the New York corporation was known as H. A. Metz (Inc.), and a majority of its stock was always owned by the parent house. In that year the Germany company took over all but 10 shares of the minority stock which had previously stood in the name of Mr. Metz, leaving him the record owner of these 10, the only shares not held by them. At the same time the name of the New York corporation was changed to Farbwerke-Hoechst, so that the value of the good will might be firmly fixed in the German name. At about this time the antitrust proceedings above referred to were commenced against these companies also. Mr. Metz settled for $40,000 the suit commenced against his company, and proceeded to make strong representations to the German house to the effect that the stock ought to be owned by him, so that it could be asserted that the German house was no longer doing business in America. A prolonged negotiation ensued, the Germans being very reluctant to make any change. At last, in the summer of 1913, it was arranged that the 1,990 shares held by the German concern should be transferred on the books to Mr. Metz; that in return he should execute a demand promissory note, without interest, for the sum of $597,000; that the note should be delivered to the German company and the stock, together with a suitable transfer properly executed, should be deposited to the sole order of the German concern in a Montreal bank as security for the note.

At this time and for many years previous the American company had been operating under a contract by which the German house appointed it its sole American sales agent and agreed to furnish it with goods, in return for which the profits were to be divided according to an arbitrary scale, irrespective of stock ownership.

Under this arrangement the Germans were to have one-half the profits of the color business and 75 per cent of the profits of the pharmaceutical business, which, owing to the development of salvarsan and novocaine, had become of great importance. In return, and as a check on possible overcharges by the German house, Mr. Metz was to receive a percentage of their profits on the sales to the American company. An irrevocable power of attorney was given to Mr. Metz to vote the stock owned by the German company in the New York house and an option was reserved to the German company to purchase the stock in the event of Mr. Metz's death or retirement.

This contract was continued unaltered after the stock transaction of 1913, and under it the profits were divided as long as it was possible to remit moneys to Germany. There was also an oral understanding between the parties that the note should not be payable except out of the stocks or its proceeds, and that it could not be demanded as long as Mr. Metz should remain president of the company. It will thus be seen that the whole stock dealing produced no change whatever in the rights of the parties. After it, as before, the share in the profits of each party remained the same; power to secure and pass title to the certificates remained as before in the hands of the German company alone; the voting power remained as before in Mr. Metz's hands; in fact, none of the incident of ownership was in any way affected by the transaction.

At the outset Mr. Metz filed reports stating the existence of the note and the fact that certain stock was deposited as security for the same, but it was not until the ascertainment of the entire history of the transaction that the proof could be obtained that the transfer was not and was not intended to be of any effect. At last, however, the investigation thoroughly demonstrated this, and the stock has accordingly been taken over by me.

During the course of the year 1916, Mr. Metz, finding that he could no longer secure from Germany supplies of pharmaceuticals, especially salvarsan and novocaine, which formed the most profitable part of his business, determined to enter upon their manufacture in this country. Correspondence with the German house proving unsatisfactory, he sent his brother, Dr. G. P. Metz, to Germany to secure the necessary permission. This permission was refused, but the latter came home with a sufficient knowledge to permit the commencement of the work. A new company was organized under the name of H. A. Metz Laboratories (Inc.), a New York corporation, and this company commenced the manufacture of these two invaluable medicinals, which has been continued since our entrance into the war under license from the Federal Trade Commission.

The agency of the largest of all the German houses, the great Badische Co. of Ludwigshaven, presents perhaps the most striking example of the German methods of camouflage as applied to stock ownership. For many years this company has been represented in this country by Mr. Adolf Kuttroff, who was born in Germany, but came to this country at a very early age, and was naturalized in 1867. In a succession of partnerships and incorporations with various members of the Pickhardt family this gentleman has always conducted the business of the Badische in the United States. In 1906, shortly after the formation of the first German dyestuff cartels, when the parent houses of Bayer and Badische became members of the same body, an attempt was made to combine their agencies in this country. A company called the Continental Color & Chemical Co. was organized in New York and took over the Badische business of Kuttroff & Pickhardt, and the Bayer business of the Bayer Co.'s New York subsidiary, then known as Farbenfabriken of Elberfeld. At the end of the year, dissensions led to the dissolution of this company and the Badishe agency was then taken over by the Badische Co. of New York, a New York corporation. The stock of this company appeared to be entirely owned by Messrs. Kuttroff & Pickhardt, and on its books continued so down to its dissolution in 1917, except for small quantities of stock issued from time to time to the principal subsidiary officers of the company. All this stock, however, was held subject to an option permitting the German company to acquire it at par, and there was an oral understanding that no dividends exceeding 6 per cent should be paid. The balance of the profits, which were considerable, was distributed according to an arbitrary scale arranged by Mr. Kuttroff from time to time among the chief officers of the company. The company was dissolved in 1917 and a new corporation organized under the name of Kuttroff & Pickhardt (Inc.), which ostensibly took over only the physical stock in trade of the old company and its officers. The stock of this new company is held substantially in the same proportions by the same persons who held the stock of the Badische Co. of New York.

It will thus be seen that the ostensible stock ownership of this agency remained unchanged from 1909 until after our entrance into the war. It had thus been so arranged that no change was necessary in order to avoid the Sherman-law suits, nor in order to escape the attentions of the Alien Property Custodian on casual examination of the books. Indeed, the true facts were only ascertained after a most elaborate analysis of the books by highly skilled accountants, and of the available correspondence and intercepted cables by trained lawyers. Suspicion of the company was generally prevalent, but the first definite evidence was derived from correspondence obtained by the British authorities, which demonstrated that the New York company had been in the habit of asking for the decision of the German house on even such intimate questions of domestic policy as the increase or decrease of minor salaries of the staff. This correspondence indicated a degree of control far beyond that which was attributable to the mere power to stop supplies. It was then ascertained by the accountants that the original $25,000 paid into the treasury of the company for the first issue of $25,000 of stock came out of the moneys of the German house in the Continental Co. at the time of the liquidation of the latter concern. An intricate analysis also showed that at a time when the original capital stock of the New York Badische Co. was decreased the sums paid out went not to the ostensible stockholders, but to the German house. Finally it appeared that on three separate classes of transactions very large sums out of the earnings of the New York house were transmitted to the German house when there was no possible obligation to do so, and that this was done by the personal direction of Mr. Kuttroff without consultation with the directors or stockholders. For example: During the years 1915 and 1916 the sum of $701,944.34 was credited on the books of the German house and subsequently remitted under the head of indanthrene royalties. The company had been selling for the German house for years its high-grade indanthrene dyes which it received from the German house at fixed prices which did not include the sums described as royalties. As the goods were manufactured in Germany and nothing was done to them here, no royalty, properly speaking, could possibly be due. If any was payable, it must have been merely as an enhancement of the price. There was no understanding between the companies to any such effect.

Obviously, then, if the companies had been really independent, the president of the New York concern would never have dared to deprive his own stockholders of any such sums without legal obligation and without even consulting them beforehand. In like manner, in 1914, the sum of $477,100 was credited and remitted ostensibly as a return of advances made years before by the German house for expenses of the New York concern. Here, again, there was no previous understanding or present authorization requiring or permitting anything of the kind. At the time the alleged advances were made by the German house the New York company was operating merely as an agency on commission. There was no conceivable reason why a part of the agency's expenses should not have been met by the principal in the usual way. Yet again, without consulting anyone, Mr. Kuttroff caused these large sums to be taken out of the hands of the ostensible stockholders and put in those of the real owners of the company. Finally, in the case of the goods received by the submarine Deutschland, the same process was carried on. These goods when originally received were entered on the books like all other shipments of the German house on a sales basis; that is to say, they were treated as the property of the New York house, and the German house was credited with the price, approximately $800,000. Settlements with the customhouse appear to have been made on this basis. Some months afterwards a profit of about $400,000 had been realized. The book entries were then reversed so as to bring the transaction back to a consignment basis in which the German house would be entitled to all these profits except a commission. This change was made by Mr. Kuttroff without the authority of the stockholders or directors, and accordingly a sum of nearly $400,000 was made available for a remittance to Germany, and was so remitted. These and kindred transactions have so clearly demonstrated that the German company was the real owner of the stock of the American Badische company that a demand which is to be issued forthwith will be immediately complied with. This demand, owing to the fact that the company has been dissolved, will result in the taking over of only the assets of the company, which, however, are considerable, but these will include certain profits realized, since the dissolution, by the new corporation of Kuttroff & Pickhardt (Inc.).

From the foregoing it will be seen that the American agent companies bearing the names of each of the six great German dye companies have been taken over. This, it is to be hoped, may interpose some difficulties in the way of any attempt on the part of the latter to reestablish themselves in this country.

The situation presented by the agencies of the German dye companies of the second rank has been less satisfactory. The great Griesheim Elektron Co. was represented in this country by two concerns, Geisenheimer & Co., a partnership between American citizens, now dissolved, and A. Klipstein, a corporation of which all the stock was held by two unrelated Klipstein families, all citizens. No trace of real German ownership could be discovered, after the most prolonged and laborious investigation, both here and abroad, by all the departments interested in either of these companies, though the business of both had been largely derived from German sources throughout their existence. The house of Weiler Termeer was represented in this country by the Geigy-Termeer Co., now the Geigy Co., in which, prior to the beginning of 1917, the German house owned 20 per cent of the stock. This stock was, however, transferred before our entrance into the war to the Swiss house of J. R. Geigy & Co., a firm in good standing with the allied Governments. It has been impossible to ascertain whether this transfer was in any respect for the benefit of the German house, but in any case the great majority of the stock of this company is in Swiss and not in German hands.

Among the chemical companies in which German interests existed outside of the dyestuff business, by far the most important was the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. This was a branch of the great Frankfort gold and silver refining company known as the Deutsche Gold und Silber Scheide-Anstalt vormals Roessler, and was organized by Messrs. Roessler and Hasslacher, two old Scheide-Anstalt employees, who came to this country to introduce the goods of the parent house. From the first, the German concern and its officers and employees owned about three-quarters of the stock of the American house. The latter prospered enormously and built up a very large business. Besides selling the products of the Scheide-Anstalt, consisting chiefly of cyanide of sodium and cyanide of potassium, it built up a very large jobbing business. In 1895 the Niagara Electro Chemical Co. was founded to manufacture metallic sodium by means of the electric power available in Niagara Falls. The sodium thus produced was used for the manufacture of cyanide of sodium in this country, a business which immediately became exceedingly profitable. The stock of this company was divided so that one-third of it went to the Scheide-Anstalt, one-third to Roessler & Hasslacher, and one-third to English interests. This company had a capitalization of $100,000, made fabulous profits, and for the five years before our entrance into the war averaged over 900 per cent in dividends annually.

Meanwhile, the Perth Amboy Chemical Works had been established, with a capital of $400,000, to manufacture formaldehyde and wood-distillation products; 1,960 of the 4,000 shares of this company were held by the Roessler & Hasslacher Co.; a similar amount by another outside German corporation, the Holzverkohlungs Industrie A. G., and a casting vote was left in the remaining 80 shares with Roessler & Hasslacher. In the summer of 1916 the officers of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co. began to ask the authorities of their parent house to transfer to them more of the stock. The first request was made in a letter which contained a distinct intimation that this change in holdings need not be permanent. In subsequent letters they insisted, as reasons for the proposed sale, that the political situation was very acute; that German-owned property in this country might be sequestered; and that if any of their goods were to be imported and were to get by the British they would have to be able to say that the company which did the importing was not German owned.

This proposition met no response. On the contrary, the Scheide-Anstalt officers replied that they did not understand what Messrs. Roessler & Hasslacher wanted; that what they proposed must either be a real or pretended sale; that if a pretended sale was what was suggested, the idea was dangerous; and that if a real sale was meant a price would have to be charged which Messrs Roessler & Hasslacher would, under no circumstances, be willing to pay. They then suggested that a confidential man should be sent over to explain just what was wanted. The letters of Mr. Hasslacher had, however, left no doubt on this score, as they had asked in the simplest possible language for a sale of the stock and had requested the Scheide-Anstalt to name their price.

In general the letters outlined the proposition as clearly as it could be stated, and the Scheide-Anstalt people can not have avoided fully understanding just what was wanted, except on the supposition that the letters didn't mean what they said and that the real proposition was one which it was dangerous to put on paper. Their refusal, at all events, even to name a price, was unequivocal. They said in substance, "Rather than part with 'the best cow in the barn,' we ought to take every risk of the political situation and trust to fighting our rights in free America." Notwithstanding this discouraging statement, Messrs. Roessler & Hasslacher did send over a confidential man as was suggested. This emissary, Mr. Oscar R. Seitz, a New York lawyer of Swiss descent with some German connections, reached Frankfort on February 1. He brought no letters of introduction, power of attorney, or means of identification. The Scheide-Anstalt people did not know for certain that a confidential man was coming, or that if so, it was to be Mr. Seitz; yet he says that after a few brief interviews in which he offered no argument, other than those which had already been stated in the letters from Mr. Hasslacher to his German intimates, the Scheide-Anstalt people agreed to sell to the American representatives the following stock: 3,800 shares of Roessler & Hasslacher, at 200; 140 shares Niagara Chemical Electric Co., at 400; 80 shares Perth Amboy Chemical Works, at 200. No counter offer was apparently made, and there seems to be no hesitation about the price, nor was there any suggestion of the purchase of the balance of the German holdings. A wireless was then, on February 6, 1917, sent to the New York office, and, upon this wireless, the stocks were transferred on the books of the companies and the necessary $860,000 was remitted to the German house. The stocks thus sold carried with them control of all three of the companies. The price paid represented a book value approximately twice as great, and the average annual dividends for the preceding five years on the three blocks of stock combined figured out at over 30 per cent on the purchase price. As regards the Niagara stock, the book value was nearly four times the purchase price, while the average dividends for five years figure out an annual return of 225 per cent on the purchase price.

These facts, and a host of additional circumstances likewise pointing inevitably to the conclusion that this sale was not genuine, were brought out in a prolonged proceeding conducted by my representative before the attorney general of the State of New York, who had the power to subpœna witnesses. In the meantime the 47 per cent of the stock of the Roessler & Hasslacher Chemical Co., which was admittedly still German owned, had already been taken over. I thereupon determined, by virtue of the authority conferred upon me by the trading-with-the-enemy act and by the presidential proclamations thereunder, that the stock ostensibly transferred in February, 1917, was in fact still German owned; and accordingly I thereupon issued demands for it. This proceeding will result in the Americanization of the most important German-owned chemical companies outside of the dye industry.

Next to Roessler & Hasslacher in importance among companies of the same class is the Heyden Chemical Works. This was the subsidiary of the Chemische Fabrik von Heyden, of Radebeul, Germany, and manufactures salicylic acid and its derivatives, formaldehyde, saccharin, the medicines usually known by their proprietary names aspirin and urotropin, benzoate of soda, and many other valuable products. Of late years it has become enormously successful. Prior to the year 1917 all the stock was owned by the German company, and in addition the American concern was tied by a contract with its parent house under which all the earnings of the American concern over 8 per cent went to the German house in payment for processes and information.

When my investigation commenced all of the stock except three shares stood in the name of T. Ellett Hodgskin, a New York lawyer, who had for some time represented the firm. After considerable examination it was ascertained that this stock, which had been transferred just before our entrance into the war, had been paid at par with a sum of $149,000 borrowed by Mr. Hodgskin for the purpose from Richard Kny, father-in-law of George Simon, a German subject and the manager of the company, under an agreement contained in a letter from Mr. Hodgskin to the effect that he would thereafter retransfer it at cost. Richard Kny, it will be remembered, was the partner of Schweitzer in the Chemical Exchange Association, and he was also the ostensible owner of the Kny-Scheerer Chemical Co., which also turned out to be a purely German-owned concern, and has been taken over as such. Thorough investigation resulted in the practical admission that this transfer was mere camouflage, and accordingly the stock has been demanded and taken over. Mr. Hodgskin is now under indictment for his participation in similar proceedings in respect to another company. This stock and other rights of the German house in the American company have been sold at public auction to the Monsanto Chemical Works for $605,000 plus taxes and profits of 1917 and 1918, but the sale has not yet been confirmed by the sales committee.

An almost exactly similar situation was disclosed by the investigation of Bauer Chemical Co., a much smaller concern manufacturing pharmaceuticals, especially the widely advertised "Sanatogen" and "Formamint." In this company also the stock, which was really the property of the Berlin house of Bauer & Co., appeared by a fictitious transaction to have passed into the hands of Mr. Hodgskin. The fictitious character of the transaction in this company also has been admitted and the stock has been taken over.

Another method of concealment was disclosed in the investigation of American Pyrophor Co. (inc.). This company was organized in December, 1917, by Charles Ganz, former agent of the Treibacher Chemische Werke, of Treibacher, Austria, and to it Ganz transferred, without authority, the entire business of the Treibacher company in this country, a business consisting of the manufacture of pyrophor, an alloy of iron and cerium, which, when struck or scratched, produces fire and is used for cigar lighters, etc. Here, after investigation, the unauthorized character of the transfer was so clearly shown that it was admitted, and upon demand the stock of the company was turned over. In this, as in many other like cases, it was impossible to determine whether the ostensible new owner of the business meant to keep it for the alien enemies or to steal it for himself.

In pharmaceuticals, the most important concern in the world was that of E. Merck, of Darmstadt. This was represented in this country by Merck & Co., a New York corporation, which had an enormous and very profitable business in all kinds of medicinal preparations. The stock of this company appeared on the books to be owned exclusively by George Merck, a member of the family which owns the house of E. Merck, of Darmstadt. Investigation, however, showed that the profits of this company had always been remitted to the German house in a manner utterly inconsistent with the apparent stock ownership, and it now stands admitted that the stock was paid for with money of the German house and belongs to the latter. Mr. George Merck insists that he is the real owner of one-fifth of this stock by virtue of the fact that he owns 20 per cent interest in E. Merck, of Darmstadt. I am of the opinion, however, that indirect ownership of this kind can not be recognized under the trading-with-the-enemy act, and I have therefore determined that the whole of this stock is enemy owned and it has accordingly been taken over.

In addition to the above, I have taken over all or part of the stock of the following less important companies engaged in various lines of chemical activity: Charles Helmuth & Co. (Inc.); International Ultramarine Works; G. Siegele & Co.; Williamsburgh Chemical Co.; New Brunswick Chemical Co.; Fahlberg Saccharine Co.; Philipp Bauer & Co. (Inc.); Amid-Duron Co.; Haarmann-de-Laire-Shaefer Co.; Jarecki Chemical Works; Riedel & Co. (Inc.); Rohm & Haas; Somerset Chemical Co.; Tropon Works; Gerstendorfer Bros.; German Kali Works; F. Ad Richter Co. The liquidation of the German interests in these companies is proceeding in due course.

The amendment of November 4 to the trading-with-the-enemy act presented for the first time an opportunity for what appears to me to be the most important piece of constructive work which has been possible in my department. Until the enactment of this amendment it had not been possible to take over German patents. These patents, as had been already indicated, formed a colossal obstacle to the development of the American dyestuff industry. Evidently they had not been taken out with any intention of manufacturing in this country or from any fear of American manufacture, which the Germans apparently thought could not be successfully carried on under conditions prevailing in this country in regard to coats and to the supply of technicians and skilled labor. Upon consideration, however, it seemed that these patents offered a possible solution for the problem, hitherto unsolvable, of protecting the new American dye industry against German competition after the war. If they were not taken out in order to prevent American competition they must have been obtained as a weapon against competing imports. If they were sufficient to stop importation of competing Swiss, French, and English dyes, they would presumably serve, in American hands, to stop the importation of German dyes. This was particularly probable in the case of the product patents, since most of the coal-tar dyestuffs are definite chemical combinations to which a product patent is entirely applicable.

The idea was accordingly conceived that if the German chemical patents could be placed in the hands of any American institution strong enough to protect them, a real obstacle might be opposed to German importation after the war, and at the same time the American industry might be freed from the prohibition enforced by the patents against the manufacture of the most valuable dyestuffs. Accordingly, these considerations were laid before various associations of chemical manufacturers, notably the Dye Institute and the American Manufacturing Chemists' Association. The suggestion was met with an instantaneous and enthusiastic approval, and as a result a corporation has been organized to be known as the Chemical Foundation (Inc.), in which practically every important American manufacturer will be a stockholder, the purpose of which is to acquire by purchase these German patents and to hold them as a trustee for American industry, "for the Americanization of such institutions as may be affected thereby, for the exclusion or elimination of alien interests hostile or detrimental to the said industries, and for the advancement of chemical and allied science and industry in the United States." The voting stock is to be placed in a voting trust, of which the trustees are to be the five gentlemen who for months have been acting as the sales committee, which passes upon sales made by my department; that is to say, George L. Ingraham, former presiding justice of the appellate division, first department, New York Supreme Court; Otto T. Bannard, president New York Trust Co.; Cleveland H. Dodge; B. Howell Griswold, jr., senior partner of Brown Bros., bankers, Philadelphia; Ralph Stone, president Detroit Trust Co., and the charter is so framed that under the patents nonexclusive licenses only can be granted on equal terms to all proper applicants, and must be granted to the United States free of cost. The company is capitalized at $500,000, of which $400,000 is to be 6 per cent cumulative preferred stock and $100,000 common stock, also limited to 6 per cent dividends. The first president of the Chemical Foundation (Inc.) will be Francis P. Garvan, of the New York bar, to whose clear vision and indefatigable industry I am chiefly indebted in the working out of this plan. By Executive order obtained under the provisions of the act I have sold to this company for the sum of $250,000 approximately 4,500 patents, the remaining $250,000 has been provided for working capital, so that the company may be able to commence immediately and prosecute with the utmost vigor infringement proceedings whenever the first German attempt shall hereafter be made to import into this country. The charter of the corporation provides that surplus income is to be used for the retirement of the preferred stock and thereafter for the advancement of chemical and allied science and industry. The price thus paid was necessarily determined somewhat arbitrarily; the great majority of the patents were presumably valueless. The value of the remainder was entirely problematical and impossible to estimate.

Substantially the entire industry having combined for the purpose of this purchase, it would have been impossible on public sale to find as a bidder any legitimate manufacturer. No other bidder could, therefore, have been found on public sale except some speculative individual who might have bought them for purposes practically amounting to commercial blackmail. The combination was not objectionable to public policy since it was so organized that any genuine American, whether a stockholder of the company or not, could secure the benefits of the patents on fair and equal terms.

It is submitted that the organization of this institution constitutes the most important step that has been taken for the protection of the new industry. Tariff protection has proved utterly unavailing in the past. The German industry as hitherto organized, and still more as now organized, has had so much to gain by extending its foreign trade and by destroying the industry in other countries that it would undoubtedly give away its goods in this country for nothing in order to recover the American market. The Chemical Foundation, however, should prove a power sufficient to discourage in a most effective manner any German attempts in this direction. If, as their newspapers boast, the Germans have during the war worked out entirely new dyes superior to their past productions, the protection afforded by it will be invaluable. It has been the uniform experience of the industry that the introduction of new classes of dyestuffs follows only several years after the patenting of the original inventions on which their manufacture depends. Accordingly, the later dyes of to-day depend largely upon the patents of three or four years ago. The patents transferred to the Chemical Foundation include many German patents of 1917 and even of 1918, and also many applications still pending. These patents undoubtedly include the results of the research upon which must be based the manufacture of any new dyes which the Germans are now able to produce and market. Accordingly, at the very least, the institution will be able to protect the American industry for a considerable period, and this should be all it needs. It appears to be the universal view of the more competent manufacturers in this country that, given five years of freedom from German competition, the American industry can hold its own. Probably only a measure such as the embargo which appears to have been imposed by the British and French against all foreign dye importations can furnish this protection to the degree necessary to insure the safety of the American industry; but short of such an embargo, the Chemical Foundation would seem to furnish all the aid that possibly can be given.

At the same time the new institution promises an incalculable benefit not only to the dye and chemical industries, but to the whole American manufacturing world. The opportunities which it can offer and the rewards which it can hold out to competent research scientists should far exceed those of any institution unconnected with industry, and it may well, therefore, form the nucleus of the greatest research organization in the country.

TERMINATION OF WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had hoped to be able to call up the peace resolution on Monday, but a number of Senators are away who will return on Monday or Tuesday. Therefore, I give notice that I shall call up the peace resolution on Tuesday immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 8, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Clerk, Mr. William Tyler Page, offered the following prayer:

O Almighty God, who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men, grant unto the people of the United States that they may love the thing which Thou commandest, and desire that which Thou dost promise, that so, among the sundry and manifold changes of this troublous world, our hearts may surely there be fixed where true joys are to be found; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. ELSTON, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. WHEELER, for 10 days, on account of important business.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Duley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11960) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 795) to provide for the disposition of public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the reclamation laws and which are no longer needed in connection with said laws.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey calls up the conference report on the retirement bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 8, 9, and 15.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 5, 6, 10, 11, 13, 14, 16, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed by the House insert the following: "Provided, That no person employed in the executive departments within the District of Columbia, retired under the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be replaced by additional employees, but if the exigencies of the service so require, places made vacant by such retirement may be filled by promotion or transfer of eligible employees already in the service"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Between the words "be" and "entitled," in line 8 of the amendment, insert the word "legally," so that the amendment shall read: "Provided, That if in case of death the amount of deductions to be paid under the provisions of this section does not exceed $300, and if there has been no demand upon the Commissioner of Pensions by a duly appointed executor or administrator, the payment may be made, after the expiration of three months from date of death, to such person or persons as may appear in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions to be legally entitled to the proceeds of the estate, and such payment shall be a bar to recovery by any other person"; and the House agree to the same.

HANNIBAL L. GODWIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS STERLING,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the committee of conference submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Struck out the words "and approval" from the phrase "90 days next following the passage and approval of this act." The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

On amendments 2 and 3 the Senate bill provided for a uniform retirement age of 70 years for all employees.

On amendment No. 2: Struck out "seventy" and inserted "sixty-five." The House recedes from this amendment.

On amendment No. 3: "Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 62 years of age and railway postal clerks at 60 years of age." The Senate recedes from its disagreement and agrees to the amendment with an amendment which fixes the retirement age of the first class at 65 years and of the railway postal clerks at 62 years.

On amendment No. 4: Included under the provisions of the act "American citizens who are employees of the Panama Canal above the grade of laborer." The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 5 and 6: Included employees of the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds and the Botanic Gardens. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

On amendment No. 7: Struck out from the provisions including regular annual employees of the District of Columbia the words "appointed directly by the commissioners." The Senate recedes from its disagreement, agrees to the amendment with an amendment restoring this language and add thereto "or by other competent authority."

On amendment No. 8: Made the provisions of the act retroactive to September 30, 1919. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 9: Provided for higher annuities in cases of employees whose contributions would equal the present worth of such higher annuity. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 10: Clarifies the provision excluding military service upon which pension or compensation is based. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

On amendment No. 11: Excludes from the computation of the period of service so much of any period of leave of absence as may exceed six months. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 12: Provides "That no person employed within the District of Columbia retired by reason of the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be replaced by additional employees." The Senate recedes from its disagreement with an amendment so that this proviso shall read: "Provided, That no person employed in the executive departments within the District of Columbia, retired under the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be replaced by additional employees, but if the exigencies of the service so require, places made vacant by such retirement may be filled by promotion or transfer of eligible employees already in the service."

On amendments 13 and 14: Provides for the approval as well as certification of the Civil Service Commission in cases of retention in active service of employees after retirement age. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

On amendment No. 15: Provides for six years' retention in service after retirement age in place of four years. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 16: Substitutes the words "becoming eligible for retirement on an annuity" in the place of "reaching the retiring age" in the provision for return of contributions upon leaving the service. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

On amendment No. 17: Provides that all money returned to an employee upon his severance from the classified service must be redeposited upon reinstatement before benefits under the provisions of this act revert. The Senate recedes from its disagreement and agrees with an amendment providing that such money must be redeposited with interest.

On amendment No. 18: Provides that the Commissioner of Pensions may pay over the balance of contributions to the estate of a deceased employee or annuitant, where the sum does not exceed $300 and no letters testamentary or of administration have been taken out, to the person in his judgment entitled thereto. The Senate recedes from its disagreement and agrees with an amendment which inserts the word "legally" before "entitled."

On amendment No. 19: Struck out the words "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920," in the authorization for an appropriation for the administration of the law. The Senate recedes from its disagreement.

FREDERICK R. LEHLBACH,
LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD,
HANNIBAL L. GODWIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the only serious point of disagreement between the two Houses was with respect to the retiring age fixed in the bill. The amendment to the original bill adopted by the Senate and incorporated in the bill as it came to the House established a uniform retirement age of 70 years for all classes of employees. Amendments 2 and 3 of the House not only reduced the age of retirement but established two other classes for whom an earlier retirement age was fixed. One class was for mechanics, city and rural mail carriers, and post-office clerks, and the second class was for railway postal clerks. The reason for the differentiation between those two classes and the general run of employees was obviously the more arduous duties and the earlier superannuation that experience shows does result in those services.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What age was finally agreed upon?

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is what I was about to state. As far as the general run of employees are concerned, those who work in clerical positions here in the departments, the age was fixed in conference at 70 years, which was the age in the Senate bill, but the conferees agreed that as to the classes who perform arduous manual labor, some of them under climatic conditions that tend to undermine health, namely, the letter carriers, mechanics, and post-office employees, the age for them was fixed at 65 years, and for the most strenuous form of public employment—railway mail clerks—it was fixed at 62 years.

The conferees were unanimous in reaching that conclusion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did the gentleman read an article in the Washington Star in which it was figured out that this bill would save the United States Government four or five million dollars a year?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I did not read it, but I have no doubt that that will be the effect of this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. To save money?

Mr. LEHLBACH. To save money, yes; not only to save money indirectly by increasing the efficiency of Government employees but actually save cash money.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman suppose we can make the people of the United States believe that?

Mr. LEHLBACH. The people of the United States, at least in most sections of the United States, are intelligent and reasonably educated, and, of course, there will be no difficulty in getting them to understand it.

The other amendment to which I wish to advert is the so-called Dickinson amendment, which prohibits replacement. We have preserved that amendment but changed the verbiage, so that its true intent and meaning have been clarified.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and then I will move the previous question.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the action of the House in agreeing to the conference report on the bill for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service completes the action of the House on this highly important legislation, and practically assures its adoption as a part of the law of the land.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the Sixty-sixth Congress shall have placed to its credit another of those far-reaching constructive measures for which forward-looking, progressive-thinking men have long labored earnestly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if we are going to spend much time in such eulogies of the Sixty-sixth Congress, I think we ought to have a quorum here.

Mr. MONDELL. This session of this Congress will pass into history conspicuous for its record of efficiency, economy, and constructive enactments, and among these latter none will entitle the Congress to the favorable consideration of the country more than this bill, which will add to the stability, efficiency, and economy of the public service, and relieve deserving and faithful public servants from the haunting fear of a penniless old age.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me two minutes?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois two minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the conference report agrees to the amendment which strikes out, in section 15, the words:

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

That leaves the section to read:

SEC. 15. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for salaries and for clerical and other services, the purchase of books, office equipment, stationery, and other supplies, and all other expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act, including traveling expenses and expenses of medical and other examinations as provided in section 5 hereof.

The original provision made an authorization of an appropriation for the current fiscal year. This makes an authorization for an appropriation for these services, apparently limited hereafter to $100,000. I do not know what the effect of it will be, but I expect when the $100,000 is exhausted somebody will make the point of order that Congress, having specifically limited the amount which could be appropriated for these purposes, can not put in an appropriation bill anything for this purpose against a point of order. It may require an amendment to the law.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LEHLBACH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 3149) providing for the retirement of civil-service employees, of the same tenor as the bill S. 6190 and which is on the calendar, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 3149 be laid on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present. I do this because the Republican side of this House, which can not keep a quorum here, has continuously refused me an opportunity to speak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names.

The SPEAKER. On this call 276 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY AND COAST GUARD.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I present a conference report to be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11927) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Coast Guard through the temporary provision of bonuses or increased compensation.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter and note connected with it that I have received relative to the organization of the National Guard. This comes from the adjutant general of the State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter and note to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the National Guard Association plan or the plan of the adjutant general?

Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin. It is virtually opposing the Wadsworth amendment to the present Army bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and note are as follows:

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Madison, Wis., May 4, 1920.

Hon. JAMES G. MONAHAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: May I ask your immediate consideration of the inclosed memorandum relating to the amendments (Senator WADSWORTH) of H. R. 12775, Army reorganization bill, and such action as is possible to prevent their adoption.

The reasons why this very urgent request is preferred are fully given in the memorandum.

Sincerely, yours,

ORLANDO HOLWAY,
The Adjutant General, Wisconsin.

Senate amendments, Army reorganization bill, H. R. 12775.

STATE OF WISCONSIN,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Madison, Wis., May 3, 1920.

If the proposed Senate amendments become law, the entire military code of the State of Wisconsin, and quite certainly of most, if not all, other States, becomes at once inoperative in respect of the National Guard in its changed status, and all State appropriations for military purposes unavailable for their use, since both code and appropriations were made for Organized Militia of the State and not for Federal troops stationed within the State in whatever degree these may be subject to the governor's orders. Possibly State legislatures have the right to appropriate moneys, and may in time do so, for the maintenance of soldiers not enlisted in the State service, but the contrary opinion will be eagerly seized upon and pressed by the many who oppose and wish to minimize appropriations for military purposes.

In the meantime the National Guard will either not be formed, or, if now formed, go down through lack of proper support. In like case with many others, this State, if the law is enacted, is confronted with the necessity of immediately mustering out 4,000 and over officers and men who are already commissioned and enlisted under the national-defense act oath. There will be no authority to continue in their behalf any of the usual State allowances for armory rentals, for care of property, or for other legitimate company expenses which have aggregated annually a sum approximately $250,000,000.

Under the national-defense act authority is reserved to the States to train their troops according to the discipline prescribed by Congress. Under the proposed law State governors are entirely divested of this authority. State armory drills and the dates, the duration, and even the location of camps and schools of instruction will be fixed not by arrangement and order of State governors but at the will of the War Department, which, in practice, will customarily intrust camp details to the respective Army corps commanders within whose jurisdiction the States concerned are comprised.

Those who favor the enactment of the Senate amendments seek to convey the impression that the force to be organized in pursuance of these amendments will be largely and usually under the control and subject to the orders of the several State governors.

In reality the exact contrary is true.

It is almost entirely through their authority to organize and to train the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress that State governors have had to do with the Organized Militia of the several States.

Under the proposed system this authority, both as to organization and training, ceases to exist.

Practically, a State governor will have occasion to use and to issue his orders to State troops only in emergencies arising from public disasters or riots, actual and threatened.

Such occasions are, fortunately, very infrequent. During the past 40 years, for instance, the governor of Wisconsin has called detachments of the organized militia of the State into active service on account of public disaster or threatened riot only seven times. The largest force called at any time was a regiment, and on the other occasions a battalion or less sufficed.

The history of other States in this respect does not vary materially from that of Wisconsin. Even in these rare occasions the language of the amendments (p. 64), "entitled to use," and of the National Guard oath of enlistment, "subject to the Constitution and laws of the United States," renders exceedingly doubtful whether an application to the President of the United States or the War Department official to whom the President's authority may have been delegated, must not in each case be first made by a State governor before the latter may use the troops which the law merely entitles him to use.

A governor, as State executive, is by the law qualified for the direct command of the troops in question, is furnished with grounds to seek or claim such command successfully, but he must first ask for it. In practice the law will be so construed.

But this objection is of minor importance in comparison with the effect of the proposed amendments on National Guard recruitment.

In connection with the placing of the administration of all military training in the sole and direct charge of the War Department, it should be noted that the proposed law puts no maximum limit on the duration of annual training camp periods. There must be in each year at least 15 days of such training, and may be as many more as the War Department shall require. But whether the camp period or periods extend 15 days or more, the national guardsman, by reason of his enlistment oath, is compelled to attend. If he is absent, he is specifically by the law made subject to court-martial, not as a member of the Organized Militia but under the drastic and rigid rules which govern Army courts-martial. He is even subject to the same procedure for nonattendance at drills at his local station.

Whether or not a procedure that may involve such severe penalties is necessary, the widespread odium which has attached to recent Army courts-martial and their excessive sentences will quite completely deter from enlistment in a Federalized National Guard. Few men will voluntarily assume the onerous duties of guard service, if minor derelictions in such service may subject them to months and even years of imprisonment at Fort Leavenworth or elsewhere. It is of little use to represent to the men that the authority for such courts-martial is necessarily in the proposed law, but will be exercised only in extreme cases. Influenced by the record of past courts-martial and sentences, they are so fearful of the contrary that they will not put their personal liberty in jeopardy by enlistment.

I am firmly convinced that only a few weak units of Federalized National Guard can be formed. Verbiage stripped away, what is required of the members of this force is, after all, enlistment in the Army of the United States. The success of the Regular Army recruiting service, with a multitude of officers and men under pay and with apparently unlimited funds for advertising and other expenses, does not augur well for the recruitment of a Federalized National Guard which has none of these aids and advantages.

With so much that will be certainly lost, it is difficult to comprehend what is to be gained by the enactment of the Senate bill as now proposed.

Training and discipline of the troops, if there are any, remain the same, the change being merely in the administration. Officers, if there is occasion for them, are to be selected from the same eligible classes and under conditions which practically assure the selection of the same persons as under the present law. Power is not even shorn away from much-berated State adjutants general, except as it is proposed to be taken from State governors, without whose orders adjutants general have no authority.

The uses of the proposed State troops in contradistinction to organized militia are certainly not amplified, but are, on the other hand, restricted.

George Washington, whose precepts have been quoted much as the devil uses Holy Writ, said in his last message to Congress (1795): "In my opinion Congress has power by the proper organization, disciplining, equipment, and development of the militia to make it a national force capable of meeting every military exigency of the United States." What reason is there now to discredit this well-considered counsel?

The national-defense act (June 3, 1916) is the first fairly adequate step taken by Congress toward such proper organization, disciplining, equipping, and development of the organized militia. The peace-time operation of this law was confined to a few months. Yet the force, aggregating nearly 400,000 officers and men, which came into being in consequence of the law, has proven in war its equality with the best.

Why change the system now except by amendments that will tend to assure more rapid development of the National Guard in its present status and provide means and facilities for a greater amount of training?

With the status of the organized militia clearly defined in law, there is less real opportunity for misunderstanding and jealous rivalry, less occasion for cleavage than would arise between officers, permanent and reserve. The organized militia, whether officers or men, would remain as it is, a citizen army whose military service would be without thought of permanency and for protective and defensive purposes only. The permanent officers who served with and helped the militia would receive in their degree the same regard and reward that was given to Grant and Sherman.

O. HOLWAY,
The Adjutant General, Wisconsin.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13780, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

For care and maintenance of greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $9,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. I assure the Members of the House that what I have to say is very pertinent to the bill, and that I do not intend to be personal in my remarks. I merely want to say something that I had in my mind yesterday, and I hope there will be no objection to my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we have had three days, or almost three days, of general debate upon this bill, when the widest latitude was given to speak upon any subject. We now have been trying to read the bill for three days and have read only 63 pages. I shall be constrained to object to any request for unanimous consent while we are reading the rest of the bill for any remarks that are made out of order. We must confine our consideration of the bill to debate of the items of the bill if we are to finish it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will say to the gentleman that I did not have opportunity to speak upon the bill under general debate. I have not talked upon anything except a little while yesterday, when a matter was brought up in which I am particularly interested. Ordinarily I do not participate in discussion of legislation of which I have not made some special study. I have made a study of this subject, and I think the gentleman will facilitate the passage of his bill if he will give me 10 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman be granted time to speak out of order, as in general debate, then some one will want to reply. Then some one will want to make another reply, and such a course does not facilitate the passage of the bill. If the gentleman's request be granted, then the request of any of the other 434 Members for the same thing must be granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa object?

Mr. GOOD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for five minutes on the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For lighting the Executive Mansion, grounds, and greenhouses, including all necessary expenses of installation, maintenance, and repair, $8,600.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Yesterday a statement was made on the floor of the House——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the amendment. Is it to strike out the figures "$8,600," at the top of page 63, for lighting the Executive Mansion?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I made the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word, and the gentleman from Illinois will understand that it is only for the purpose of getting the floor. If anyone objects to any statement that I make, I shall take my seat in an orderly way. Yesterday the statement was made that the graves registration service should not have the amount of money asked for, to wit, $485,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will proceed in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting the public grounds: For lighting the public grounds, watchmen's lodges, offices, and greenhouses at the propagating gardens, including all necessary expenses of installation, maintenance, and repair, $24,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In that statement, as I was saying, they said that they were swivel-chair jobs in that service. I have before me a charge prepared in the War Department which I presume the chairman of the committee does not want to have put into the RECORD——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For heating offices, watchmen's lodges, and greenhouses at the propagating gardens, $4,500.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The last word here, Mr. Chairman, is "$4,500." I call the attention of the House to the fact that in the chart that I referred to a moment ago there is not a single item carrying a salary greater than $2,250, and that the head of no bureau besides that receives more than $2,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Telegraph to connect the Capitol with the departments and Government Printing Office: For care and repair of existing lines, $500.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Yesterday it was said that these places were held by Democrats. I have made an investigation and find——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that the gentleman from New York is not in order. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington Monument: For custodian, $1,200; steam engineer, $960; assistant steam engineer, $840; fireman, $660; assistant fireman, $660; conductor of elevator car, $900; attendants—one on floor $720, one on top floor $720; three night and day watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $8,820.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York has the right to make the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. CALDWELL. As I said, I have investigated, and I find 51 male employees there, of whom 40 are Republicans.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. And the remainder of the employees are 227, all of whom are females.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that the gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, lights, oil, waste, packing, tools, matches, paints, brushes, brooms, lanterns, rope, nails, screws, lead, electric lights, heating apparatus, oil stoves for elevator car and upper and lower floors; repairs to engines, boilers, dynamos, elevator, and repairs of all kinds connected with the Monument and machinery; and purchase of all necessary articles for keeping the Monument, machinery, elevator, and electric plant in good order, $4,500.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, which is $4,500. This $4,500 is about the amount of salary and allowances to a colonel in the Army; and I call attention to the fact that the head of the Cemeterial Bureau is a colonel in the United States Army and he is a registered Republican.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, this $4,500 that is in the motion I have made——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CALDWELL. This $4,500 I move to strike out of this item altogether amounts to about as much as the salary of the chief clerk and his three assistants in the cemeterial organization up there, every one of whom is a registered Republican, and there is no man in the cemeterial organization not a civil-service employee who is a Democrat, and the Republicans on that side of the House have stricken from the bill their salaries. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is making a series of amendments and he is discussing them out of order. Is there no way by which words out of order under this condition can be eradicated from the RECORD?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois occupied the position of the present occupant of the chair a great deal longer than the present occupant of the chair, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois for any motion that is in order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Building where Abraham Lincoln died: For painting and miscellaneous repairs, $200.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the item.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. It is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire me to discuss it?

Mr. BLANTON. It is only $100, and I do not think it needs any discussion. It is a private matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that the United States Government does not own this house in which Lincoln died and for which this appropriation is made. Every year in this bill there is an appropriation of money out of the Public Treasury to keep in condition or improve privately owned property. The United States Government, as a matter of fact, should own this house, because Mr. Lincoln died there. It may be all right to charge an admittance fee to places in which distinguished men were born, because occasions of birth are those of happiness and joy; but it is all wrong to charge an admittance fee to the pilgrims who come to this shrine where Lincoln died.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. GOOD. The committee was anxious to find out the exact facts with regard to the ownership of this building, and this is what the hearings show. I read from page 968, bearing on this subject:

The CHAIRMAN. You are asking $200 for painting and miscellaneous repairs at the building where Abraham Lincoln died.

Col. RIDLEY. That building is just across from the Ford Theater Building. This house contains about 13 rooms, on four floors, and the first floor, containing four rooms, is occupied by a museum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Government owns that property?

Col. RIDLEY. Yes, sir; and this money is spent in repairs, including painting and plumbing, repairing the heating plant, and keeping up the property.

The clerk of the committee has investigated the matter and finds that the Government does own the property, but does not own the collection in the building.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then my information has been wrong; but does not the gentleman believe that the pilgrims, as I was saying, who come to this shrine of grief should not be charged an admittance fee to that place?

Mr. GOOD. Well, yes; because the Government has an arrangement with the owner of the collection and has permitted him to put a collection very properly in the building where Abraham Lincoln died. Now, I agree with the gentleman that the better way would be for the Government to own the collection and not charge any admission, but the Government simply owning the building and the man who has charge of it owning the collection, he makes some nominal charge—I think it is 25 cents—for admission, but the Government does own that building.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I ask what rent he pays for that building?

Mr. GOOD. I think he pays no rent at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is turned over to him free of rent for commercial purposes; is that correct?

Mr. GOOD. The rent paid, if any, is simply a nominal rent. The building was turned over to him because of the historical association and because of the wonderful collection that this man owns and which is housed in that building. He takes care of the property, and the only expense to the Government is the small expense annually of about $200 for painting, and so forth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But it does seem to me that the people from over the country who wish, out of a spirit of reverence, to go to that house, since it is owned by the Government, should be permitted to do so without paying a fee, and I sincerely trust that in the next bill provision will be made by which the public will be relieved from the payment of a fee for going into this house. No spirit of commercialism should enter that transaction at all.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JUUL. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, who has had an intimate acquaintance for several years with the District of Columbia Committee, what, if any, steps have been taken at any time to avoid the charge of an admission fee to enter the house where President Lincoln died?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. So far as I am advised, the District of Columbia Committee has never had a bill before it with respect to the subject, but protests during a good many years gone by have been made against appropriating money for the support of this commercialized institution which is held so sacred by the people.

Mr. JUUL. And the District of Columbia Committee has never taken any steps?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The District of Columbia Committee has really never had anything before it bearing on the subject.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] that the Government does own the property, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to state to the gentleman in reference to this collection that the owner of the present property is the gentleman by the name of Mr. Oiroyd. He has been trying for years to get the Government to purchase this collection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not doubt that at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Not in order that he may make any considerable amount of money out of it, but he feels, as the gentleman believes, and I believe, and as we all believe, that it should be the property of the Government, and that no admittance should be charged therefor. I think it would be well for the proper committee to take this matter in hand in order that fees may no longer be charged.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In addition to what I said, I will say that I do not believe that the hat which Lincoln wore upon the occasion of his assassination, or other articles of wearing apparel, should be exhibited for a fee to the curious public.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order, and I want to state the reason that I reserved the point of order——

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman make his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give the reasons for it. I will vote for any kind of a reasonable appropriation to buy these relics in this house and separate them from any commercial proposition, and let it be open free to the people of the United States. I think we ought to take steps to separate this matter from the commercial side of it, and not let the man stay down there day and night and turn this Government building over to him rent free and permit him even to sleep there and maintain his family there, and charge every person that comes in there to see his private collection. I am in favor of having that collection owned by the Government, and will vote for any kind of a reasonable appropriation for it. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MILLER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Has the committee or the chairman any knowledge of how much money this man is making out of this house that the Government furnishes him free rent for?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. MILLER. Has it ever had such knowledge?

Mr. GOOD. Not that I know of. This committee would have no jurisdiction of that subject. If we should carry an item for the purchase of the collection it would be subject to a point of order. The Government owns this building and appropriates $200 a year to take care of it; to replace the broken glass and take care of the plumbing, painting, and so forth. It is a very small sum.

Mr. MILLER. What I am getting at is the amount of money this man is making out of this project.

Mr. GOOD. This committee has never gone into it, and it is not within the province of the committee.

Mr. CALDWELL. The owner of these relics occupies this building as a home, does he not?

Mr. GOOD. He occupies the upper story, I think.

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, at the high rate of rent in Washington, D. C., is the Government receiving anything for it?

Mr. GOOD. I think it receives a nominal rent.

Mr. CALDWELL. How much?

Mr. GOOD. I think, comparatively, a very small amount.

Mr. CALDWELL. The man gets the house free of charge to live in in this day of high rent, and he gets an opportunity to charge an entrance fee from people who come onto Government property, and now we offer a proposition here to repair the house he is living in.

Mr. GOOD. I am advised that when this property was purchased by the Government it was with the understanding that this collection should be put in there and the man should have the right to charge a reasonable entrance fee to persons viewing this collection which he owns.

Mr. CALDWELL. How long ago was that, could the gentleman tell us?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know, but it was a number of years ago. We have been appropriating money for it for repair of the building 10 or 12 years.

Mr. KING. I can give the gentleman some information regarding it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will be glad to have it.

Mr. KING. I think it was about 30 years ago; possibly but 25. In Springfield, Ill., there is the old Lincoln home, where he lived and where he was married. This entire collection was kept in that house for many years. When John P. Altgeld was elected governor of the State of Illinois he forced Mr. Oiroyd to take his collection and get out of the house, and this house here was the only place he could find where the collection could be exhibited.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of a reflecting pool in West Potomac Park, $84,000.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Iowa in reference to this item on line 12 of $84,000 for continuing the construction of a reflecting pool in West Potomac Park, that has no relation to the reflecting pool we have appropriated for for the Lincoln Memorial?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it is the reflecting pool that is situated between the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial.

Mr. BLANTON. It is in addition to what is on the property?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I have no objection if it is a part of the Lincoln Memorial lake. I did not know about the other.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation of $5,000 made in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, for unveiling and dedicating the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including erecting and taking down viewing stands and putting the grounds in sightly condition, is made available for said purposes during the fiscal year 1921, and shall also be available for removal of such portion of the entire fence on the east side of the Botanic Garden as may be necessary to improve the surroundings of the said memorial.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the item. Being a member of the Committee on the Library, I have taken an interest in the Botanic Garden, and I do not believe that the stone or brick substructure on which the iron fence itself is built should be torn down. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he would not be willing to agree to the amendment which I have submitted to him?

Mr. GOOD. I see no objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order and offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The point of order could not be withdrawn by any agreement of which you could not hear a word as to what the gentleman said.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no point of order now at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of lines 17 to 25, both inclusive, on page 64; and also by striking out lines 1 and 2 on page 65, and by inserting the following in lieu thereof:

"The appropriation of $5,000 made in the sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, for unveiling and dedicating the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including erecting and taking down viewing stands and putting the grounds in sightly condition, is made available for said purposes during the fiscal year 1921, and shall also be available for removal of so much of the iron part of the brick and iron fence on the east side of the Botanic Garden as in the opinion of the superintendent of the garden may be necessary to improve the surroundings of the said memorial. However, the large stone or brick gateposts on the east side of the garden shall be taken down to a level with the substructure which also is made of brick or stone."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What is this last? Is this a part of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This is the amendment: The amendment strikes out that entire paragraph and inserts other matter in lieu of it; that is all.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thought the gentleman's amendment as it was read provided only for taking down the iron fence. Is this latter part an addition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The amendment providing for taking down the iron fence also provides for the taking down of the brick and stone wall and large gate posts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's idea under his amendment would be that this wall would be left there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. It is about 2 feet or more high. I believe that is necessary to have a physical line of demarcation between the highway and the garden. Instead of having only an imaginary line there, there should be a physical line of demarcation, because there are valuable plants and flowers in the garden that might be injured, and then when shows and parades come along there ought to be some line, visible line, beyond which the crowds may not surge.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman that there ought to be something there, but this brick wall would probably cost as much to make it look presentable as it would cost to put up a concrete coping along there that would not be more than 2 feet high.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But the gentleman must remember that there is no provision in the bill to do anything of that sort, and my proposition is to leave the low wall there until the very thing that the gentleman suggests can be done.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I had thought of offering in this bill, possibly where it provides for the removal of this fence, an amendment to the extent of authorizing it to be put in proper repair. The expense of putting a coping there would not be very great, and you would have to put something on top of the brick wall anyhow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; it is level. When the iron fence is taken off it will be burned off by the acetylene process, which will leave the iron posts smooth on the top of the stone surface.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have a high opinion of the views of the gentleman from Kentucky and of the superintendent down there, and I assume that the gentleman has recently talked with Mr. Hess about the subject?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Who is responsible for putting the monument to Gen. Grant in this place? The reason I ask is that people who come to Washington have expressed surprise to me and asked why there was not a monument to Gen. Grant in the city of Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I entertain no doubt that the Fine Arts Commission is. But about that I have nothing to say.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Congress was responsible and President Roosevelt was responsible.

Mr. BEE. The result is that people believe that Gen. Grant has no monument in the city of Washington. They see that base there without any monument on it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is none yet.

Mr. DALLINGER. What is proposed to be put on that central pedestal—a statue of Gen. Grant?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know anything about the details of the monument. I am only looking after the preservation of the grounds and the flowers after the dedication of the monument.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa where the statue is?

Mr. GOOD. The sculptor has been ill for a number of years, and year after year it has been necessary to postpone the ceremonies incident to the dedication. Col. Ridley has brought to the committee the information that the sculptor has regained his health and that the work is practically completed, and he hopes that the monument will be in readiness for dedication this fall.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aqueduct Bridge: For continuing the construction of the bridge authorized in section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of what is now known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in place thereof," approved May 18, 1916, $500,000, one half to be payable out of the Treasury of the United States and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is practicable to name the bridge the "Georgetown Bridge"? It used to be called the "Aqueduct Bridge," and I understood they propose to call it the "Key Bridge." I have no objection to naming something after Key. I think locality should have something to do with it. This bridge is at Georgetown, and Georgetown, as I understand, was named after George Washington, and it is quite as appropriate to commemorate it with his name as that of anybody else.

Mr. GOOD. I think it is correct that the words "Aqueduct Bridge" do not describe anything. Any bridge over a body of water might be called an aqueduct bridge.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move to insert after the word "Columbia" this language, "which bridge shall hereafter be known as the Georgetown Bridge."

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 65, line 10, after the word "Columbia," insert "which bridge shall hereafter be known as the Georgetown Bridge."

Mr. GOOD. Line 3 should be changed and line 6 should be changed also.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is part of the title.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I do not believe Georgetown was named after George Washington. I think it was named after King George the Third.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not, although the gentleman may be right. I understand it was named after George Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DALLINGER. I do so for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee, if he has any idea as to when this bridge will be completed?

Mr. GOOD. My recollection of the testimony is that it will not be completed during the next fiscal year. In fact, not enough money is appropriated in this bill to complete the bridge, and it is anticipated that it will require about $500,000, if I recollect aright, in addition to the amount already appropriated and the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For works authorized by the river and harbor act of 1916, as follows:

Delaware River, Pa. and N. J.: For continuing improvement from Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, to the sea, in completion of contract authorization, $300,000.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, we remember that when the river and harbor bill was pending before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, when they were proceeding with it in the usual way they have of proceeding, all of a sudden, overnight, at the instance of the Republican steering committee of the House, they slashed that total appropriation down to less than $12,000,000.

In view of the fact that it is proposed to establish a 9-foot channel in the Ohio River, which if it was ever completed would be one of the greatest arteries of commerce in this country, I want to ask the gentleman why was not that emergency appropriation carried in this bill?

Mr. GOOD. The appropriations carried in this bill for river and harbor work are no different than similar appropriations in former years. Where a contract is let for river and harbor work authorized in a river and harbor appropriation act and where money is necessary for the carrying on of that contract, the money is appropriated in this bill. That has been customary heretofore.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I notice on page 66 an appropriation for the survey of the northern and northwestern lakes. That is not by virtue of any former act of Congress, is it?

Mr. GOOD. That is purely a proposition for surveying and mapping, and principally mapping with regard to navigation, and that, too, is an item that has been carried in this bill for many years.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Are all these appropriations for rivers and harbors, beginning with the paragraph that we now have under consideration, and following it, pursuant to former acts of Congress to carry out those appropriations?

Mr. GOOD. They are, and the river and harbor acts carrying the authorizations to which they relate are named in this bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask a question for information. I do not know whether the gentleman can give it or not, not being chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but there was an agreement back in 1910 to establish a 9-foot channel in the Ohio River. Was that in an act of Congress?

Mr. GOOD. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then I am wondering why, pursuant to that act of Congress, there is no appropriation for the Ohio River at this time?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. There is an authorization for the continuance of what we call the continuing contract work, and when the engineers need any money they submit estimates for the continuation of the work, and it is always carried in the sundry civil bill, as it has been for a number of years. I am not advised on this particular point now, but I assume that they did not ask for any money for the continuance of the work.

Mr. GOOD. Nothing at all on the Ohio River.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Because they have already got enough; but it would belong in this bill if money were required for the coming year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That appropriation is carried in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But the river and harbor bill this year did not carry anything for the Ohio River.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The river and harbor bill of this year did not carry anything for any specific project.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely not. It is a lump sum, and the spending of the small amount that was appropriated is left to the Army engineers instead of Congress directing it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They can use it for that purpose if they want to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is different from the former river and harbor appropriation acts. It is a departure from those acts.

Mr. GOOD. So far as this bill is concerned there is no departure. The appropriations herein contained are simply for meeting the payments on contracts already entered into, to carry out authorized projects.

Mr. CALDWELL. I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Are there any items for the continuing of river and harbor improvements that the Board of Engineers asked for, that ordinarily would have been appropriated for in this bill, that were not carried in the bill? In other words, has the committee turned down absolutely all of the amount requested for any one item by the river and harbor engineers?

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is now, without looking through the entire list, that the committee gave just what was estimated for except in cases where the department withdrew their estimates. They were for contracts that had been entered into, and the Government must pay its obligations, and it was on that theory that we gave what was estimated where the estimate was not withdrawn.

Mr. CALDWELL. So that there has not been any saving by the committee, but the saving was by the withdrawal of estimates by the Board of Engineers?

Mr. GOOD. The committee felt that it had no control over that matter.

Mr. OSBORNE. I move to strike out the last two words. In regard to the Ohio River I will say that there is an unexpended balance of several million dollars in the fund for that purpose, so that it is well taken care of.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course, there is an unexpended balance of several million dollars, because the war came on and they were prevented from expending it; but if the Ohio River were to receive the same consideration at this session of Congress that it has been receiving in Democratic Congresses, in an effort to carry out the act of Congress establishing the 9-foot channel, they would not have been in one another's way in building these locks and dams clear to the mouth, and they could have expended all the money appropriated. That is no argument at all. It is just simply that they did not get what was coming to them under the act of Congress, that is all. These locks and dams are hundreds of miles apart, and there would be no conflict at all in the work. They could have worked on all of them if they had had the money.

Mr. OSBORNE. I will say in reply to the gentleman that the Board of Engineers report that there is ample money at their disposal for the improvement of the Ohio River, amounting, as I remember, to about $10,000,000. I am not sure as to the exact amount.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If that is true——

Mr. OSBORNE. Of course it is true.

Mr. KINCHELOE. When the word came overnight from the Republican steering committee of the House to cut the river and harbor bill down to about $12,000,000, and when even the ranking Democratic members of the committee did not know what had been done, why was it that the contracts for the Ohio River were not taken care of?

Mr. OSBORNE. The making of the lump-sum appropriation in the river and harbor bill did not in any way affect the large balance at the disposal of the engineers for the Ohio River.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why certainly it did not. I am aware of that.

Mr. OSBORNE. The money is there ready for use.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But we are not carrying out the contract to establish a 9-foot channel, which the people all along the Ohio River expected to be done, and they took Congress at its word when they said they would do it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman is a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I find in the hearings a statement by Col. Taylor that the work on the Hudson River, N. Y., was held up during the fall. Does the gentleman know why that was held up, or how it was held up?

Mr. OSBORNE. It was held up during the war.

Mr. CALDWELL. No; last fall after the war it was held up.

Mr. OSBORNE. I have no information except what is contained in the hearings.

Mr. CALDWELL. Col. Taylor in the hearings says that we do not need it, the work was delayed during the fall, and we find we can get along without it, we are cutting down appropriations wherever we can and it will not be necessary to have this money. I would like to find out what was the reason for the delay.

Mr. GOOD. We did not care as long as they were not pressing for the money. We were trying to hold down the bill because of the condition of the Treasury, and when he said that he did not need the money, that was the end of it to us.

Mr. CALDWELL. Regardless of the necessities of New York Harbor.

Mr. OSBORNE. I think New York Harbor is pretty well taken care of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Flood control: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, as follows:

Mississippi River, $6,670,000, to remain available until expended.

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and other boundary and connecting waters between said lake and Lake Superior, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation, $125,000.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the Committee on Appropriations and the entire membership of this House upon the approval of the item of $6,670,000 for flood control on the Mississippi River for the next fiscal year under act of March 1, 1917.

My main purpose is to call the attention of the House to some very definite results attained under this law, which are of great importance to the country at large, as well as the Mississippi Valley, and it will not be necessary to go into any ancient history in order to do this.

The flood-control act of 1917 deals with the problem of flood control on the Mississippi River from Rock Island, Ill., to the Head of the Passes near the Gulf of Mexico, a distance of more than 1,000 miles. The fertile lands composing the alluvial valley of the Mississippi from Rock Island to the Gulf are protected from its flood waters by a system of levees made secure in many places by bank revetment. This levee system had been imperfectly formed and constructed through more than a hundred years of effort. For the lack of some general comprehensive plan and coordinated force the whole project had been largely a matter of patchwork until more recent years, when the Federal Government began to cooperate more liberally with the State and local authorities.

But never until the passage of the flood-control law, framed by the Committee on Flood Control and approved by Congress, was there any well established and unified plan under the sanction and control of the National Government giving substantial guaranty of permanent relief. Let me make a statement here which will give some insight into the actual results already achieved.

During the flood of 1912, which was one of the greatest in the history of the river, there were 11 breaks in the system of levees. In 1913 there were 5 breaks in the levee lines. In 1916, 2. It was during the flood of 1916, and while working out the provisions of the flood-control act, that the Committee on Flood Control inspected the entire proposition from Cairo to New Orleans. It would be quite impossible to give a definite estimate of the great loss or to depict the sufferings occasioned by the floods resulting from these breaks in the levee system. It has been estimated at anywhere from sixty to one hundred million dollars for this short period.

To-day another great flood in the Mississippi, measuring close to the highest record of any of its predecessors, has been and is being conducted safely to the Gulf without a single break in the system making up 1,680 miles of levees, and with a minimum of loss and damage.

The flood-control act requires that one-third of the sums expended for levee construction shall be contributed by local interests, and that the local interests in addition to this shall acquire all necessary rights of way, provide maintenance, and all attendant expenses.

This involves the absolute cooperation on the part of the various levee districts created and organized in accordance with the laws of Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana with the Federal Government; both as to the plan and method of levee construction and as to the amounts of money to be contributed by each, as well as the expenditure thereof. Nothing could more fully attest the vital interest of those concerned in the completion of the project than the fact that this cooperation has been complete and that the work has proceeded without hindrance or interruption under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission, the Chief of Engineers, the Secretary of War, and the War Department. And right here, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say further that the State authorities and the various levee boards connected with this work have rendered the very highest quality of service to the people of the Mississippi Valley in the administration of the flood-control law.

The work is not yet complete, but the progress made and the results attained have completely justified every claim and promise made by the proponents of this measure, and establishes the fact that every appropriation made by Congress to carry out the provisions of this act has been urgently needed and well and wisely expended. Nothing short of a thorough demonstration of these facts would meet the approval of the present Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this great and important work is making it possible to hold intact, and available for the uninterrupted purposes of production of the most valuable crops known to our soil, some 30,000 square miles of the most fertile lands in the world. Confidence has been restored and established where once doubt and uncertainty prevailed. People from other sections of the country no longer halt and hesitate about making their homes and investing their capital in this wonderful section. The possibilities are limitless, and the true facts are just now becoming a matter of public knowledge and attracting the attention of the country.

When the Committee on Flood Control was created some doubt was expressed as to the wisdom of that action, and there was some opposition, based upon the belief that it would result in duplication of effort and that the entire problem might as well be handled by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors or some other of the then existing committees of the House.

Experience had taught those who had been struggling for years for relief against the flood waters of the Mississippi River that this problem had outstanding merits of its own compelling the very highest consideration, and was entitled to independent and comprehensive action, and that it should be separated from the uncertainties surrounding the annual appropriation for rivers and harbors or other activities not necessarily involving continuing contracts, and that the same should be true of the flood-control question in general.

Time and achievements have amply sustained the confidence and expectations of those who urged the creation of a separate committee, and justified the action of the House and demonstrated its wisdom, not only as to the formation of the committee, but also as to the passage of the act of March 1, 1917, relating to the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River, Calif., and which act also contains general provisions forming the basis for future legislation relating to flood control.

I predict that in the future this act will be referred to as the first great piece of national flood-control legislation in this country, and that it will be cited as forming the foundation of much constructive and beneficial legislation along that line, and also that the Committee on Flood Control will become one of the most important committees of this House, as its work reaches into every section of the country where there is a flood problem meriting consideration and action by the National Government.

Since a number of questions relating to flood control have been presented to the committee recently, it might be well to call attention to the general provisions of the act of March 1, 1917, which point out the method of procedure and conditions essential in bringing a project within the requirements for legislative action. These provisions are as follows:

SEC. 3. That all the provisions of existing law relating to examinations and surveys and to works of improvement of rivers and harbors shall apply, so far as applicable, to examinations and surveys and to works of improvement relating to flood control. And all expenditures of funds hereafter appropriated for works and projects relating to flood control shall be made in accordance with and subject to the law governing the disbursement and expenditure of funds appropriated for the improvement of rivers and harbors.

All examinations and surveys of projects relating to flood control shall include a comprehensive study of the watershed or watersheds, and the report thereon in addition to any other matter upon which a report is required shall give such data as it may be practicable to secure in regard to (a) the extent and character of the area to be affected by the proposed improvement; (b) the probable effect upon any navigable water or waterway; (c) the possible economical development and utilization of water power; and (d) such other uses as may be properly related to or coordinated with the project. And the heads of the several departments of the Government may, in their discretion, and shall upon the request of the Secretary of War, detail representatives from their respective departments to assist the Engineers of the Army in the study and examination of such watersheds, to the end that duplication of work may be avoided and the various services of the Government economically coordinated therein: Provided, That all reports on preliminary examinations hereafter authorized, together with the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors thereon and the separate report of the representative of any other department, shall be submitted to the Secretary of War by the Chief of Engineers, with his recommendations, and shall be transmitted by the Secretary of War to the House of Representatives, and are hereby ordered to be printed when so made.

In the consideration of all works and projects relating to flood control which may be submitted to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for consideration and recommendation, said board shall, in addition to any other matters upon which it may be required to report, state its opinion as to (a) what Federal interest, if any, is involved in the proposed improvement; (b) what share of the expense, if any, should be borne by the United States; and (c) the advisability of adopting the project.

All examinations and reports which may now be made by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors upon request of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors relating to works or projects of navigation shall in like manner be made upon request of the Committee on Flood Control on all works and projects relating to flood control.

The problem next in order under these provisions is that of protecting from flood waters the basins of the Atchafalaya, Red, and Black Rivers, in Louisiana, and their tributaries. A complete survey, as required, has been made and submitted to Congress, and I have introduced H. R. 12348 for the purpose of accomplishing this protection. Favorable action upon this measure will be sought at this session of Congress. After the merits of this problem are once fully known, I feel that Congress will not hesitate to commit the National Government to its solution.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Do I understand that these surveys provided for in lines 6 to 14, page 66, are for the purpose of determining what obstruction or retainer shall be put at the lake so as to control the water during the flood season and let it out gradually?

Mr. GOOD. No; these surveys are of the same character as those by the Coast and Geodetic Survey on the Atlantic and Pacific coast waters. They are rather an aid to navigation, so that charts can be prepared for navigators.

Mr. CALDWELL. This whole paragraph is a part of the flood-control proposition?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. CALDWELL. Should not the bill have had some notation in there? At the top of the page as written by the committee you start out with "Flood control," and in line 3 is the language, "as follows." Then you start with the Mississippi River, an appropriation of $6,676,000.

Mr. GOOD. Then comes a new head, "Survey of northern and northwestern lakes."

Mr. CALDWELL. I see; but it is not printed in the larger type.

The Clerk read as follows:

California Débris Commission: For defraying the expenses of the commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893, $15,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. In 1893, by act of Congress, this commission was given $15,000 for the year in order to defray its expenses. Since that time $15,000 has been appropriated for it every year, amounting to $375,000. That commission has a large revolving fund. It collects thousands of dollars in fees, out of which may be paid everything that this $15,000 would pay. For that reason I shall make the point of order against the item because as an unauthorized appropriation.

At the conclusion of the act of Congress there is this language. It will be found in volume 27, Statutes at Large, page 511:

The sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to defray expenses of said commission.

Now, I take the position that by that language an annual authorization has not been made, and as conclusive evidence of that is the language in the money clause of the bill that it is to be "immediately available." I do not think Congress was then looking to future appropriations, because it would not look years ahead and say that each and every subsequent appropriation should be "immediately available."

There is no language anywhere to be found which justifies the annual appropriation of this money, and because of that, and because the commission does not need it, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the item is subject to a point of order. Whatever may have been contained in the language of the appropriation, to which the gentleman refers, certainly the act creating the commission created a permanent commission. I read from the act of March 1, 1893, chapter 183, section 1, 27 Statutes, 507:

That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the California Débris Commission, consisting of three members. The President of the United States shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the commission from officers of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army. Vacancies occurring therein shall be filled in like manner. It shall have the authority, and exercise the powers hereinafter set forth, under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers and direction of the Secretary of War.

The act then provides for organization and duties, and section 4 is as follows:

That it shall be the duty of said commission to mature and adopt such plan or plans, from examinations and surveys already made and from such additional examinations and surveys as it may deem necessary, as will improve the navigability of all the rivers comprising said systems, deepen their channels, and protect their banks. Such plan or plans shall be matured with a view of making the same effective as against the encroachment of and damage from débris resulting from mining operations, natural erosion, or other causes, with a view of restoring, as near as practicable and the necessities of commerce and navigation demand, the navigability of said rivers to the condition existing in 1860, and permitting mining by the hydraulic process, as the term is understood in said State, to be carried on, provided the same can be accomplished, without injury to the navigability of said rivers or the lands adjacent thereto.

As I understand it, the object of this legislation was to correct certain abuses in hydraulic mining. It was the habit of persons engaged in hydraulic mining to so mine for minerals and ores as to fill the river with débris, dirt, and things of that kind, which interfered with navigation. This commission was established to correct such abuses, and the amount that we are carrying here is only for the administrative expenses of the commission in carrying on the work authorized by that act. I can not see how any language that might have been carried in an appropriation for a given year could modify the terms of the law, outside of the expenditure of the appropriation for that year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has taken the position that any commission which is authorized of necessity carries an appropriation with it, notwithstanding that none may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Kentucky contending that if the law does authorize the creation of a commission which is permanent in character it is not in order to appropriate for that commission or for the work which the act authorizes that commission to perform?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly I do; and the Chair will recall many instances where upon the floor when bills and resolutions were under consideration for the purpose of creating commissions many gentlemen would rise and ask if it is going to cost anything, and the answer would come, "No; that no appropriation is carried and none is authorized." In this case only one right to appropriate is authorized, and that is for the year 1893, to put this commission on its feet and start it to do the business until it begins to collect the license fees from these hydraulic miners who operate along these two rivers. As I said, they have this revolving fund in their hands from which they can pay every expense, and I take the position, and I feel quite confident that I am correct in it, that unless an annual appropriation is authorized the appropriation ends with the one which is made in the bill creating the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The language of the paragraph to which the gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order is as follows:

California Débris Commission: For defraying the expenses of the commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893, $15,000.

If the law did not authorize this expenditure, the appropriation would not be effective, because it could not be expended by its express terms. The Chair has read the language of the act creating the California Débris Commission. It creates a permanent commission, with powers which clearly are intended to extend indefinitely—very broad powers with reference to the regulation of the silt from hydraulic mining and the navigability of streams. The gentleman from Kentucky contends that the language in the last paragraph of the act, which provides as follows—

The sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to defray the expenses of said commission—is in fact a limitation upon the appropriation which may be made for the use of the commission. The language of the act itself negatives that contention; and even if it did not, the language the gentleman from Kentucky refers to is clearly an appropriation and not an authorization for an appropriation. The mere fact that it is made immediately available simply indicates that the commission might begin to expend it at once instead of at the beginning of the fiscal year.

The Chair thinks that the paragraph is clearly authorized by law and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the paragraph will not be stricken out. The work done by the California Débris Commission is a very important work. We authorized an appropriation just a few years ago of $6,000,000 to carry on part of the work of the California Débris Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then, what do they want this $15,000 for?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. To carry on the work authorized by the act of March 1, 1893. This other is the act of March 1, 1917. This is to pay the administrative expenses of the commission, and there is no sort of doubt that the California Débris Commission is performing a very great service to the entire State of California. I think it will be a very great mistake to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is it not true that that commission is collecting millions of dollars in fees from hydraulic miners who operate along these two rivers?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not know, I will say to the gentleman, how much they have collected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman know they are collecting a very large amount?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I really have no information on that particular point. I do know that the hydraulic mining that was authorized by the Congress up there in the mountains worked great destruction to the streams of California and not only interfered with navigation but caused great floods in the Sacramento Valley, and this commission was set to work many years ago to work out a scheme by which that could be prevented, and they have been doing the work well and efficiently, and it would be a great misfortune, indeed, now to abolish it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does not the gentleman think it is very unwise for the Congress to create commissions with a revolving fund and then pay any deficit which occurs? Why would it not be better for us to say, "All the money you get in you turn into the Treasury, and all the money you need, if we think you need it, we will appropriate."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not care to express an opinion on that, but I do say it was a very wise act of Congress that created the California Débris Commission, and that their work has amply justified their appointment and all the money that has ever been expended.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman has been a Member of this House for a long time and been a very able Member——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I admit that.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does not the gentleman realize that the method that is being pursued is one that will tend to create extravagances and not economy?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; I think the whole tendency of the California Débris Commission has been to save expenses. I think it is a very economical commission. I think it has been administered economically and efficiently and that the work that they have done has redounded greatly to the benefit of California and to the general welfare.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman know how many employees they have and what their overhead expenses are, and anything of that kind?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do they report to the Congress?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They have not many, for they only get $15,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do they report to the Congress all their overhead expenses and number of employees?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They make a very full report to the Chief of Engineers; yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Mississippi will permit, what he said is very true. But the inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] would indicate that there was a great deal of money collected in the way of fees. The fact of the matter is that hydraulic mining in the State of California is practically dead. There is very little hydraulic mining in progress in the State of California, the débris of which goes into the navigable streams. There is a little work on the Trinity and some rivers that are nonnavigable, but very little on the streams that are navigable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman please state, then, the necessity for the continuation of this commission?

Mr. OSBORNE. I am not informed as to the details but I am merely referring to things of which I have knowledge. As to these details I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman from California is correct that the purpose for which this commission was created has ceased, why, then, assuredly this appropriation should stop.

Mr. OSBORNE. I would reply that that is only one purpose. Everything connected with the navigability of streams, as, for instance, silt coming down either by hydraulic mining or by natural processes of erosion, which are very strong from those steep California mountains. There are great quantities of silt which come down into the Sacramento and the other rivers there that has to be attended to by this commission.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that while the commission does have receipts they receive from mine operators in a sum equivalent to 3 per cent of the gross output, that is all expended in removing this silt and débris from the streams and with regard to the dams, but this appropriation is simply to pay salaries of the officers of the commission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is what I supposed.

Mr. GOOD. We have always appropriated for the salaries of officers out of the Treasury even though they had additional funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus, or commutation therefor, and necessary transportation, $150,000: Provided, That the Surgeon General of the Army is authorized to pay not exceeding $125 for each artificial limb or apparatus for resection furnished in kind hereafter under the provisions of section 4787, Revised Statutes, as amended.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I notice this paragraph carries $150,000 for artificial limbs. Was there any testimony before the committee to indicate how many soldiers have made application for artificial limbs?

Mr. GOOD. This has nothing to do with the soldiers of this war; this has to do only with the soldiers of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to know the number of soldiers of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars who have made applications. Have the hearings developed this question?

Mr. GOOD. This is the third year, and every third year we have a larger appropriation, because under the law the limbs are to be furnished, or commutation for the limbs. If the artificial limb is not furnished then, as I recall it, if the soldier has lost a leg he is entitled to $70 in cash, or if he lost an arm he is entitled to $50 in cash. Now, the total number of cases of limbs furnished——

Mr. CALDWELL. What page?

Mr. GOOD. Page 1034. Legs, 48; arms and hands, 1; total, 49. But the commutation cases amounted to 2,902. Practically all persons who are entitled to relief under the provisions of the present law take the money instead of the limbs. For the next year they anticipate that there will be furnished, in kind, artificial limbs, 45, and commuted cases, 2,610, or a total of 2,655.

Mr. WATSON. Why do they make application so long after the war?

Mr. GOOD. They are entitled to it.

Mr. WATSON. Have the natural limbs been amputated?

Mr. GOOD. No. The life of a limb is fixed at about three years, and where the soldier or sailor has lost a limb he is entitled either to a limb or commutation for the limb.

Mr. WATSON. If a soldier had lost an arm and obtains an artificial one, is he permitted to be benefited under vocational training?

Mr. GOOD. This has to do with the soldiers of the Civil War?

Mr. WATSON. Quite true. My inquiry is, Are the soldiers of the Spanish-American War benefited by the various vocational acts?

Mr. GOOD. No. It has only to do with the soldiers of this war.

Mr. WATSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment? Is not this amount considerably larger than the amount carried in the last year's bill?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; because it is a third year. It is only $50,000 for the current year, and it was explained to the committee that they could not reasonably expect to get along for much less than $150,000 for this year, which is the third year, and every three years the appropriation is about $100,000 more than the ordinary appropriation.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to strike out, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 4, the balance of line 4, and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 67, line 4, after the colon, strike out all the balance of line 4 and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion not long ago to visit one of the great hospitals where the soldiers are now being treated and prepared with artificial limbs. I saw the limbs that were being furnished by the Government, and I noticed that the legs furnished were of two characters, one cheap and one expensive, and the boys who were required to wear these legs all bitterly complained of the cheaper leg. It was not as comfortable, it was not as serviceable, and yet it was necessary, under the appropriation that we had at that time, in order that the men might be given something, to furnish a certain percentage of those cheaper legs. I also have had occasion to talk with one of the Marine Corps who was in the great battle at Belleau Wood, and whose hand was shot off just above the wrist in such a way that the muscles that were in the nub end of his wrist were controllable by him. In other words, by thinking he was going to move his finger he could move certain of the muscles in the arm. He was at Walter Reed Hospital, and was discharged from there, and they gave him an artificial hand. He could bend one or two of the fingers or the thumb by touching them. It was a crude thing, upon which he slipped a glove of the same kind he was wearing on his left hand, and when he walked down the street one would not notice that he was a cripple. In that respect it was of some service to him. It held his sleeve in place. But that young man had purchased from his own funds a hand that the Government did not furnish him and could not furnish him, because it did not have the authorization, that when fitted upon his arm and covered with a glove was so nearly perfect that one had to examine it to see that it was not a real hand. And by the operation of his muscles that were still good in the nub of his arm that was left, he could use that artificial hand with such skill that he could pick up a dime off the table, he could write with it, and do nearly all of the things that in his walk of life he was called upon to perform in order to earn his daily bread.

Now, I do not think that this Congress is justified in limiting the single appropriation for the single artificial limb to $125, because in those days before the prices had increased this artificial hand cost that young man, out of his own pocket, $125. To-day the price is probably $250. And wherever you find a man whose muscles are in such condition that that kind of a hand would make him a new one, it is only fair the department should be authorized to expend the other few little dollars, in order that that man might go through life taking care of himself with that degree of comfort that those few dollars would give, and which he will be deprived of if you limit this amount to $125. Therefore, I very seriously urge——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask unanimous consent for one more minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDWELL. I very seriously urge in behalf of those men whose limbs are still in condition where they can benefit by these wonderful pieces of mechanism that this proviso be stricken from the bill in order that the department may have authority to buy those limbs for those men.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman talks one way, but his amendment would do just exactly the opposite thing from what he is asking to be done. Under section 4787 of the Revised Statutes the Surgeon General is permitted to buy limbs out of this appropriation and to pay not to exceed $75 for a leg and $50 for an arm.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. GOOD. In just a moment. The War Department brought before the committee the fact that the war-risk patients who have lost either an arm or a leg in this war have made such a drain upon the manufacturers of artificial limbs that they are unable under the present law to provide limbs for the soldiers of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War, and therefore they ask the authority that they be permitted to spend as much as $125 for an artificial limb, notwithstanding the provisions contained in section 4787 of the Revised Statutes. It was the request of the Surgeon General. It seemed to us like a large increase, but we felt that we should not refuse it in this small number of cases, only about 50 a year, who are asking for the limbs. But the Surgeon General told the committee if this provision was given those who demanded the commutation or cash instead of the limb would still receive only $50 in the case of an arm and $75 in the case of a leg. But where a man wanted an artificial leg, if the War Department had to pay $125 for it, it should be permitted to buy it and furnish the leg to that man. That was the reason for the amendment.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for calling my attention to the wording of the statute. The idea I wanted to reach was to get a sufficient sum of money so that these high-class and well-constructed and wonderfully constructed artificial limbs could be purchased in cases where the nub left was of such a character that they could use them.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman's amendment prevails, then they could not pay more than $75 for one of these limbs.

Mr. CALDWELL. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, Mr. Chairman, to modify my amendment. Instead of striking out from "Provided" down to the end of the section, strike out the figures "$125" and make it "$250."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. I offer a modified amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers a modified amendment. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: On page 67, line 5, strike out "$125" and insert in lieu thereof "$250."

Mr. CALDWELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say something. I thank the chairman of the committee for calling my attention to the wording of the old statute. But what I have in mind is that I want to make it possible that in those few cases where the nub of the natural limb left is of such character that these specially constructed artificial limbs can be operated, the department in those cases, where a man asks for that kind of limb, shall be authorized and permitted to buy that kind of a limb for the man.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that inasmuch as there are only 31 Members present, apparently, we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. All the gentlemen on that side did not rise. I hope the gentleman will not do that. This is Saturday, and we want to make progress.

Mr. RUBEY. Yesterday you were very anxious to have a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. No. The gentleman from Iowa has not made the point of no quorum at all.

Mr. RUBEY. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], a member of the steering committee, did make a point of order that there was no quorum yesterday.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, that is a last year's bird's nest. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUBEY. Well, in view of the remark of the gentleman from Illinois, I will withdraw my point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Central Branch, Dayton, Ohio: Current expenses: For pay of officers and noncommissioned officers of the home, with such exceptions as are hereinafter noted, and their clerks, weighmasters, and orderlies; chaplains, religious instruction, and entertainment for the members of the home, printers, bookbinders, librarians, musicians, telegraph and telephone operators, guards, janitors, watchmen, fire company, and property and materials purchased for their use, including repairs not done by the home; articles of amusement, library books, magazines, papers, pictures, and musical instruments, and repairs not done by the home; stationery, advertising, legal advice, payments due heirs of deceased members: Provided, That all receipts on account of the effects of deceased members during the fiscal year shall also be available for such payments; and for such other expenditures as can not properly be included under other heads of expenditures, $62,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman some questions. I notice that, on page 67, line 24 of the paragraph under consideration, you ask for an appropriation for "religious instruction." I want to ask the chairman what the necessity for that is? I have read the hearings, and I find nothing that will justify this appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the attention of the chairman of the committee was not attracted to those words, and I do not believe the attention of the committee as a whole was. It is just the language that has been carried for all of the homes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I have brought it to the attention of several gentlemen, and every one of them has said it is probably an oversight. We already have chaplains.

Mr. GOOD. I am advised that those words have been there for a great many years—ever since appropriations were carried for the homes. Of course, we carry an appropriation for the chaplains, and I suppose there are certain expenses connected with the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Now we have chaplains included. Would the chairman object to striking out the words "religious instruction"? I do not think an appropriation should be made for the promotion of any particular religion in this country.

Mr. GOOD. The term "religious instruction" can cover an illustrated lecture, or something of that kind, for the instruction or entertainment of the soldiers. If the gentleman can point to a single abuse that has come from carrying these words in the bill, I would not object to an amendment to correct it. But I do not think such abuses could exist.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Would the gentleman object to "religious exercises" instead of "religious instruction"? I do not think any particular creed should be promulgated.

Mr. GOOD. And I do not think there is.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, in practice there are two chaplains ordinarily in each of the homes, and I have some knowledge about it, because one of the homes is near by where I live. There is generally a place of worship for the Catholic Church, and then a place for the Protestant Church. These people are called and employed from private life. The salary is not great. There is a place of worship, one place for one set of people and another place for another set of people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman that I have no objection to that. I am in favor of that. But I am opposed to appropriating Government money for the purpose of teaching any particular kind of religion.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is what this says—"religious instruction."

Mr. CANNON. That is a very broad term, "for the purpose of teaching religion." Would the gentleman put it in for the purpose of teaching irreligion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I would not. I am in favor of religion.

Mr. CANNON. Undoubtedly here and there there might be a man in a home who did not believe in any religion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And you have chaplains there, and it is their duty to teach them without their using the people's money for the purpose of teaching any particular religion.

Mr. CANNON. How could a chaplain do anything if he did not teach religion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. You have no right to appropriate money to teach any particular religion. You see the comma after the word "chaplains" makes quite a difference when you come to read the law.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is overcritical. There has been no friction in the administration of this appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is what we want to get away from.

Mr. CANNON. There is no criticism. Once in awhile a Swedenborgian might say, "I want a chaplain." And once in awhile there might be a Baptist, a "hardshell" Baptist, or what they used to call a "forty-gallon Baptist" [laughter]——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I do not think we ought to appropriate money for the teaching of any particular religious instruction of any particular kind, whether Catholic or Protestant, or Mohammedan, or otherwise, at the expense of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman take all the various churches, the Methodist Church South and the Methodist Church North and the Christian Church and the Christian Scientist—would he put them all in and allow each to have a chaplain?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes; every one that wants to.

Mr. CANNON. Then if there was only one member of the home at Dayton, which is the largest of all the homes, that wanted a Christian Scientist chaplain, or a Swedenborgian, we would build a chapel for the chaplain of that denomination and the one member?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What is a Swedenborgian?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman is not contemporary with Swedenborg, but it is a very extensive church, scattered over the world. If the gentleman will read the Divine Love and Wisdom, he will find it is a very taking and plausible presentation by Swedenborg.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Oh, I do not yield further for that kind of a lecture. [Laughter.] Would the gentleman be willing to strike out the word "instruction" and say "exercises"?

Mr. GOOD. Let me say this to the gentleman: The gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, one of the very ablest chairmen the Committee on Appropriations ever had, was affiliated with the Catholic Church, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, another very able chairman, was a member of the Protestant Church. They both carried this same language in the bills reported when they were chairmen of the committee, and I will say to the gentleman that I never heard a thing raised against it, or any suggestion that there was any abuse. I do not think it makes any difference whether you have the word "instruction" or the word "exercises." To me it makes no difference. I only call the attention of the gentleman to this. I think it is a bad policy to change the language in an appropriation bill unless we find some substantial reason for it. Now, if there were an abuse anywhere I would be very glad to agree to some change or elimination if necessary.

Mr. TILSON. Would not the word "exercises" be particularly objectionable? That is just the thing that the gentleman is trying to prevent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. No.

Mr. TILSON. Whereas instruction might be by literature, by pictures, by lectures, or by any other means; but if you limit it to exercises, it might be considered the exercises of some particular church.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. No; not at all. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence: For pay of commissary sergeants, commissary clerks, porters, laborers, bakers, cooks, dishwashers, waiters, and others employed in the subsistence department; food supplies, except articles of special diet for the sick, purchased for the subsistence of the members of the home and civilian employees regularly employed and residing at the branch, their freight, preparation, and serving; aprons, caps, and jackets for kitchen and dining-room employees; tobacco; dining-room and kitchen furniture and utensils, bakers' and butchers' tools and appliances, and their repair not done by the home, $325,000.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman a question with reference to the item of tobacco in line 21, page 68. That tobacco is for the old soldiers and not for the enlisted men, is it not?

Mr. GOOD. We carry a provision here which is for the benefit of the soldiers of all wars—anybody in the homes.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman does not quite get my question. Is the subsistence provided in this section subsistence for the inmates of the homes, or is it for the employees of the homes?

Mr. GOOD. The subsistence is for both the employees and the inmates. They have to furnish subsistence to the men who work on the farms of the homes.

Mr. CANNON. Who are soldiers.

Mr. GOOD. Many of them are soldiers, who are employed.

Mr. CALDWELL. If they are soldiers enlisted in the Regular Army, are they not carried in the Regular Army appropriation bill?

Mr. GOOD. If they are still in the Regular Army they go to the Soldiers' Home here at Washington, and this does not carry an appropriation for them.

Mr. CALDWELL. But I mean the commissary sergeants. The commissary sergeant is an employee of the home. He is not in the home as an indigent, or one being cared for there. He is there to help care for the indigent. Does this subsistence go to him?

Mr. GOOD. That is not a military rank. He is an officer of the home, and this does not go to him.

Mr. CALDWELL. Are there any men in the Regular Army drawing their pay, who have the status of enlisted men or officers in the Army, assigned to this home?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. CALDWELL. The commissary sergeant mentioned in line 13 is not a commissary sergeant as we understand him when we speak of the Regular Army, but only a man assigned to commissary duty in the home, and not a part of the Army?

Mr. GOOD. That is correct. He is employed in the home.

Mr. CALDWELL. How much tobacco is given per day per man?

Mr. GOOD. They have a regular ration, as I recall the testimony.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is the tobacco issued to the employees of the home in the same quantity that it is issued to the inmates of the home?

Mr. GOOD. The employees who are not members of the home must purchase their own supplies. They are not furnished free tobacco and things of that kind. Only the members of the home receive those things.

Mr. CALDWELL. That is what I wanted to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the central branch, $47,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "hospital," in line 14, page 71, may be correctly spelled.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the spelling of the word "hospital" will be corrected.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the central branch, $60,000, together with not exceeding $150,000 for the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In the preceding paragraph you authorize the transfer of the material not needed at the Hampton Hospital. Are they going to close up the hospital there?

Mr. GOOD. No; that hospital was taken over by the War Department during the war, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. It was operated as an Army hospital. The Army has turned that hospital back to the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home. It is a part of their property, one of the branches that was operated for a number of years, and is the Southern Branch. When the Army took it over they threw out a great deal of the hospital supplies and equipment and installed their own hospital supplies. If we do not permit them to leave what they have installed, so that it may be used by the board of managers, it will be necessary to carry a large appropriation to buy new materials for supplies for the hospital service.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $85,000.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. OSBORNE: Page 74, insert after line 12 a separate paragraph as follows:

"For the construction of a new sanitary fireproof hospital on the grounds of the Pacific Branch, $500,000."

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. CANNON. Not authorized by law.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. OSBORNE. I have introduced a bill in the House in this Congress, and in the previous Congress, making an appropriation for this hospital. At the Pacific Branch of the Soldiers' Home there are 3,500 members, of whom 2,500 are at the home all the time. The hospital building is a frame building constructed about 30 years ago, very much out of date, and there is very great need for a new hospital there. There are soldiers there not only from the Civil War but the Spanish War and the World War in that home now. Even though it may be inconvenient to build the hospital now it will have to be built in a very short time. It ought to be done now.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman says about the need for additional accommodation for the service in view of what we are doing. I think we will have to build two more branches of the soldiers' home. There perhaps ought to be two branches in the South—one to take care of the colored soldiers and the other the white soldiers. There will have to be something of that kind done perhaps in the near future, especially when conditions for construction become a little more favorable; but for the present the committee felt that it could not engage in this building program. To engage in it at one place would mean that we must follow it in other places. However, there is a provision here that we have passed over as to the allotment of $46,000,000 appropriated to the Bureau of War Risk whereby this appropriation may be allotted to the soldiers' homes and can be used to make alterations and repairs where absolutely necessary to provide hospital facilities for the soldiers.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not understand whom these homes are used by. Here is one for the volunteer soldiers. Are those soldiers of the late war?

Mr. GOOD. They are admitting soldiers of all wars into these homes. There are 10 branches. Under the present law the person to be admitted to a home must be indigent, but we are removing that stigma under this bill so as to permit the soldiers of this war, or any other war, who need hospital treatment or the care of the home to go and receive that treatment or care.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Before the last war broke out the homes were nowhere near full.

Mr. GOOD. They are not now. There are nearly 10,000 vacant beds in the homes.

Mr. OSBORNE. The Western Branch Home is always full.

Mr. GOOD. No; there was a decrease last year from 1918 of 293, but not anything like the decrease in the other homes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if there is any provision made for taking care of the colored soldiers as far as hospital treatment is concerned? I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I have had a number of letters from my district from colored men writing me that they were suffering from tuberculosis; that they had reported the matter to the department, but they had not done anything for them; and that unless something was done immediately it would be too late. I know a number of negroes living in my district who are in need of treatment and something ought to be done to take care of them. They went to the war, did their duty, and they, as well as their parents, are constantly writing me to know if something can not be done for them.

Mr. GOOD. I think there is this to be said about the negro: He feels that the Government has recognized the Indian, made provision for him and for the white race, but does not make a special provision for the colored race. They feel that they would be better satisfied if they had a home that was their home, peculiarly their home, and I am somewhat in sympathy with that view, but I think that, so far as the War Risk is concerned, as far as the Public Health Service is concerned, they have made no discrimination on account of color.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am in favor of discrimination so far as segregation is concerned.

Mr. GOOD. I did not mean segregation; I meant in regard to the treatment that each has been accorded, the treatment which he deserved, irrespective of color.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. The negro is admitted to the soldiers' homes now?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; there is no discrimination.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. He is taken care of there.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I notice in the Santa Monica item and other similar items there are seven distinct items aggregating $16,500, all in large sums and all in round numbers. How does it come out that the items appropriated last year were all used up to the last cent? Who audits these various accounts and who furnishes them to Congress and to the committee?

Mr. GOOD. The items are not all used up to the last cent.

Mr. WELLING. It seems so from the paragraph we are considering relating to Santa Monica.

Mr. GOOD. The unexpended balances go back into the Treasury. I suppose the gentleman has been making comparison with the Hampton Branch or the Southern Branch. The reason for the reappropriation of unexpended balances in that paragraph is that the Congress appropriated the money on the theory that the War Department would turn back the home. The War Department did not do it until a month or two ago, and therefore these large unexpended balances are reappropriated. At the other places all the unexpended balances are covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. WELLING. Can the gentleman say how much of this $16,500 was covered back into the Treasury, approximately?

Mr. GOOD. No, I can not. In going over the various items we took up each item, found out how much they expended during the last year, how they were getting along with the current appropriation, and in determining the amount that we would recommend for the next year we were guided entirely by their expenditures of not only the last year but the current rate for the present year.

Mr. WELLING. Does it ever occur that the homes exceed the amount appropriated?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and they come for a deficiency in that case. There will be some deficiencies this year. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing for all branches: For clothing, underclothing, hats, caps, boots, shoes, socks, and overalls; labor, materials, machines, tools, and appliances employed, and for use in the tailor shops, knitting shops, and shoe shops, or other home shops in which any kind of clothing is made or repaired, $275,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee if any of the clothing that is surplus on hand in the War Department can be sold to supply the needs of this department? They have on hand quite a good bit of surplus clothing, not necessarily outer clothing, but underclothing and shoes and things of that character.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, of course they can purchase it, and I am not sure but what it would be their duty to purchase it. As far as the clothing is concerned I assume that they would purchase it, but a great deal of the clothing is made right in the homes.

Mr. McKEOWN. I so understand.

Mr. GOOD. In most of the homes they have factories for making clothing. In fact, these homes are model governmental institutions. The food they serve is not only wholesome but splendid, palatable food. Then, too, they have their own factories and they have their own laundries. The expense of laundering the clothing and doing the laundry work at the homes last year averaged about one-half of 1 cent per piece. The average cost per man per day in the homes last year was about 97 cents. Notwithstanding this, they have greenhouses and if a soldier becomes ill and goes to the hospital flowers from the greenhouses are taken over every day to place in his room. The very best care imaginable is taken of the members of the homes. The homes are run in a way so that when a member wants to work he goes out to work on the farm or in the machine shop or the carpenter shop or does repair work and is paid something for it. The homes are model institutions, and are carried on like a well-conducted Government institution of this kind should be conducted.

Mr. McKEOWN. I thank the gentleman for the information, but it appears to me that if there were large stocks of underclothing that would be suitable on hand in the War Department they ought to be purchased by these homes.

Mr. GOOD. I am sure that the board of managers are taking advantage of those very conditions in buying that sort of thing.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will say to the gentleman that when we demobilized the Army we passed a bill directing the Secretary of War to supply each soldier who was discharged with a full equipment, and that practically wiped out the major articles of clothing which we had, which would ordinarily have been surplus, and it was necessary in the last appropriation act to begin to buy shoes again.

The Clerk read as follows:

The following persons shall be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the order of a member of the board of managers, namely: Honorably discharged officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the Regular, Volunteer, or other forces of the United States in any war in which the country has been engaged, in campaigns against hostile Indians, or who served in any of the extra-territorial possessions of the United States, in foreign countries, including Mexican border service, or in the Organized Militia or National Guard when called into the Federal service, and who are disabled by diseases or wounds and by reason of such disability are either temporarily or permanently incapacitated from earning a living.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. Are soldiers who served in the Regular Army now admitted to the soldiers' homes outside of the Soldiers' Home here in Washington?

Mr. GOOD. That is my understanding.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There is a soldiers' home maintained here for the benefit of the ex-soldiers of the Regular Army.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; altogether different from these.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not know whether they were admitted to the ordinary soldiers' homes now or not. I have been under the impression that they are not.

Mr. GOOD. They are.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then what does this amount to, if they are already admitted?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I suppose my answer should be made with some limitation. The soldier in order to be admitted must have served in some war. If the soldier was in the Regular Army and served in the Regular Army, without having served in any war, I doubt whether, strictly construing the law, he would be admitted to the home; but the board of managers have been very liberal in the construction of the law with regard to the admission to soldiers' homes. Some question arose as to whether or not the soldiers of the late war were to be admitted. They had the beds—particularly so at the Mountain Branch in Tennessee, where we have a tubercular home—and a great many of the young men who were discharged soldiers of the late war, afflicted with tuberculosis, were admitted there without question. They did not require a strict construction of law with regard to their showing that they had no money.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This provision, I take it, is not intended to affect in any way the status of the soldiers' home in Washington?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all. Some of the soldiers of this war will not go into the soldiers' homes because they are asked whether they have any property, whether they can take care of themselves. Under the law, strictly construed, a person can not be admitted to any of these 10 branches unless he is indigent. The committee thought that provision should be removed, inasmuch as we propose to provide hospitalization to about 8,000 or 10,000 of these soldiers in these homes where there are vacant beds.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Maj. Gen. (formerly major of Cavalry) Jesse McI. Carter, United States Army, the sum of $352.23 disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. That item has been taken care of by Senate bill 2448, and there is no need of carrying it here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 88, strike out the paragraph beginning in line 7 and ending with line 11.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, has that been finally taken care of in the bill that went through the House? There was a bill in the House and then I saw something about striking it out in the conference report.

Mr. GOOD. It was left in the conference report approved May 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reproducing plats of surveys: To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to continue to reproduce worn and defaced official plats of surveys on file, and other plats constituting a part of the records of said office, to furnish local land offices with the same, and for reproducing by photolithography original plats of surveys prepared in the offices of surveyors general, $5,000: Provided, That hereafter photolithographic copies of township plats shall be sold to the public at 50 cents each.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein this schedule to which I referred earlier in the day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that if he will withhold that request until we get ready to rise——

Mr. CALDWELL. I am constrained to say that there ought to be enough men in this House to at least listen to the reading of this bill, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Iowa did not object.

Mr. CALDWELL. Oh, yes; he did.

Mr. GOOD. I just asked the gentleman to withhold his request until we get ready to rise, then I would have no objection to his putting it in.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman has no objection now, I will withdraw my point of order, otherwise I must insist upon it. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein this schedule.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. CALDWELL. For the present I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-one gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil bill, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule, he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 265 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he presented the list of absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For geologic surveys in the various portions of the United States, $352,000.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question about the item of $352,000 appearing in line 8, page 89. Can the chairman tell us from the hearings or other information just where it is intended these geological surveys will be made?

Mr. GOOD. This work is being done in several portions of the United States, I will not say in all portions, but a great deal has been done down in the gentleman's State.

Mr. PARRISH. The reason I ask the question is that 7 out of the 12 counties I represent have demonstrated that they have great quantities of oil in the counties, and when oil is discovered in a territory the real value of the geological surveys are then fully appreciated, because when they have oil in a territory surveys are very helpful in determining where it is best to drill. I called some time ago on the head of this department and he said that they had no money with which to make geological surveys of the counties of my district, and I was wondering if this appropriation would enable them to do any work at all in my district.

Mr. GOOD. It would be possible for the director to spend it all in the gentleman's district. He can spend the money wherever he pleases, and I will say to the gentleman that in explaining the matter the director stated because of oil activities it was desired to spend a good deal of this money in these oil-bearing territories.

Mr. PARRISH. I will say to the gentleman we do not want it all. [Laughter.] But we would like to have some of it, enough at least to enable us to get the benefit of the experience and training of this department. As I understand it the geological surveys made in parts of the country that have not been proven for oil are of very little value, but when you do find oil and make surveys in that region it is very helpful to determine where it is best to drill and to prevent the making of wasteful and useless tests.

Mr. GOOD. That is the object of the appropriation.

Mr. PARRISH. I hope they will spend some of it in my district.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $180,000, of which $25,000 may be used to test the existence of artesian and other underground water supplies suitable for irrigation in the arid and semiarid regions by boring wells.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 89, line 23, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For locating and keeping clean water holes and drinking places on the deserts and for the construction and erection of metal signposts giving directions and distances to said water holes and drinking places, $10,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the point of order and the gentleman from Texas makes it.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order in order to enable me to explain this matter?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, an item of this kind was in the appropriation bill three or four years ago. The necessity for the work arises from the arid conditions on the desert on account of the great scarcity of the water and the danger to human life in traversing those deserts. The bones of men who have lost their lives for lack of this information are found in many places on the deserts of Wyoming, Nevada——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will yield when I have stated my case—and the other States of the West, and a citizen of my own city, George W. Parsons, worked long seeking to impress upon the Congress and the country the necessity for these signposts, and any man familiar with the desert does not have to be told of the importance of this matter.

I have myself had considerable and strenuous experience in this way, and it is a very important thing. The amount of money called for is very small compared with the great usefulness of the appropriation, if it should be made. I would be very glad to see this committee make this very important appropriation of so small an amount for so great a purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think this is a matter for each one of those States to handle themselves and not a matter for the Congress?

Mr. OSBORNE. No; I will state to the gentleman the States do considerable——

Mr. BLANTON. It is along the highways of those States.

Mr. OSBORNE. There are no highways, my dear boy, this is the open desert, these are not highways.

Mr. BLANTON. It is time the gentleman was getting some highways out there.

Mr. OSBORNE. We have the greatest highways in California that were ever seen. But I am not talking of my own State——

Mr. BLANTON. We have what are called highways down in my State, where there is a wagon road running 50 or 60 miles through a ranch.

Mr. OSBORNE. I have ridden over your State. But this is a different proposition. If you have not been over these highways to which I have reference, you have an experience ahead of you. You may come to a place at night where you expect to get water, but when you arrive there you can not find any——

Mr. BLANTON. And we do not want any of these wet signs put up.

Mr. OSBORNE (continuing). And a man goes crazy and runs around tearing his hair and his clothes, and his bones are found on the sands a few months later.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is new legislation and not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not authorized by law and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the Chair hear me a moment on the point of order before making it final?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman.

Mr. OSBORNE. I will not take up much time. It appears to me that all of these items are items that have been authorized by the general organization of the Geological Survey. This item is one in which I can see no great difference from any other of the expenditures of the Geological Survey, and it has already been carried in a previous bill, probably under the assumption that it was a part of the duties of the Geological Survey as defined by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think there is any law which authorizes the expenditure for the setting up of metal signposts to indicate the location of water holes on the desert. The Chair thinks that such an amendment is not germane to the general provisions authorizing appropriations in respect to the water resources of the country and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That part of section 1, chapter 3914, of the act approved June 30, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 727), relating to the furnishing of copies of maps by the Geological Survey, and that part of section 1, chapter 299, of the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stats., p. 989), relating to the furnishing of copies of photographic slides, etc., are hereby amended to read: "The Director of the Geological Survey may, if the regular work of the survey or the interests of the United States are in no wise interfered with or jeopardized thereby, hereafter furnish to any person, institution, State, or foreign Government, in the interest of education and the dissemination of knowledge, at a price to be fixed by the Director of the Geological Survey, at not less than actual cost, copies of photographs and lantern slides and transfers of copies of any cartographic or other engraved or lithographic data in the possession of the survey, engraved or lithographed plates and prints of cartographic data furnished, surveying instruments or field material required for surveys being executed or made under the auspices or supervision of or in cooperation with the Geological Survey, the money received by the director in payment therefor to be deposited in the United States Treasury to the credit of the appropriation of the Geological Survey current at the time the instruments or materials are furnished or at the time the work is performed."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, beginning on line 4, page 90, down to and including line 5, page 91. I regret to make a point of order against the paragraph, which contains some provisions which I think are eminently proper and right, but the provision in the paragraph with regard to the use of the funds that are received from sales in carrying on the work of the bureau is very questionable, and I think the matter might well go over and be considered at some future time. Therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph against which the gentleman makes the point of order is clearly new legislation and therefore subject to the point of order. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a survey of power production and distribution in the United States, including the study of methods for the further utilization of water power, and the special investigation of the possible economy of fuel, labor, and materials resulting from the use in the Boston-Washington industrial region of a comprehensive system for the generation and distribution of electricity to transportation lines and industries, and the preparation of reports thereon, $125,000. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to receive any sums which may be contributed for this purpose. Such sums shall be deposited in the Treasury and credited to the appropriation herein made and be available for expenditure for the purposes thereof.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to know what is meant by this "Boston-Washington industrial region" in this paragraph. What is the purpose of it?

Mr. GOOD. The purpose is this: Both the Director of the Geological Survey and the Director of the Bureau of Mines pointed to an alarming condition with regard to the decrease of the known supply of oil in the United States. The Director of the Geological Survey stated that our supply of oil would be exhausted inside of 20 years. The Director of the Bureau of Mines, Dr. Manning, estimated that the entire supply for all practical purposes would be exhausted in 10 years. It was pointed out that by utilizing coal at the mouth of the mines at tidewater and by tying up the excess power produced by power plants into one superpower system a great deal of money could be saved. To illustrate the proposition, it was pointed out before the committee that when the New York, New Haven & Hartford road was electrified a saving was effected of about one-half of their coal on the same power produced. That is to say, that before electrification it took 8 pounds of coal to produce one horsepower, and after electrification, including the wastage or loss in transmission, it took only 4 pounds of coal. This item is to provide for a Government survey by this bureau and to ascertain whether or not some of this loss can be saved, especially in view of the fact if oil is to disappear in anything like the time that has been estimated by the Director of the Geological Survey or the Director of the Bureau of Mines some substitute must be found. More than that, it is estimated that in this territory, stretching from Washington up to Boston, where it is proposed to make the survey and study, there would be a saving every year of approximately $30,000,000 in the fuel consumed.

Now, it was stated by engineers, as well as Government officials, who appeared before the committee, that while this matter might be done by having the industries themselves make the survey it would take several hundred millions of dollars to carry out the work after it is done, and that capital will not be attracted by a private survey that would be attracted if it was a Government survey, and had back of it the opinion of Government engineers.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, this question comes up from the old idea that was brought out here during the war, for which a bill was introduced in this House and reported, in reference to converting power at the mouth of the mine and putting it into use during the war, emanating from England. The idea was that power could be produced at the mouth of the mine and transmitted at very much less expense to the business districts. But the area of England and the area of this country are much different, and, besides, it is merely a venture, carrying out a theory that Congress itself would not have carried out or undertaken except it came up here during the war.

Mr. GOOD. With modern plants they are transmitting now at a very small loss. For example, the power used by the street cars in St. Louis is carried down from Keokuk, Iowa, over wires.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is water power.

Mr. GOOD. The transmission is the same.

Mr. McKEOWN. This proposition here was promulgated during the war and for appropriating $200,000,000 to create power plants to take the power out of the mine. It was to create power at the mine and conduct it out into these large manufacturing centers at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. That was promulgated and advocated and came from some of these commissions during the war and was introduced into this House by a bill which was reported here.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know anything about that. This involves the utilization of water power in that territory also, but that is a minor consideration.

Mr. McKEOWN. The water-power bill has already passed this Congress and private enterprise will take charge and make its arrangements with the Government. I do not think they ought to be permitted to spend $125,000 of the people's money in making a mere preliminary survey.

Mr. MILLER. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Under what law is this appropriation made?

Mr. GOOD. This is under the general authority of the powers of the Geological Survey, to make surveys of this kind.

Mr. MILLER. I mean the legislation.

Mr. GOOD. It is under the duties and powers conferred upon the Geological Survey.

Mr. MILLER. This is an industrial survey, is it not?

Mr. GOOD. No; it is more than that. It involves, in a sense, the work of the Bureau of Mines, as well as the work of the Geological Survey, and there was some question as to which one of those bureaus ought to do the work. The estimate was for $250,000, and the engineers, as well as the Government officials, thought if we should appropriate half of that and permit, as we have done here, contributions by private capital, at least $250,000, which, it is estimated, will be the amount required, will be obtained for making the survey.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph, commencing on line 11 and ending on line 33, on page 91, on the ground that it is not based on any existing law, there being no law for industrial surveys.

Mr. GOOD. The point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been debate on the paragraph. No point of order was reserved. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] made a motion to strike out the last word. The Chair thinks the point of order comes too late.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Then I move to amend by striking out the paragraph commencing on line 11 and ending with line 33 on page 91.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCKEOWN: Page 91, strike out lines 11 to 23, inclusive.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to strike out this language, because it means the entering upon a new venture. The members of the committee will no doubt recollect that during the war a bill was introduced here and a great deal of newspaper propaganda was sent out over the country advocating the carrying of the power from the mouth of the mine to the industrial centers, and the proposition was to launch the United States Government upon that scheme during the war, because it was felt that the power for war industries was insufficient. The theory was that we did not have fuel and power sufficient to carry on and conduct the war. But fortunately the war ended and the armistice was signed before that bill came up for consideration before the Congress. But for that we would have launched into this business at the rate of $200,000,000.

This is but a starting point anyway by which they are attempting to start that scheme again. I can conceive that in England, where there is a small area, comparatively, a proposition of that kind might be practicable, but here in the United States, if the industry can be made successful and profitable it will be put into effect; private parties will put their own money into it. If it is a losing proposition the United States Government has got no business to go into it. For that reason I am opposed to the provision in the bill, and for that reason I move to strike it out.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] will not prevail. This proposition is one that looks forward to the conservation of our resources, and, as has been stated, the time is at hand when something must be done looking to the conservation of our fuel supply, because those in authority state that at present the known supply of oil will be exhausted within a very few years at the present rate of consumption.

This proposition does not involve any expenditure upon the part of the United States Government except in the investigation and the making of this survey and report. It is not contemplated, as the gentleman from Oklahoma seems to apprehend, that the United States Government will be called upon to build any great plants or to make any expenditures of that kind. But as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has said, here is a proposition that looks to bringing about economy in the use of fuel in the production of power. It looks forward to the use of coal at the mouth of the mines for the production of electric power, saving enormous transportation charges, and relensing a great amount of rolling stock for the transportation of the products of the country. If the plans of those who propose it prove to be feasible, it will involve the expenditure of possibly two or three hundred million dollars to put up necessary plants and machinery. Now, to do that, it will be necessary, of course, to obtain capital from private sources, and those who propose this simply desire a survey and investigation by Government experts in order that if the investigation discloses that such a plan is practicable, those who are asked to make these investments will have confidence in the accuracy and impartiality of the report.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MCKEOWN. Was there not a bill introduced in the House during the war making provision for an investment by the United States of $200,000,000 in a power plant to be erected and conduct the power to those industries that were engaged in making war materials?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be true, though I do not recall the bill to which the gentleman refers. In any event, that was for war purposes. This proposition is for peace times, and if the gentleman will read the hearings which were had before the committee in connection with this particular estimate I am sure the gentleman will change his views with reference to the necessity and advisability of making this small appropriation. Those who appeared before the committee were explicit in their statements that it was not intended nor expected that the United States Government would be involved in the outlay of a single dollar of expenditure except for this survey, and that private capital would be relied upon for the permanent investment.

Mr. MCKEOWN. If the expense of the Government is to be confined to obtaining useful knowledge and information as to this fuel and power, and things of that kind, of course, I have no objection to it; but I am bitterly opposed to the United States Government launching out on a proposition such as that which was brought here and submitted during the war, and I am opposed to their putting in now an entering wedge to that proposition.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I submit that this provision does not look forward to anything like what the gentleman anticipates. This simply provides that a survey and report shall be made.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will not that survey and report be used for purposes of congressional recognition, and will they not come here and ask for a large appropriation next year?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman will recall that we just cut out of the water-power bill a proposition of $25,000,000 for the Great Falls because we thought that was but an entering wedge for $50,000,000 to be spent later, and we concluded that if it were a feasible proposition it ought to be developed by private capital and put upon an equality with the other water powers of the United States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is not a water-power proposition. I am just as much opposed to the United States Government entering upon a policy of expending large sums or any sum upon an investment or enterprise of this kind as is the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] or the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. This is simply to carry on an investigation to ascertain whether or not it will be possible to economize in fuel and at the same time produce power more cheaply. It is simply to enable the Government, through its experts, to make the investigation and report as to whether or not the plans are practicable and feasible, and if so private capital will establish the plants. I submit to the gentleman that this necessarily relates only to one section of the country, but if this should prove successful it is to be expected that there will be similar enterprises undertaken on the western coast and in the section from which the gentleman from Colorado comes, and I hope in the South and Southeast. I repeat, the time has come when we must give some attention to the conservation of our fuel supply, and it is on this account that I think the Government should make this survey.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is no possibility of the committee following this up with an appropriation at the next session of Congress to carry this out?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Absolutely not, I feel quite sure. I can say for myself that if the committee had had any idea that it meant a future expenditure by the Government in financing an undertaking or enterprise of this kind, so far as I am concerned, the proposition would not have been reported nor would I favor it here——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, in the light of what happened the other day with reference to the water-power bill, I am very much surprised that this paragraph should be in this bill. I sought to have incorporated into the water-power bill a provision requiring that the vast amount of electric power that will be developed at Niagara Falls be distributed equitably to the industries of that vicinity, but this House refused to put that provision into the water-power bill, one theory being that this Congress had no right to dictate to the States as to the manner in which the power developed within the States should be distributed. Nevertheless, I find in this section of this bill that it provides that a study of the methods for the further utilization of water power is to be made and that a comprehensive system for the generation and distribution of electricity to transportation lines and industries is to be developed. If they come back with a report as to the method in which this power can be developed in this territory, we can not do anything or make any provision with reference to the method of distribution, according to the theory advanced in the debate on the water-power bill. We should at least be consistent.

Further than that, it appears to me that this item of $125,000 is extraordinarily large, because in the resolution passed in the session of 1917 the sum of $25,000 was appropriated for an investigation of the water powers covering all the basin of the Great Lakes—Lakes Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, and Ontario—under the direction of the War Department. An investigation was made of all of the water powers along the Great Lakes and the report on that has just been submitted. It is extremely voluminous and detailed, and the War Department was allowed only $25,000 for that purpose. It seems to me this work could properly be done under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and done a great deal more cheaply.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] that this appropriation should be stricken out. Yet, at the same time, I do not share in his apprehensions as to what may happen in the future in the way of further undertakings following this provision. I do not think there is any danger that the Government will enter into any comprehensive scheme for itself to carry out the projects which are included to be surveyed under this provision. I have a very great deal of doubt, and I think everyone who has listened to this debate has a great deal of doubt as to whether this will be of any benefit. Possibly it will be of some benefit, but are our departments to go on trying everything, spending money on all sorts of projects that may possibly be of some benefit?

In what way would this be of benefit? It is true, as my colleague has stated, that on the New Haven Railroad it has been found that a large saving of coal has been effected by the use of electricity on a certain portion of its line, but right beside the trains that are run by electricity are other trains of the same road on parallel tracks which are run by the power derived from coal. The fact of the matter is that the expense of electrifying the roads is so enormous that it becomes doubtful whether after all it is of any advantage to operate the roads by electricity unless the electrical power can be cheaply derived from falling water. It seems to me that this survey if made would be of no benefit unless it took a great deal more time and money than is evidently contemplated by this provision. Unless we could ascertain just what would be the cost of all the possible plants that might be united in one combination to operate one great electric power plant, we never would know whether a project would pay or whether it would not. On the other hand, if we are just simply to develop the theory, we do not need $125,000 for it. It has been the dream of engineers now for many years that all of our power plants should be united in one great system, which would use the coal so far as possible at the mouth of the mine, or if it was not possible to take it from the mouth of the mine, that it should be taken from some near point where water or other cheap transportation could be obtained.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MILLER. Under whose authority is this research to be made under this bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I take it, under the authority of the Director of the Geological Survey. I may be wrong about that.

Mr. MILLER. Industrial research under the authority of the Geological Survey; it seems to me that is entirely in the wrong place. It should be under the Department of Commerce.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I agree with the gentleman. This is simply another case of a department unduly expanding its activities and getting over into the boundaries of the duties and functions belonging to some other department. The view that I take of it is that this appropriation is either too small for anything to be realized from it or it is too great simply to develop the theory, and it ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. The paragraph states that any contribution shall be made to the Secretary of the Interior. It does not say to the Geological Survey.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Geological Survey is under the Department of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is barely possible that no substantial good will come of this survey. I think it is very probable that substantial good will come from it. It is not expected that $125,000 will do the work. The estimate of the men who came before the committee was that it would take $250,000 to make the survey. Therefore by this bill we are appropriating $125,000 and permitting contributions of a sufficient amount to finish the work, to make a survey of all the power plants, not simply water power, but all the power plants within the territory, which is an enormous undertaking. Mr. Murray, the man whose genius put into operation the plan of electrifying the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, believes that as a result of this survey not only will the commercial and industrial institutions in this territory be benefited but every farmer along the line who now has a little gasoline engine to churn his butter and grind his grist, and things of that kind, will be benefited by being furnished power. When the supply of oil disappears he must turn to some other source.

We may smile at this proposition. We may laugh it out of Congress just as we did by ridicule the proposition of Mr. Langley in regard to the aeroplane. I say to you that it has within it the very things we must adopt to utilize these forces and to make a greater use of coal at the mouth of the mine and at tide water. It was the testimony of Mr. Murray; it was the testimony of Dr. Smith, Director of the Geological Survey, it was the testimony of the Director of the Bureau of Mines, that by utilization of the coal in this way the utilization of the surplus power of the great industrial plants, and the public-utility plants, by utilizing their surplus, more than $30,000,000 would be saved every year. At the same time it would open up a plan whereby private capital, not Government appropriation, would be used. I would not be in favor of appropriating a single dollar for the Government to go into that kind of a scheme. Private capital should do that. When there is so much of wildcat and watered stocks being circulated and sold, how far would you get in promoting a company of this kind that had back of it only the estimate of some private individual or company? It is intended to have a Government survey and a report, something that would have the stamp of the Government officials on it, that the plan was feasible and practicable, and if the supply of oil is to give out within the time specified, we may well stop and consider if we should not study the question where we can get a substitute.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I concur in the views that are being expressed by the gentleman from Iowa with reference to the possibility of a great saving if such a plan can be carried out. It would effect an enormous saving in the transportation of coal. A large part of the car equipment of the country is employed in the transportation of coal. I do not recollect the exact figure, but I think about 50 per cent.

Mr. GOOD. Forty per cent.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. This matter has been under consideration for some time by scientists of high standing who are hopeful of the result. In my opinion the Government should cooperate in the investigation.

Mr. GOOD. I think we would be very shortsighted if we did not, with these facts staring us in the face, make the small appropriation to do this work. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations as to the causes of mine explosions, methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to the mining industry, and including all equipment, supplies, and expenses of travel and subsistence, $409,065.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman if any appropriation is carried in this bill to pay this claims commission that was appointed to settle contracts?

Mr. GOOD. No; their salaries and expenses are paid out of the appropriation for the adjustment of claims. The money has already been appropriated.

Mr. McKEOWN. Has any report been made as to their progress?

Mr. GOOD. No; there was no request made for an appropriation for next year.

Mr. McKEOWN. I wondered if they were going to use up the $800,000,000 in going about the country and making surveys and not paying attention to the claims.

Mr. GOOD. There was no estimate made to the committee, and the committee, of course, did not seek one. The appropriation was made in the original act, and they have not come to our committee in regard to other funds, and as the act is only being administered now, I suppose it would be difficult to say what, if any, additional funds will be required.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the employment of personal services and all other expenses in connection with the establishment, maintenance, and operation of mining experiment stations, authorized by the act approved March 3, 1915, $175,000.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, Nevada's position, as compared to other States, is unique; more than 100,000 square miles is still Government owned. We respectfully urge, for that reason, Government appropriations, which come from all States, that our vast area of public lands have due consideration for the great benefit derived from a mining experiment station. Nevada's earnestness and knowledge of such worth is shown by our legislature appropriating $30,000 for housing this station.

That sum is now available for the purpose of locating a mining experiment station contiguous to our State university and State school of mines where they will mutually aid each other and the public.

It is highly gratifying to know that the committee have agreed with my statements made before them, and in this bill do recommend that an additional mining experiment station be established.

The worth to Nevada of such investment is beyond estimation.

The steady, consistent, and enormous production of scores of various valuable minerals justify our claims, but the potential production which will be aided is one hundred times greater. Hundreds of mining districts with thousands of mines and prospects will repay the expenditure a thousand times over. Mining has become a science which all States sustain.

The experiment station will inform with authority both the prospector and investor, stimulating legitimate activity and preventing misrepresentation if attempted, thus affording protection and encouragement to the residents of all States. We have great deposits upon the mountain sides, running 64 per cent in iron.

Immense tonnage of copper in almost all the 17 counties, nearly all of which lie dormant. The Comstock has produced $500,000,000 in silver and is still producing. Goldfield district in Esmeralda County produced more than $100,000,000 in gold and is still producing. Tonopah district has produced several hundred millions in gold and silver, and her production to-day is continued.

Ely, in White Pine County, treats at one plant alone 15,000 tons per day of copper ore.

The State is corrugated with small mountain ranges, with minerals everywhere; gold, silver, copper, lead, quicksilver, manganese, coal, potash, in fact, all known minerals, from antimony to zinc. My figures are approximate but conservative. Value of all minerals in 1916, $53,500,000. For 56 years, since Nevada was admitted as a State, it has produced a billion in gold and silver alone, or more than 15 per cent of the entire output of the whole United States. Her mineral resources are probably not 1 per cent developed.

Every county is enormously mineralized. Our production was growing more widely distributed, and until 1917 steadily increasing, when the war claimed a high percentage of our population, and more than $20,000,000 cash was advanced to the Government upon war subscriptions. Now, owing to higher costs of mining, depletion of our best labor, and excess-profits tax, the mining industry is carrying a too heavy load to continue its forward progress. This load can be lightened by recognition and advice obtained from a mine experiment station, which can and will solve the numerous mining problems.

We are not complaining, but are proud to record the fact that minerals are there, awaiting scientific methods for a greater extraction by the cyanide process; economical treatment of low-grade oxidized ores existing throughout the State; processes for extracting oil from oil shales; economy of treatment for low-grade oxidized copper and silver ores, low-grade lead, zinc, and iron.

A solving of the slime-settlement problem, conservation of lime and cyanide, used in treatment of which we are perhaps the largest users, most of which is lost in tailings.

Improved methods of precipitation; improved treatment of antimonial and arsenical ores carrying gold and silver; improved concentration and flotation process; improved processes for sulphide ores, making their appearance as depth is attained.

Leaching of oxidized copper ores; concentration of mercurial ores; increased recovery from sulphur ores; advice upon rarer metals, platinums, and so forth; concentration of tungsten ores; investigating waste in metallurgy, generally aiding the small mine to develop into a big producer. Thus mines are more made than found.

Realizing and indorsing the need for economy in every possible way, yet maintaining that this small expenditure for locating a mine experiment station in Nevada will directly benefit a vast area of Government land while protecting and instructing the prospector whose living is hard and reward uncertain, deserves the valuable and authentic information which science will thus render to him. This service will decide with authority the numerous complex conditions of ore and vein occurrence and values, classifying rare minerals and generally aiding all mining work. Recent developments have proven oil to be existent in Nevada. This station will do good work helping oil men to overcome the difficulties of protecting oil sands from water, increasing the ultimate production of wells by using compressed air and by other means determining the migration and accumulation of oil and water, establishing methods for estimating valuation and appraisal of oil properties as affecting royalties in leasing oil and gas lands. Solving drilling problems by overcoming difficulties found from caving ground; furnishing best advice on pumping, acting in capacity for expert aid and advice upon various types of storage tanks as relating to evaporation; upon cause, prevention, and extinguishing of fire; advising regarding oil camp sanitation; in hundreds of ways aiding development of public lands. There are undeveloped deposits of coal within 100 miles of the new oil strike at Fallon. These operations deserve instant advice upon complications continually arising, improved methods for greater recovery; general construction for economical value; proven operation and prevention of waste. Expert advice upon installation of machinery and safety appliances to protect life. The experiment stations already established are proven good investments. Nevada, being such fertile mineral field, should have a station working in conjunction with State University and School of Mines, furnishing laboratory tests and valuable advice upon numberless intricate questions. Our State has appropriated and has now available $30,000 for housing such station, supplementing the research work of the State University and School of Mines, while materially aiding in the settlement and development of a vast area of public lands.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Interior may have sand, gravel, stone, and other material hauled for the municipal government of the District of Columbia and for branches of the Federal service in the District of Columbia, whenever it may be practicable and economical to have such work performed by using trucks of the Government fuel yards not needed at the time for the hauling of fuel. Payment for such work shall be made on the basis of the actual cost to the Government fuel yards.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the idea of writing this into permanent law?

Mr. GOOD. We have in the Government fuel yards a great many motor-driven trucks. A part of the time they are delivering coal to the various departments and buildings operated by the Government. In order to operate these trucks they must have men accustomed to their operation at all seasons of the year. The city does not have enough trucks to make their repairs to the streets in hauling sand, gravel, stone, and things of that kind. They are simply asking that the trucks, when not used to deliver coal, may be used in hauling gravel, sand, cement, and material for repairing roads in the District; that they may have the use of those trucks for the actual cost of operation, including depreciation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to deliver, during the months of April, May, and June of each year, to all branches of the Federal service and the municipal government in the District of Columbia, such quantities of fuel for their use during the following fiscal year as it may be practicable to store at the points of consumption, payment therefor to be made by these branches of the Federal service and municipal government from their applicable appropriations for such fiscal year.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman if this is a new provision of law with reference to the purchase and delivery of fuel during the months of April, May, and June.

Mr. GOOD. It is.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And it is intended to effect an economy?

Mr. GOOD. Not only effect an economy but to relieve the coal shortage in the wintertime, so that the Government may purchase its coal and get the deliveries of it early in the year and thereby relieve the transportation companies and the mines as well from furnishing coal for Government buildings in the wintertime when there might be a possible shortage.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And a situation might arise where other months might be more practicable.

Mr. GOOD. They will be permitted to deliver during other months. These are only the months immediately preceding the next fiscal year.

The Clerk read as follows:

Boise project, Idaho: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $774,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for drainage except in irrigation districts formed under State laws and upon the execution of agreements for the repayment to the United States of the costs thereof.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman. I observe that this money is being expended for drainage and irrigation districts formed under State laws, and that any money used for that purpose is subsequently to be repaid to the Government, but it says nothing about interest. Why does not the Government get interest on this?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the law provides specifically just what payments can be collected from the water users, and in no law that I can recall is any provision made for the collection of interest at all, the theory being that these waste and desert places should be made productive and the settlers should settle upon them, and that in order to encourage settlement upon them all that would be expected back is the principal, and they were given long periods of time within which to pay back the original investment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I observe that also.

Mr. GOOD. And we have extended the time frequently in cases where it was necessary. There is no provision on a single one of the projects that I can recall where interest is collected from the users. It is not required.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is speaking of the general reclamation laws, which do not apply to this particular case.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; this is the reclamation law.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. I would say that the drainage involved here is part of the reclamation project itself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What does the gentleman mean? These are districts organized under the State law. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that the United States Government regulates the amount to be paid on districts organized under the State law?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; because they took them over under the reclamation act.

Mr. FRENCH. The drainage project is made necessary by reason of the reclamation work.

Mr. GOOD. I think where the gentleman is confused is this, that most of these irrigation districts are corporations, and they are organized under the laws of the State.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; I understand all that perfectly well, but that is not what I intended to come to. The original reclamation laws, as gentlemen have stated, provided for the repayment of this money advanced on these projects without interest, and the result of that has been that apparently we are going to get it in kingdom come. I do not know when else we will get it. Extension after extension has been made on these projects, and we are not getting our money. These men who are out there on those irrigation projects for the most part are exceedingly prosperous. They are making money, and there is no reason why they should not either pay the Government what the Government has advanced or else pay interest upon it. There is no reason in the world why they should not, except that so long as they can use the Government's money without interest they will do so, and we will continue to go on in this same manner. Whether there was originally provision made that these sums should be advanced on these drainage districts without interest I do not care. I maintain there ought to be a provision for interest in a case like this.

Mr. MACGREGOR. How much do these Western States owe us for these reclamation projects?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, they owe us millions of dollars.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Have they ever paid us any?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; they have paid some of it; but I think they are in no hurry to pay it as long as it does not draw interest. Who would be?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman recall that the great State of New York has paid any part of a very large loan that it received from the Federal Government some 60 or 70 years ago?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not recall that. That was before my time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To what loan does the gentleman refer?

Mr. MONDELL. A very large loan of receipts from the sale of public lands, distributed among various States of the Union, the State of Iowa perhaps among others. No penny of that has ever been repaid, principal or interest.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What does the gentleman mean? Does he mean money appropriated for educational purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no. A large sum of money, as I recollect, was distributed among the States of the Union in the expectation that they would repay it, but they have repaid no part of it. If Iowa was one of the States, she has not paid a penny of it, and neither has New York.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, there was not any Iowa at that time. That was in Jackson's time.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. We will transfer the charge to Illinois. Illinois got some of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, there was some money voted to the States for certain purposes, but there was no understanding that it should be repaid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But no matter about that. Because we have made some mistakes in the past—and heaven knows we have made plenty of them—is no reason why we should continue on the same blundering, incompetent way. These projects ought to pay their way. There is no reason in the world why they should not. Men are making money out of them. They are making money at the expense of the National Government. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 100, line 9, after the word "thereof" by striking out the semicolon and inserting the words "with interest at 5 per cent, payable annually."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: Page 100, line 9, after the word "thereof" strike out the semicolon and insert "with interest at 5 per cent, payable annually."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. The item referred to is the proviso with regard to the Boise project in Idaho and reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for drainage except in the irrigation districts formed under State laws and upon the execution of agreements for the repayment to the United States of the cost thereof.

The amendment is "with interest at 5 per cent." The irrigation law specifically provides what the repayment shall consist of. The laws provide that the repayment shall consist only of the actual cost of the improvements. It was never intended when Congress enacted the legislation with regard to these irrigation projects that any interest should be collected at all, and the only repayment exacted under the law is for the amount invested. Now, there are two sides to the question so far as the desirability of exacting interest is concerned. I do not know what this Congress would do if it were called upon to legislate upon this subject to determine whether or not these settlers should be compelled in drainage districts to pay interest upon the repayments, but one thing I am satisfied of is that the law provides only for the repayment of the principal invested by the Government of the United States; and to require now that they pay, or be compelled to pay, interest on their investment is an enlargement, and a material enlargement, of the existing law and is legislation on an appropriation bill and is not permitted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If I may be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If it is true that is the law now, there would be no necessity for the provision in the bill. It seems to have been thought necessary to put in the bill that the repayment should consist of the costs thereof, notwithstanding my colleague says that is the law already. Now, with this provision in the Boise project that the money could only be expended in the case of an execution of an agreement for repayment to the United States of $744,000, no one would question the propriety of an amendment increasing the amount to $775,000. Now, all that this amendment that I have offered does is simply to increase a little the amount of this sum which is to be repaid under the provisions of the bill which is before us, not an act previous or some other law, but under the provisions of the bill which is before us.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has called attention to the fact that we are now considering reclamation items under the act of June 7, 1902, under which specific provision is made that the sums invested shall be repaid without interest, the language of the law being, "shall repay the estimated cost of construction." The particular item before us is an item under that law. It is proposed on this project to carry on some drainage work in connection with the irrigation. That is something that is done on every project. Every project requires drainage as well as irrigation; and in order that there should be no question about the repayment of these particular sums, a provision is inserted requiring the organization of a district in order, through the organization of that district, to further protect the Government, and then a provision, which is to a certain extent superfluous, that the sum expended shall be returned. It must be returned in any event, but the provision here is that the money shall not be spent until an agreement is had with the reclamation district that they shall make the repayment. The words "repayment provided by the reclamation law" might have been used. The language used was "repayment to the United States of the costs thereof." Clearly the amendment to add interest to the reclamation charge is an amendment to the reclamation law and new legislation changing the reclamation law, which could not be done on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will find the law in the act of August 13, 1914, Thirty-eighth Statutes, page 686, and after the preliminary statements it provides:

> And any person who hereafter makes entry thereunder shall at the time of making water-right application or entry, as the case may be, pay into the reclamation funds 5 per cent of the construction charge fixed for his land as an initial installment, and shall pay the balance of said charge in 15 annual installments, the first five of which shall be each 5 per cent of the construction charge and the remainder shall be 7 per cent until the whole amount shall have been paid.

So it is very clear that the actual construction charge is the only thing that can be required under the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa this question: Is the proviso as it now stands in accordance with existing law or an enlargement of existing law?

Mr. GOOD. It is in accordance with the existing law as it now stands without the amendment, and is in the same form it was carried ever since the reclamation act was adopted; that is, since the law was changed requiring annual appropriations it has been carried in this same form.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair will readily see that this provision we have here applies to a matter which was not under the purview of the original reclamation law, namely, the contract with these certain districts for drainage, and that is all this is for. This expense is to pay for drainage. It is all with regard to drainage districts formed under State law, and it has to do with a contract that is to be made, and is not such a contract as is mentioned in the provision read by my colleague with some person who enters upon the land, but a contract with a drainage district.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the reclamation law very clearly determines the manner of payment. In addition to the language read by the gentleman from Iowa, section 4 of the reclamation law provides that the charge shall be laid "with a view of returning to the reclamation fund the cost of construction and shall be apportioned equitably." Drainage work is a very usual and ordinary work on a reclamation project. There is drainage work on all reclamation projects, and in this particular case, in order to make it more certain that the costs as provided by the law shall be returned, it is provided that there must be a district formed.

Mr. FRENCH. And then to supplement what has been said I call attention to the fact that this proviso does not in itself provide for drainage work. It is a limitation based upon the general authority that now exists for it.

And if we needed special legislation to enable us to do drainage work, we would want to use more language than is in that proviso. It says:

> Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for drainage except in irrigation districts.

And so forth. That presupposes other authority. What is that other authority? It is the general authority of the reclamation law, and the language in lines 4 and 5 and the first part of line 6, up to the word "Provided," simply recites "for operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $774,000." And then that, together with the laguage used in the reclamation act itself, is all the authority necessary for engaging in the drainage-work part of the project.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What more authority do you need to have this drainage carried out in these State districts than right here in this paragraph?

Mr. FRENCH. They are authorized under regular authority of law to do it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What need of anything more than is in the paragraph itself?

Mr. FRENCH. My judgment is that the department has perfect authority without that proviso being there at all, but I do think, though, it is rather wholesome to let the proviso be there, because it helped the department to make arrangements with the irrigation district.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This originated under the State law to be carried on in drainage districts. The contract is with the drainage district.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to tire the Chair or unduly extend this discussion, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] clearly misunderstands the object of the proviso. This proviso is not necessary in order to carry on drainage work on a reclamation project. There is not a reclamation project under way on which drainage work is not done. The proviso is simply one requiring that before the money is spent on this particular project there shall be a district organized under the State law. The purpose is to more fully secure the Federal Government by not only having the obligation of the individual, but the obligation of the district as well.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Is it not true that when the reclamation law was before the House there was a strong fight made, a very bitter fight, to require interest on the payment, and that provision was eliminated from the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think such an effort was made. If the Chair will bear with me a moment to say what I might say later under the five-minute rule with regard to this matter generally.

The House should remember that all of the funds which flow into the reclamation fund are proceeds of the sales of public lands or repayments from projects. None of them is obtained by taxation. From the foundation of our Government we have treated the proceeds from the sales of the public lands as a fund separate, apart, and distinct from the funds received through methods of taxation. Way back in Jackson's time, as the gentleman from Illinois just reminded us—he is the only one of us here who remembers that far back—there was an accumulation of these funds in the Treasury, amounting to many millions of dollars. The fathers scarcely knew what to do with them, and they finally distributed them among the States; loaned them to the States. Most of the States frittered them away. None of the States has ever repaid a penny of those sums. A little later we took some of the proceeds of the public lands and applied them under the so-called Hatch and Morrill funds to the support of agricultural colleges and schools of mechanic arts. In 1902 we dedicated the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the construction of irrigation work in 17 Western States and Territories, to which Texas was afterwards added. In the laws drawn for the purpose of utilizing those funds, the fund thus created, we provided for the payment of the money expended, and we followed the rule which has been always followed with regard to the proceeds from the sale of public lands, treating them as a fund separate and apart, different and distinct from the funds secured from taxes, and no interest charges were laid. I think up to this good hour there has been no discussion, except at the time the law was passed, of the charging of interest on these projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] this question. He is very expert on matters of this kind and very familiar with them. The Chair would like to ask whether or not under existing law it is the practice of the Reclamation Service to require a reimbursement on the part of the entryman for the amounts which are spent in drainage, as distinguished from the amounts which are expended for the irrigation projects proper?

Mr. MONDELL. In the great majority of cases there is no distinction between the funds used for irrigation and drainage, for, curious as it may appear to those not familiar with the processes of reclamation by irrigation, a complete and oftentimes expensive drainage system is required for almost every area permanently irrigated, and in some cases the drainage of the project involves an expenditure approximating that of putting the water on the land. There is a project in my State—the Shoshone—on which, I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], there is not a dollar now unpaid, where the cost of drainage was, as I recall it, or has been up to this time, almost as great as the original cost of putting the water on the land.

In other words, the natural underground drainage was found to be insufficient, and in order to carry the surplus water from the lands when they were irrigated it became necessary to lay tile drains at frequent intervals all over the project. Now, that expenditure has been carried on on that project for years, and it is part and parcel of the other work, and goes right in with the other charges.

Mr. GOOD. On this very project it is proposed to build 149.5 miles of drainage, and the estimated acreage protected by the drains built is 88,000 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will bear with me a moment, the only purpose of the provision under discussion is this: I assume that a condition arose on the Boise project under which the authorities, the reclamation officials, felt that in the making of the very considerable expenditures that was necessary for irrigation drainage they would be better protected if, in addition to the individual obligation, there was the general obligation of a drainage district. Two years ago we made a provision of that kind with regard to an irrigation project in Texas. There the cost of drainage was mounting so high that the Reclamation Service said, "For our protection, in order that there may be no question about the reimbursement, we desire to have written into the law a provision under which we shall not make our expenditures unless there is a municipal corporation which assumes jointly with the individual the obligation of repayment"; and this is such a provision; a provision strengthening the Government's position by requiring an organization under the State law, which, together with the individual, becomes responsible for repayment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope my friend will not think that I am ignorant of the nature of these projects. It has been my misfortune to own a part of one of these tracts, or at least to have an equity in it, which needed drainage as a part of the irrigation scheme.

Mr. MONDELL. How did the gentleman get it without living on it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How did I get it?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. How did the gentleman get a tract under the national irrigation law without living on it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was not under the national irrigation law.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman could not comply with the law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not what I was referring to, nor was I speaking at this time of one of the tracts coming within the national scheme. I was speaking of my knowledge of irrigation projects. I have had tracts under the national irrigation scheme, although I have never perfected title under the law, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong this discussion, but I simply want to add this, that so much is this drainage a part of the use of the land under the reclamation law that it is even necessary sometimes to save the Government security to go ahead and do the drainage work. I have no doubt that in the case which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] mentioned it cost as much to drain the land as it did to construct the irrigation works. In this particular project it is being urged that to save the security of the Government on account of expenses of reclamation work the drainage must go hand in hand with it and be carried out, and it is unquestionably a part of the general reclamation work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks it is clear that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] changes the existing law, because the existing law makes no requirement that the funds used on reclamation projects shall be paid with interest. But the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa would nevertheless be in order as amendment to this paragraph if the proviso itself were an amendment of existing law.

The Chair has examined the reclamation act with as much care as is possible in the brief time the Chair has had to examine it, and the Chair finds that one provision of the reclamation act, or an amendment of the act, approved March 3, 1915, reads as follows:

No work shall be undertaken or expenditure made for any lands, for which the construction charge has been fixed by public notice, which work or expenditure shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, increase the construction cost above the construction charge so fixed; unless and until valid and binding agreement to repay the cost thereof shall have been entered into between the Secretary of the Interior and the water-right applicants and entrymen affected by such increased cost, as provided by section 4 of the act of August 13, 1914, entitled "An act extending the period of payment under reclamation projects, and for other purposes."

The Chair will state that the reclamation act contemplates not only the repayment of the amounts that are advanced from the reclamation fund, but also that agreements shall be made in advance for the repayment of the money, and the effect of the provision that is carried in the bill is really a restatement or reenactment of existing law, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa changes the law, whereas the proviso in the bill does not. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is not in order, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EVANS of Nebraska: Page 100, line 9, after the word "thereof" insert "Provided further, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended except in districts which provide for the repayment thereof with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum."

Mr. GOOD. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] is clearly an affirmative requirement; that it requires affirmative action on the part of the Reclamation Service; that it changes existing law; and that it is subject to the point of order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Belle Fourche project, South Dakota: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $120,000.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GANDY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GANDY. What paragraph does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. SINNOTT. I have made a formal motion to strike out the last word in the last paragraph read.

Mr. GANDY. Which one was that?

Mr. SINNOTT. Line 11, page 102. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, the Reclamation Service is one of the great activities of the Government. I think that the money invested in the reclamation of arid lands is one of the best investments the Government ever made. It has expended something like $120,000,000 in the reclamation of the arid lands in the 16 Western States and Texas, and, according to the figures given for crop production in the year 1918, there was produced from that investment of something like $120,000,000 about $90,000,000 in that one year. Certainly that is a good investment.

The Reclamation Service is presided over by one of the most modest but ablest men in the United States, Director Davis, a great engineer, a man who is known all over the world for his ability along engineering lines. He was chosen by the Government of China to go to that country to investigate some of their engineering problems. At a meager salary, probably one-fifth of what he could earn in private life, he is unselfishly giving his great talents to the public service. The operations of Director Davis have resulted already in reclamation projects as monumental as the very Pyramids themselves. I think those projects will possibly outlast the Pyramids, and they will certainly be of far greater benefit to mankind.

I say this to show you that I am heartily in favor of the Reclamation Service, of its director, and of its present force.

But there is one criticism that I desire to make of the expenditures of the reclamation funds, and I think that the Committee on Appropriations should take upon itself the initiative to remove the reasons for the criticism that I am going to make.

The reclamation act was passed June 17, 1902. It provided in substance that in each 10-year period there should be an equitable distribution of the reclamation fund among the States from which the fund comes. Now, the reclamation funds come from the sale of public lands in 16 reclamation States.

In 1910 the then Director of the Reclamation Service, Mr. Newell, came to Congress and asked for a modification of section 9 of the reclamation act, which required in each 10-year period an equal distribution of the fund. He said that the service was embarrassed and hampered by the rigidity of the law, and he said if this law was repealed that the service itself would bring about an equal distribution of the fund within the various reclamation States.

So, on June 25, 1910, before I came to Congress, section 9 of the reclamation act requiring equal distribution of the fund in the various States was repealed. Now, until the passage of the act of August 13, 1914, the matter of the expenditures of the reclamation fund rested wholly in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. He could spend the fund wherever he saw fit, without any direction or control by Congress. He had carte blanche in the expenditure of the funds.

August 13, 1914, an act was passed taking away from the Secretary of the Interior the right to make these expenditures as he saw fit, and that act provided that from and after July 1, 1915, expenditures shall not be made for carrying out the purpose of the reclamation law except out of appropriations made annually by Congress therefor; that act also provided that the Secretary of the Interior should annually submit to Congress estimates of the money needed.

So, since August 13, 1914, Congress has been a brake on the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior could not spend a cent unless he sent in his estimates to the Committee on Appropriations of the House and they approved his desires and the matter was afterwards approved by Congress.

So this matter rests with the Secretary of the Interior first and the Committee on Appropriations in the second place to restore the original intent of the reclamation act to make an equal distribution of reclamation funds among the reclamation States.

I hope that the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman will give particular heed to this matter and endeavor to restore the original purpose of the act, and that is an equal distribution of the fund as the original act contemplated and as the Secretary of the Interior said he would do when he and Director Newell asked to have the act modified by the repeal of section 9 in the year 1910.

A good many of us in the House voted to take away the discretionary power of the Secretary of the Interior and lodge it in Congress and in the Committee on Appropriations, hoping that the committee and Congress would do something to bring about this equal distribution of the fund.

Now, what is the result? The original act has been departed from. There has been the grossest kind of discrimination against some States and favoritism to other States. Let me give you some of the figures. I hope that in the future the committee and Congress will do something to rectify this discrimination. I have spoken about this matter several times since I came to Congress, because some of the Western States feel very sore and indignant over this gross discrimination and favoritism in the expenditure of the reclamation fund.

There is nothing personal in what I have to say, but I want to call the attention of Congress to the gross discrimination in the expenditure of this fund in the hope that there may be redress, in the hope that the committee itself will take the initiative and call the Secretary of the Interior to account and see that he does something toward returning to the original provisions of the act—to do what he said he would do when Congress removed the restrictions of the old section 9 requiring equal treatment to the different States.

Now, Arizona put into the reclamation fund up to June 30 last, in round numbers, $1,640,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. I ask for five mintues more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Arizona put in the reclamation fund $1,640,000. There has been expended out of the reclamation fund in the State of Arizona $20,087,000.

California has put into that fund $6,500,000, and has only received $4,000,000 from the fund.

Colorado has put into the reclamation fund $8,600,000, in round numbers, and has received $11,500,000.

Idaho has put in $6,000,000, and has received over $23,000,000 from the reclamation fund.

Kansas has put into the reclamation fund $1,000,000, and has received $407,000.

Montana has put into the reclamation fund $13,200,000, and has received $15,500,000 from the fund.

The State of Nevada has put into the reclamation fund the sum of $735,000 and has received from the reclamation fund over $7,000,000. The State of New Mexico has put into the reclamation fund $4,900,000 in round numbers, and has received $8,000,000. The State of North Dakota has put into the reclamation fund $12,100,000, and has received $2,500,000. The State of Oklahoma has paid into the reclamation fund $5,800,000, and has received $132,000. The State of Oregon, my own State, has put into the reclamation fund $11,165,000, and there has been expended in the State of Oregon only $5,600,000. The State of South Dakota has put $7,400,000 into the fund, and has received $4,000,000. The State of Utah has put into the reclamation fund $2,600,000, and there has been expended in that State $4,200,000. The State of Washington has put $7,100,000, and has received $14,500,000. The State of Wyoming has put in $5,897,000, and has received over $11,000,000. These figures are from the eighteenth annual report of the Reclamation Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

I call this matter to the attention of the House and to the attention of the committee with the hope that in the future the committee will take upon itself the burden and initiative of calling this matter to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior. I have called it to his attention repeatedly; that is, to the former Secretary, getting very little results, and this gross discrimination against some States and gross favoritism of other States should no longer obtain. I hope Secretary Payne will read my remarks and correct this one abuse in the administration of the Reclamation Service. [Applause.] I hope the chairman of the committee will take up this matter the next time the estimates are presented to him. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Did the gentleman from Oregon refer to the State of Texas?

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Oregon will correct the figures that he read with respect to South Dakota.

Mr. SINNOTT. Possibly I got on the wrong line, but I will give the correct figures in the RECORD.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not note that the gentleman referred to the State of Texas.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I should have referred to the State of Texas. The State of Texas has put into the reclamation fund nothing, and the State of Texas has received $3,964,654.

Mr. BLANTON. And there is not a single dam in the State of Texas.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; they are not all in the State of Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I notice that we have not a quorum present. I do not care to make the point if we can have some assurance that on this marketing day we will rise pretty soon. This is Saturday afternoon.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, we ought to read several pages yet before we rise.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman should remember that we have to buy meat and bread and groceries for to-morrow.

Mr. GOOD. I hope we may run for a little time yet.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman rise after this matter has been disposed of?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; we ought to read several pages yet.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will have compassion upon us.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, the item just read proposes to appropriate $120,000 for the operation and maintenance of the Bellefourche project, in South Dakota. Provision is not made for further construction work, and with relation thereto I beg the indulgence of the House.

The Bellefourche project is to-day one of the most successful of the Government projects. According to the report of the Reclamation Service, 97,889 acres will be irrigable when the project is completed, and water is now available for 82,592 acres. The first unit of the project was opened about 10 years ago, and other units have been opened as construction has progressed. Hundreds of farm homes dot the project, and several very excellent towns are thriving thereon. It is interesting to note that of the construction charges accrued to June 30, 1919, approximately 95 per cent was paid before that date, almost 90 per cent of the operation and maintenance charges had then been paid, as well as over 95 per cent of water-rental charges. The small delinquencies were practically wiped out by early fall, as soon as crops started to move. I merely recite these things that the House may know the Bellefourche project is on a substantial foundation. The obligation owing to the Government by the water users is amply secured and will be paid in full under the terms of the reclamation law. Land values there have risen rapidly, and sales of irrigated land at $150 or $200 an acre are not uncommon. Unusual circumstances in the early days of the operation of the project caused some delay in its development, but it is now on the high road to success, with but two obstacles in the way of making that success complete. Those obstacles are the lack of sufficient water supply for the Johnson lateral and the failure of the Reclamation Service thus far to construct the Willow Creek lateral.

The Johnson lateral was the first unit opened, and the water therefor is taken directly from the inlet canal between the Bellefourche River and the reservoir. There is abundant water in the reservoir for the needs of the project, but this one unit, which is relatively a small part of the project, having an area of about 3,700 acres, is dependent for water on the unregulated flow of the Bellefourche River. This was expected to be sufficient for the area involved, but time has demonstrated that it is not. According to my information, during 4 of the 10 years this unit has been in operation there has been such a shortage of water in the crop-growing season as to make the deficiency serious, indeed, to the water users in the lateral.

That you may know just how serious is this lack of water, I recently requested Mr. James E. Stewart, of Bellefourche, S. Dak., a veteran of the recent war and a highly capable citizen who is not directly interested in any of the lands involved, to carefully investigate the acreage planted and yields therefrom of the various kinds of crops on the Johnson lateral during the year 1919, and to estimate the loss, based on a careful consideration of the yields of this lateral and of the yields on the project. I have received his report, as follows:

Johnson lateral losses.

Commodity.	Acreage.	Average loss.	Total loss.
	Acres.
Pasture	243	Unknown
Oats	271	42 bushels at 3 cents per pound=$13.42 per acre.	$3,642.24
Native hay	289	Unknown
Alfalfa	1,320	¾ ton per acre at $18 per ton=$13.50 per acre.	17,820.00
Sugar beets	490	2 tons per acre at $10 per ton=$20 per acre.	9,800.00
Potatoes	17	20 bushels per acre at 7 cents per pound=$84 per acre.	1,428.00
Corn	116	15 bushels per acre at 3 cents per pound=$25.20 per acre.	2,923.20
Wheat	751	33 bushels per acre at $3 per bushel=$101.25 per acre.	76,038.71
Miscellaneous	122	30 bushels per acre with feed value 3 cents per pound with average weight 40 pounds per bushel=$36 per acre.	4,392.00
Grand total	3,619		116,044.15

Average loss per acre, counting land on which no loss was figured, $32.06.

Thus, you will see, gentlemen of the House, that the water users under the Johnson lateral last year alone suffered a loss of approximately 40 per cent of the estimated cost of providing storage for this lateral, which storage would also serve adjoining lands. I further call your attention to the fact that if my friend Stewart had in preparing his estimates used the prices prevailing in the city of Washington for these various commodities the estimated loss would be far in excess of the figures submitted.

I fully appreciate the situation as to the reclamation fund where the balance is now lower than it ever has been since the fund was established, but, Mr. Chairman, when one has applied for and received a water right from the Reclamation Service, which is a part of the Government of the United States, that person has a right to expect delivery of sufficient water for irrigation purposes. There is no excuse that can be offered that will ease the heartache of the man who sees his crops wither beneath the summer sun while irrigation ditches are dry because the water supply is not reliable. These farmers have no other income than the income of their irrigated farms, and when crops fail, then must and does come privation not only to the head of the family but to the wife and children as well, and the development of the farm comes to a standstill.

In the last analysis the Congress is the only recourse and we can not evade our share of the responsibility for seeing that this Government keeps faith with those folks under the Johnson lateral who never have been segregated from the Bellefourche project and who are charged with their proportionate share of the cost of construction and the cost of operation and maintenance, as are the other water users of the project. They have a just and righteous cause, the good faith of the Government is at stake, and the Congress ought to see to it that that for which they have paid, are paying, and are willing to pay—a reliable supply of water—is provided.

What then, Mr. Chairman, is the remedy for this unusual situation, the like of which I fail to find in reading the reports of the Reclamation Service? Careful examination has been made of the drainage basin above to locate sites at which suitable storage might be built for the Johnson lateral lands. A number of sites were found and studied, but to most of these there are serious objections on account of insufficient water supply or excessive cost. Apparently the most attractive site located is commonly known as the proposed Chicken Creek Reservoir, the construction of which has been estimated for by the Reclamation Service. The site is sufficient to provide storage both for this lateral and a near-by private development.

By building a larger reservoir for the double proposition there could be accomplished an economy in the unit cost. The suggestion has, therefore, been made by the Reclamation Service and tentative arrangements outlined for a joinder of forces between that private development and the Government on behalf of the Bellefourche project. The report, however, was not completed in time to be included in the regular reclamation estimate. In the supplemental estimate for appropriations for the coming fiscal year there was included an item of $300,000 for the construction of this reservoir. The cost of this construction would be charged to the Bellefourche project and to the private development known as the Red Water Irrigation project, in proportion as the acreage benefited bears to the total cost.

The situation with relation to estimates of the Reclamation Service is in itself unusual. Three estimates were submitted. The first one exhausts the reclamation fund as estimated for the year 1921. A second estimate was submitted which contemplated expenditures of $10,000,000 from the Treasury general fund. That estimate was not acted on by the committee. There is prospect under the oil-leasing bill of material additions to the reclamation fund, especially in view of the fact that many millions of dollars of the proceeds of oil sales in Wyoming and California have been impounded in banks awaiting such time as the Government might release the withdrawals and permit the funds to be dispersed. Very quickly the Government will receive its share of the money involved. That income is roughly estimated at $5,000,000, and on the assumption that this would become available for the fiscal year 1921 a supplemental estimate was prepared, approved by the President, and submitted to Congress covering the more urgent needs for additional construction. The item for the Chicken Creek Reservoir is included in that supplemental estimate, which has not been reported to the House, it being my understanding that the committee purposes to take up those estimates just as soon as money under the oil-leasing bill is actually in the reclamation fund.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will be kind enough to enlighten the House on this point, for as heretofore explained the water users under the Johnson lateral are in desperate need of a reliable water supply. Not alone are their interests involved, for we are assured that just as soon as water supply is provided for that lateral, construction of a sugar refinery at Bellefourche, S. Dak., by the Great Western Sugar Co. will be undertaken. Four hundred and ninety acres of sugar beets were involved in the loss last year, to say nothing of the acreage that might have been planted to beets if the water users had been assured of water for irrigation.

Thus this unit in its present condition not only retards its own progress, but, so to speak, retards the progress of the whole community, especially on the matter of the erection of the sugar refinery, for the lands under this lateral are very essential to the success of beet production on the Bellefourche project. For these water users who are helpless in the hands of the Reclamation Service and of Congress I plead for justice. I beg of you that provision be early made for proper storage, to the end that the good faith of the Government with these of its citizens may be maintained, that the water right which these folks have from the Government may not be meaningless, and that the full measure of success to which the project is entitled may come to it.

There has also been estimated as supplemental construction an item of $180,000 for the construction of what is known as the Willow Creek unit of the Bellefourche project, comprising between seven and eight thousand acres of land. Nothing more is needed for this than the extension of the north canal a distance of approximately 20 miles. The area involved is excellent land, the largest feature of the construction being an inverted siphon across Willow Creek 6,200 feet in length and having a capacity of 130 cubic feet per second. This extension of the north canal, together with the small laterals and incidental construction ought to be provided for at the earliest possible date, for water is available and these lands of right ought to be brought into that state of production contemplated for the lands under the project. Until the north canal is extended the lands involved will not commence to pay their share of the cost of the project nor will they produce more than ordinary dry lands of that locality.

The best interests of the Reclamation Service, the best interests of the water users there, and, in fact, the best interests of the Government itself demand that storage be provided for the Johnson lateral and the construction of the Willow Creek unit.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the project in which the gentleman is interested is one of the big projects. It is a project that must have as soon as possible some additional appropriations. The committee realized that, and the reason why the committee did not report approximately in the total of $5,000,000 additional was because the funds that were thought to be available coming in under the land leasing law were tied up.

Money has been paid in under protest, and now there is a likelihood it may have to be paid back. Now, the gentleman can see the confusion that would have arisen if we had appropriated $5,000,000 more; then all of these projects would be cut down proportionately, or, if the director thought the money would come in, he might pay out money on one necessitating the curtailment in another, because this appropriation is not out of the General Treasury, but it is out of the fund. Now, as soon as that money is available, as soon as Congress knows the money is in the reclamation fund and is available for that reclamation project, I believe it ought to be expended for the purposes that Congress intended it should be expended for, to aid in production of those parts of the country, but until it is released, and until it is a free balance, I think the gentleman can well see that we ought not to attempt to use something that we do not know whether it belongs to the Government of the United States or to some private individual.

Mr. GANDY. Just one thing further. I shall not attempt——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GANDY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GANDY. I shall not attempt in any way to bind the chairman of the committee, but let me ask one further question. If this money should be available while Congress is in session, would the Committee on Appropriations, in the opinion of the chairman, be disposed then to consider the supplemental estimates without waiting until another sundry civil bill comes before that committee?

Mr. GOOD. If that matter were brought to the attention of Congress by the Secretary of the Interior by a deficiency estimate, with the statement that it was of sufficient importance for immediate action, I certainly, as chairman of the committee, would lay it before the subcommittee for the purpose of action. What the action would be, of course, I can not foretell.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point for the present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, for a very good reason the gentleman a while ago, in arguing the reclamation feature of this bill, made no reference to Texas, but for some reason, I do not know why, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] egged him on to say that over $3,000,000 had been given to Texas——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows why. Because the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] was making a statement in which he intended to include the whole field of reclamation development, but he had not mentioned Texas. I reminded him of his oversight. I will say to the gentleman from Texas, if he will allow me, I was one of those who helped Texas to become a beneficiary under the reclamation law. I visited the project down there several times. I was much in favor of that development, and I have not the slightest inclination to in any wise reflect upon the development in Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Wyoming will admit that there is not a single acre of Government land in Texas, will he not?

Mr. MONDELL. There is not; that is why they do not contribute.

Mr. BLANTON. And the gentleman will admit that the only reclamation feature in any way that affects Texas is the mere fact that water from the Elephant Butte Dam, in another State, flows down the Rio Grande and comes into Texas, by which Texas gets some little benefit under the act which he mentioned, and I feel, as a Member from Texas, very thankful to him for what he did while on that committee in helping one of my predecessors, the Hon. W. R. Smith, in getting that reclamation amendment passed, but the only way in which Texas benefits by any reclamation act is the mere privilege of using some of this surplus water that comes from the Elephant Butte Dam down the Rio Grande in Texas, and the people using it pay for it. Is not that the fact?

Mr. MONDELL. That is the only way any community benefits, by getting the use of water through the use of Government money, with which to build the works necessary to apply it.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but there is not a single dam or reservoir in Texas built with Government money. And it is also a fact, I will remind the gentleman from Wyoming, that every man in Texas who enjoys any of this water pays the Government for it.

Mr. MONDELL. Texas people will, I hope and trust, repay the charges under the reclamation law on the project in Texas, but so far they have not done so, for the construction charges have not been fixed.

Mr. HARRELD. Will the gentleman permit a question? I would like to ask if it is not pretty generally agreed in Texas that Texas kind of borrowed that money from Oklahoma, anyway?

Mr. BLANTON. Oklahoma has been trying to get down into Texas for years and years; some of these days I hope——

Mr. McARTHUR. Does not the gentleman from Texas think that his State was smarter than some of the rest of the States by reserving the public lands?

Mr. BLANTON. Texas was a Republic within itself, and owned its own lands. She is more resourceful than most of the States, and she deserves everything she gets.

Mr. PARRISH. I wish to say that I hope the prophecy of the gentleman from Texas will never be realized. We welcome the Oklahomans as citizens of our State, but we are fighting them in the courts, trying to keep them from taking any part of Texas from us. We are trying to make them stay on their own side of the river as a State.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that Texas can take care of them.

Mr. HARRELD. I think it will be admitted that Texas got most of the Federal patronage that Oklahoma should have had under the Democratic administration of the last eight years, though I do not see why I should be interested in Democratic patronage.

Mr. BLANTON. Texas may have gotten some patronage but not more than she deserved, and now Oklahoma has used up all my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Okanogan project, Washington: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $196,000.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WEBSTER: Page 102, line 17, after the word "operations," strike out "$196,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$666,000: Provided, That no part of the moneys hereby appropriated shall become available for the construction of a permanent pumping plant until such action has been taken as may be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior to relieve the lands of the Okanogan project from liability for the obligations of the Methow-Okanogan irrigation district to the extent deemed necessary by the said Secretary to fully safeguard the interests of the United States for the funds invested in that project."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman, since I have only five minutes at my disposal, I shall endeavor, without unnecessary detail, to state the salient facts upon which this amendment is based. The Okanogan irrigation project in the State of Washington comprises approximately 8,000 acres of land, practically all of which is in bearing apple orchards. The water for irrigating purposes heretofore has been supplied by a natural watershed adjacent to the land, from which the rain and melting snow and ice are collected and stored in a large reservoir. At the time the development of the project was undertaken by the Government it was ascertained by the Reclamation Service that between 20,000 and 25,000 acre-feet of water would be the maximum requirement for irrigation. All the records available at that time indicated that the natural watershed would supply at least 35,000 acre-feet of water, so it will be seen the factor of safety based on the then available data was quite ample. Since then, however, due to climatic change, the removal of timber, unprecedented droughts for four successive years, and other causes, the volume of water supplied by the watershed is wholly inadequate to preserve the orchards. For example, it is estimated by competent experts that the supply for the current year will not exceed 5,000 acre-feet, or less than one-quarter of the necessary amount. The Reclamation Service, realizing the seriousness of the situation, caused a thorough special investigation to be made, and later reached the conclusion that the only salvation for the project is immediately to install a pumping system, so as to take from the Okanogan River the needed volume of water. The cost of this undertaking, as found by the Reclamation Service, will be approximately $470,000. The land is of the very best, according to the official statement of the Director of the Reclamation Service, and is conservatively valued by him at $750 per acre, or $6,000,000 in the aggregate. Already the Government has invested in the project considerably more than a million dollars, and the investment of the settlers is more than twice that amount.

The value of the annual fruit crop when sufficient water is to be had is about $350 per acre, as shown by the records of the marketing agency. Because of the unprecedentedly small amount of water in the reservoir at this time, the crop for the coming season undoubtedly will be greatly reduced, and unless immediate steps are taken to supply the necessary water next season the trees will be seriously injured, if not altogether destroyed. In order to have the required amount of water next season the contemplated pumping system must be installed during this summer and fall. Obviously such work can not be done in the winter season. Appreciating this emergency, the Secretary of the Interior on the 18th of March transmitted to the Committee on Appropriations through the usual official channels a supplemental emergency estimate, approved by the President, for $470,000 to cover the cost of installing a pumping plant. In this connection I may add that the aggregate assessment on the lands, including the pumping system, will be between $150 and $160 per acre, and Director Davis testified at the hearings that these lands easily will bear an assessment of $200 per acre, which is less than two-thirds of the value of the annual crop under conditions of normal water supply. The value of the crop for the year 1919 exceeded the entire cost of the project. After the passage of the oil and coal leasing bill the Reclamation Service submitted to the Committee on Appropriations general supplemental estimates contemplating the expenditure of the moneys coming into the reclamation revolving fund in consequence of that law. Inasmuch, however, as the amount to be covered into the reclamation fund from that source is at this time somewhat speculative and conjectural, the Committee on Appropriations, as I am advised by its distinguished chairman, deemed it unwise to allocate or assign the fund until more definite information is available. With this policy I have not the slightest fault to find, but in applying the policy the committee failed to distinguish between the general supplemental estimates made in anticipation of the revenue to be derived from the leasing law and the special emergency estimate for the Okanogan project, which was in no sense intended by the Reclamation Service as a part of its enlarged program in virtue of the leasing law, but which would have to be provided for if the project is to be saved, even though that law had not been passed. This latter assertion is supported by the statement of Director Davis made to me personally and by the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior transmitting the estimate to the Committee on Appropriations. I am asking, therefore, by the amendment which I have offered that this error may be corrected in order that the Government may not lose its sole security for the repayment of approximately a million dollars, and that the settlers may not lose their entire investment of more than double that amount. Without an adequate water supply the land included in the project is practically worthless. Of course, the committee will understand that the amendment does not call for an appropriation from the Treasury, nor does it increase the amount of appropriations carried by the bill. It merely allocates or allots from the reclamation revolving fund to the Okanogan project for the installation of a pumping plant the sum of $470,000, provided there is sufficient money in the fund for that purpose, the entire amount to be secured by a first lien on the lands and to be repaid in full to the Government by the settlers, as provided in the general reclamation act of June 17, 1902, as amended. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph may be passed over for the present, with the reservation of the point of order pending, to be returned to later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over temporarily, with the amendment and reservation of the point of order pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement to the reclamation fund the proportionate expense of operation and maintenance of the reservoirs for furnishing stored water to the lands in Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., in accordance with the provisions of section 22 of the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stats., p. 604), there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $11,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? A gentleman who is a member of the committee would like to make a statement.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to speak on this amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER] as to the Okanogan project.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman had best wait until it comes up.

Mr. FRENCH. I prefer to wait until it comes up.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SMITHWICK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. WALSH, Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. HADLEY, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. CONNALLY, and Mr. STEELE, for five days, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. NELSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the United States Botanic Garden is 100 years old to-day, and six years ago to-day we passed the Smith-Lever bill. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the Botanic Garden and on agricultural legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Botanic Garden and on agricultural legislation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, what was done with the request for five days' leave of absence for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request was granted.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not see how in the world the House can get along for five days without the gentleman. What are they going to do without somebody over there to look after matters?

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether we will go ahead with this bill on Monday or take up the District legislation?

Mr. GOOD. I hope that arrangements may be made by which this bill will be taken up on Monday.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is, Mr. Speaker, that the sundry civil bill will be considered on Monday.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13590. An act granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across the Red River between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla.; and

H. R. 13724. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Orange, Tex.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 10, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay claims for damages by naval vessels adjusted by the Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 757); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a copy of a communication from the chairman of the United States Railroad Labor Board, submitting a paragraph of legislation for inclusion in the sundry civil appropriation bill now pending (H. Doc. No. 758); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, required by the Supervising Architect to cover operating supplies for public buildings during the remainder of the fiscal year 1920, together with paragraph of legislation (H. Doc. No. 759); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting copy of a communication from the Postmaster General, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations required by the Post Office Department for certain items payable from postal revenues, fiscal years 1920 and 1921 (H. Doc. No. 760); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MAPES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11329) to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia acquired for a school site, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 943), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8535) to provide for the redistribution of general taxes and special assessments due and payable on real estate in the District of Columbia, in cases of subdivision or sales of land therein, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 944), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11841) to amend an act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service, approved February 15, 1893, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 945), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, to which was referred the resolution (H. Res. 201) authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to report to the House of Representatives the cost of transportation of coal by canals and other navigable waters within continental United States as compared with railway rates, together with recommendations, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 946), which said resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8692) authorizing the exchange of lands within the Montezuma National Forest in Colorado, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 947), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2977) to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, as amended by an act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 951), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. McKINIRY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7333) for the relief of Emily J. Mullins, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 949), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 13994) to provide for an investigation and report as to the advisability of exchange of lands in national forests, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MAPES (by request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia): A bill (H. R. 13995) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close certain streets, roads, or highways in the District of Columbia rendered useless or unnecessary by reason of the opening, extension, widening, or straightening of other streets, roads, or highways in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 13996) to prohibit the exportation of sugar from the United States and its possessions and directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to the Congress certain information regarding sugar; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14005) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a condemned German or Austrian cannon to the city of Owosso, Mich.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14006) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a condemned German or Austrian cannon to the city of Carson City, Mich.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14007) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a condemned German or Austrian cannon to the city of Ithaca, Mich.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14008) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a condemned German or Austrian cannon to the city of St. Johns, Mich.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14009) authorizing the Secretary of War to make donation of a condemned German or Austrian cannon to the city of St. Louis, Mich.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KREIDER: A bill (H. R. 14010) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Linglestown, Pa., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14011) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the borough of Berrysburg, Pa., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 14012) to provide for the retirement of officers in the Naval Reserve Force; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: Resolution (H. Res. 550) requesting the Department of Justice to investigate sugar hoarding in El Paso, Tex.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 354) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to Paul E. Slocumb Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Bloomington, Ind., tents, cots, mattresses, pillows, and blankets for use at the State encampment to be held at said city May 25, 26, and 27, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 14013) granting an increase of pension to Stanley S. Stout; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 14014) granting an increase of pension to David W. Graves; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWOPE: A bill (H. R. 14015) for the relief of F. McKenzie Davison; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 14016) granting a pension to John S. Dodge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VESTAL: A bill (H. R. 14017) granting a pension to Catherine Moody; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 14018) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Kelley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Maine: A bill (H. R. 14019) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Linnehan; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

3510. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of League of Women Voters, for Federal legislation on marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3511. Also (by request), petition of Congregational National Council, for constitutional amendment to give Congress power to enact uniform laws of marriage and divorce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

3512. Also (by request), petition of Brockton Post, No. 35, American Legion, favoring bonus plan for ex-soldiers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3513. Also (by request), petition of department commander, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, extending thanks for the passage of the Fuller pension bill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

3514. Also (by request), petition of General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Des Moines, Iowa, opposing all legislation favoring the recognition of the so-called republic of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3515. By Mr. ESCH: Petition of American Steamship Owners' Association of New York, favoring the same rank and pay for officers and men of the Coast Guard as are enjoyed by the officers and men of the Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

3516. Also, petition of Italian Chamber of Commerce of Chicago, Ill., favoring the passage of the Kenyon bill, Senate bill 3315, and opposing House bills 61, 563, and 8572; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

3524. Also, petition of L. Siesinger & Son, Baltimore, Md., regarding McNary bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

3525. Also, petition of W. M. Dilsaver, John R. Sheridan, and A. H. Scanland, Liberty Lodge, all of Baltimore, Md., regarding House bill 12820; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3526. Also, petition of Maria Briscoe Croker, gold-star division, Baltimore, Md., regarding bringing home soldier dead; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3527. By Mr. MAHER: Petition of board of aldermen, city of New York, urging immediate legislation granting postal employees an increase in salary; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3528. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Steamship Owners' Association, New York City, favoring increased pay to employees of Coast Guard Service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

3529. Also, petition of board of aldermen, of New York City, urging immediate legislation for increased pay of postal employees; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3530. By Mr. SHREVE: Papers to accompany House bill 13902, granting a pension to Mary A. Crate; to the Committee on Pensions.

3531. By Mr. TAGUE: Petition of Maurice H. Powers, State secretary, Massachusetts State Letter Carriers' Association, Joseph L. Donovan, Mattapan post office employees, and post office clerks, mailing division, south postal station of Boston, Mass., asking for immediate action on report of postal wage commission; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

3532. Also, petition of Mary Greene and Ellen Flint, of St. Paul, Minn., asking for report of Mason bill, House bill 3404, from committee; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

3533. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Brockton Post No. 35, American Legion, Brockton, Mass., favoring a bonus for ex-service men and women; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 10, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to the duty of this day out of the day set apart by action of Congress to commemorate the motherhood of this great land. We come with awakened memories of the precious days when heaven lay about us in our infancy, and of the continual care and toil and sacrifice that she gave us as she watched us develop to manhood, and the final blessing she gave us as she commissioned us with a mother's love to go into the world and stand for her honor, and her truth, and her God. We pray that we may erect in our lives monuments to the blessed mothers, and that by our high thinking and our clean living and our enthusiastic and united effort we may show ourselves worthy of this splendid heritage that we have received out of our mothers' love. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, May 7, 1920, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPENCER. If there is no objection, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a petition relative to Senate bill 4267, concerning a commission to examine and report on the racial question. As time may afford in the future, I shall have something to say upon that bill. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, praying for the passage of bill (S. 4267) creating a commission on the racial question:

We, the undersigned citizens, believing that the best interests of our country demand harmonious cooperation between all classes of its citizens, and that peace and prosperity can bless our land with substantial and lasting effects only when there is a perfect understanding and harmonious action between all classes of citizens, and when all work together in unison for the common good of all; and, believing that the provisions of bill S. 4267, introduced by Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER, of Missouri, creating a commission on the racial question, if authorized by law, is calculated to quiet the unrest now prevalent throughout the country among a large class of our citizens, and to restore confidence and friendly feelings in the disturbed sections of the United States, and to bring about a more harmonious relation between white and colored Americans; and, believing that it is due the people of the entire country that steps be taken by national authority to handle the racial question as it would any other disturbing element in the body politic, do pray for the passage of the bill (S. 4267) creating a commission on the racial question.

JESSE LAWSON,
President Frelinghuysen University and President National Sociological Society,
(And others).

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of the Student Council of McPherson College, of McPherson, Kans., remonstrating against universal military training and praying for the enactment of legislation providing for physical education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the independence of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the sunday school of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Manhattan, Kans., remonstrating against the use by the liquor interests of territory in China under the control of the United States Government for the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the establishment of a trans-Pacific news service, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 4332) to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 581) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13576) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to the Postmaster General, without charge therefor, a certain building, or buildings, now located at Watertown, N. Y., reported it without amendment.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON REORGANIZATION.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back to the Senate favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a joint committee on the reorganization of the administrative branch of the Government, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I desire to make just a brief statement as to the object of the joint resolution.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to hear it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee is created, to be known as the joint committee on reorganization, which shall consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the joint committee on reorganization to make a survey of the administrative services of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority; also to determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services, with a view to the proper correlation of the same, and what departmental regrouping of services should be made, so that each executive department shall embrace only services having close working relation with each other and ministering directly to the primary purpose for which the same are maintained and operated, to the end that there shall be achieved the largest possible measure of efficiency and economy in the conduct of Government business.

SEC. 3. That the committee shall from time to time report to both the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its inquiries, together with its recommendations, and shall prepare and submit bills or resolutions having for their purpose the coordination of Government functions and their most efficient and economical conduct. The committee is authorized to employ such assistance as it may require, at such compensation as the committee may determine to be just and reasonable, and to make such reasonable expenditures as may be necessary for the proper conduct of its work, such expenditures to be paid in equal parts from the contingent funds of the House of Representatives and the Senate, as from time to time may be duly authorized by resolutions of those bodies.

SEC. 4. That the officers and employees of all administrative services of the Government shall furnish to the committee such information regarding powers, duties, activities, organization, and methods of business as the committee may from time to time require, and the committee or any of its employees, when duly authorized by the committee, shall have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any administrative service for the purpose of securing the information needed by the committee in the prosecution of its work.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, at the time I introduced the joint resolution I made a short statement to the representative of the New York Sun outlining its provisions. Perhaps it would be well for me at this time simply to repeat a part of that statement.

"The resolution provides that the committee shall 'make a survey of the administrative services of the Government for the purpose of securing all pertinent facts concerning their powers and duties, their distribution among the several executive departments, and their overlapping and duplication of authority.' The committee would also 'determine what redistribution of activities should be made among the several services, with a view to the proper correlation of the same, and what departmental regrouping of services should be made so that each executive department shall embrace only services having close working relations with each other to the end that there shall be achieved the largest possible measure of efficiency and economy in the conduct of Government business.'

"The administrative branches of the Government have undergone no fundamental change since the organization was devised by Alexander Hamilton.

"No other government in the world could have gone on as ours has done and paid the bills involved in our wasteful methods of administration. We have been able to do it because this country has had resources and wealth unparalleled. But the war has brought us at last to realize that these will not last always, and that we must begin to adopt efficient administrative methods.

"We need a complete survey of the whole situation de novo by a committee of men willing to recognize that it is a task of day and night for a year, and very likely two years. There must be no politics in it, but merely a determination to get results. In my resolution I have not even suggested that the commission shall include representatives of both political parties, because I have wanted to leave the matter wide open for opportunity to appoint the men best equipped to do the work, regardless of party, and I would rather see the right men undertake it, even if they were all Democrats or all Republicans, than to see it intrusted to anybody else.

"There is endless duplication of work among different departments, and even in the same department. Can anybody give a possible reason why the Department of the Interior should be running an insane asylum, or why there should be 27 engineering organizations under our Government, or why the Government's efforts to encourage foreign commerce should be divided among the activities of four or five departments, perhaps more? It is the same through all the Government functions, and now when the burden of carrying our enormous debt is weighing on the people we can no longer neglect to give it consideration."

I think that succinctly states the object of the joint resolution. I recognize that it will take at least two years to make this report if the examination is made as it ought to be made, and there is no one who knows the least thing about the workings of our Government who will not immediately recognize that this work ought to be undertaken.

I therefore hope that the joint resolution will be put on its passage.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I considered the pending joint resolution when it was before the committee and before it was reported to the Senate. I wish to say that I approve of the measure. I do not understand that it is introduced by way of criticism of anything which has taken place recently or in the distant past. The conflict of authority between the various bureaus of the Government and the duplication of work has not been deliberately done, but it has grown up through a period of years. That there is a vast duplication of work in the Government, that there is lost motion and lack of economy, can not be questioned, and I think an effort ought to be made to avoid duplication and to work toward greater economy in the Government.

Therefore, I favor the pending joint resolution. I think it will be a very difficult task for any committee to work out. It is a task that will meet with a great deal of conflict when the report is made. It does not commit Congress to any line of action, but merely expects to bring information for its future guidance.

I think it will cost a small amount of money, but the money will be well expended if after the committee is appointed it can bring to the two Houses of Congress information that will be a guide to the future reorganization of the departments along economic lines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 19, after the word "conduct," insert the words "and the final report of said committee shall be submitted not later than the second Monday in December, 1922."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DONATION OF GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC POST BUILDING IN BEDFORD, IOWA.

Mr. FERNALD. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9944) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Sedgwick Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of its memorial hall property in Bedford, Taylor County, Iowa, for Federal building purposes, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the bill; it is such a wonderful bill and so unusual, in that it is asking for the opportunity to give something to the Government in these days when nearly everyone is trying to get something out of the Public Treasury.

This building at Bedford was built out of the pockets of the old soldiers of the Civil War. They have had a post there in days gone by of from 300 to 500 members. It has gone down now to about 25 members. This memorial hall which they constructed will make a good post-office building and save rent for the post office. These old soldiers desire to have it turned over to the Government as a contribution from them, which illustrates, I think, that the men who were willing to save the country then will have to save it in the days to come. It is such an unusual bill that I hope it will be passed by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Sedgwick Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of its memorial hall property in Bedford, Taylor County, Iowa, for Federal building purposes, being the east 29 feet of lot 8, block 11, original town of Bedford, at the southwest corner of Main and Water Streets, together with the two-story and basement building, 29 by 81 feet, outside measurement, now situated thereon; that said property shall be used and operated as are other public buildings, and that the annual appropriations for the general maintenance of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be construed to be available for use in connection with said property as for other buildings under said department.

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to permit said post and the Sedgwick Post Women's Relief Corps, No. 82, to continue to occupy the second floor of said building until such time as said post dissolves; such occupancy to be without charge for rent, water, heat, or light, which are to be included in such free use.

And that a suitable bronze tablet commemorative of this gift shall be furnished and placed on the exterior of said building at the expense of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Passed with thanks.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 4355) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a United States hospital in the State of Colorado; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4356) granting an increase of pension to Phoebe A. Rawles; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRANCE:

A bill (S. 4357) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for discharged soldiers, sailors, marines, Army and Navy nurses (male and female), and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 4358) to provide allowances for mothers with children under 16 years of age dependent upon them for support in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 4359) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Princeton, in the State of West Virginia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

A bill (S. 4360) granting a pension to Abraham Stewart; to the Committee on Pensions.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

VALUE OF COTTON CONTRACTS.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, recently an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, known as the Comer amendment, was adopted by the Senate, and the question is now in conference between the two Houses. I have had several letters on this subject of late, and I desire to submit one from the president of the Marine Bank & Trust Co., of New Orleans. I will read it:

MARINE BANK & TRUST CO.,
New Orleans, April 30, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD J. GAY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Last week when I had the pleasure of traveling as far as Gulfport with you, you will recall that we discussed the Comer amendment, and I promised to send you some accurate information as to the possible workings of that amendment, if it became a law. I now hand you a memorandum which was given to me by one of the best-posted cotton men here, which I trust will be of use to you.

While I do not claim to be an expert on cotton matters, I do think that I know something about the markets of the world, as I am watching them all the time, and it is my conviction that further interference on the part of Congress in the matter of future delivery contracts will not be beneficial to the farmer, unless the last legislation which was passed, restricting deliveries, should be repealed, which I think would be probably a good thing. The freer the market, the better the price.

With kind regards.

Very truly, yours, L. M. POOL, President.

This is the statement:

The Comer amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill is an ill-considered legislative proposal which would have a far-reaching injurious effect upon the entire cotton trade, from the producer to the ultimate consumer or user of the manufactured cotton products.

Serious economic legislation of this character should be given full and careful consideration and should not be railroaded through at the behest of political or private interests.

If the proponents of the Comer amendment were willing to have the light of intelligent reason and experience, or of intelligent understanding of their own interest, thrown upon the subject matter, they would not seek to have it jammed through as a rider on an important appropriation measure.

Mr. President, I want to say, in commenting, that I hold this matter is of too great importance to be railroaded through Congress as a rider upon any bill, and that as it is a subject affecting the cotton industry of this country it should be given hearings before the proper committees and legislation framed after everyone has had an opportunity to express his views. My interest is for the producer, the cotton farmer. Attaching this as a rider to an important bill—a bill which the country desires to have enacted into law, and one that can not now be agreed upon because of this amendment—I hope the conferees will recommend that the Senate recede from this amendment, so that we shall have an opportunity to finally pass the Agricultural appropriation bill, and that it may become a law.

The present future contract, which is the product of Federal legislation and which has the approval of the United States Department of Agriculture, limits the deliverable grades to those between middling fair at the top and low middling white at the bottom. All cotton deliverable under this contract is absolutely spinnable, although most of the spinners prefer to use grades from middling and above.

The Comer amendment provides that the buyer in the future contract shall have the right to demand that one-half of the delivery shall be middling and above and that the other half may, at the option of the seller, be of any grade or grades from middling fair to low middling white. The obvious purpose of this amendment is to insure the spinner who prefers to use middling and better grades that he can, by the purchase of a future contract on the rings of the exchanges, procure the delivery of 50 per cent of the grades that he prefers.

This mischievous and interested meddling with the complex machinery of the cotton trade would be harmful to the cotton producer, spinner, and merchant, and to the users of cotton goods for the following reasons:

The paramount value of the future contract is its "hedge" or protective value. It was never intended that such contract should take the place of specific grade and staple contracts between the spinner and the merchant, and it can never become such substitute.

The future contract is used by the cotton trade as a policy of insurance against price fluctuations. The spinner desiring to contract ahead for his manufactured product and not having the stock in hand and probably not procurable except out of the crop not yet made or even planted, may so contract with impunity if he can go into the future market and protect himself against loss by the purchase of a hedge. When the actual supplies are needed he goes into the spot market and purchases the particular grade and staple required for his mill, and he thereupon closes out his protective contract or, in other words, cancels his price insurance policy.

The producer, satisfied with the prices prevailing in the future contract market, may sell against his crop, yet to be made and thus protect himself against declines in price. When his cotton is ready for market he sells the same on the basis of the grade and staple of the same, and thereupon closes out his hedge or, in other words, cancels his policy of price insurance.

The cotton merchant, or middleman between the producer and spinner, may contract with this spinner for specific grades and staples which he has not presently in hand, or he may buy the producer's crop, for which he has no present orders, provided that he can in the first case buy a future hedge, or, in the second place, sell the same, thereby insuring himself against price fluctuations. When he executes his spot contracts he sells or buys his hedges or, in other words, cancels his price insurance policy.

If either the spinner or merchant elects to take actual delivery on the future contracts when the same mature, they can use such grades and staples as may be under their needs or contracts usable, and the residue may be delivered on future contracts sold against the same.

This, in a general way, is the function of the future contract market to the nonspeculative cotton trade. It gives the producer a broader market for his product, thereby enabling him to secure a better price, and it reduces the hazard to the manufacturer, thereby enabling him, if he chooses so to do, to reduce the price of the manufactured product to the ultimate consumer.

Mr. President, let me say that the question of this cotton contract has been considered by Congress for years and that the Government, through the Department of Agriculture, have formulated regulations which are printed in pamphlet form and which now govern the trading in cotton. The regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture, under section 5 of the United States cotton-futures act, as amended March 4, 1899, have been given the best thought and should not be changed by any hasty legislation.

But who supply these future contracts? Who are the underwriters of this price insurance who issue the policies which protect the great nonspeculative cotton trade in its forward business and commitments? Primarily the speculative element assumes this underwriting risk. The price optimist offers to buy and the price pessimist offers to sell. Thus the nonspeculative trade procures its insurance.

In order that there may be both buyers and sellers it is necessary that the terms of the future contract must be fair to both and that it shall contain no pitfalls for either. If the terms of the contract unduly favor the seller, then the buyers will be frightened off, or if the said terms are unduly in the buyer's favor, then the sellers will be frightened off; in either case the future-contract market would be impaired, if not destroyed.

The Comer amendment makes the terms of the future contract too strong; i. e., it imposes an increased risk on the seller. The contract is narrow enough as it now stands. If the seller finds that he would be required to deliver cotton which he might not be able to obtain, he simply would not commit himself. The result would be that the future contract would be a skyrocketing speculative affair with no trade utility, and the future market as a trade agency would be impaired or destroyed. It is exactly as if legislation was enacted which made the risk too great upon the fire insurance underwriters. On paper the insured would be benefited, but as a matter of fact he would be destroyed, because the underwriters would not assume the risk.

The effect of the Comer amendment would be, therefore, if adopted, fundamental and far-reaching. It would throw a monkey wrench into the trade machinery by which cotton is financed, marketed, and distributed. It would result disastrously to the producer by depriving him and the buyers of his product of the hedge insurance protection, thus restricting his market, and it would result in benefit to no one except possibly the spinner, who, having driven out all competitors, could dictate the price of cotton.

Curiously enough the particular advantage which the spinners (of whom Senator COMER, the largest spinner in Alabama, is and always has been representative) expect to obtain from the said Comer amendment would prove to be a particular disadvantage.

In cases where the spinner has used the future contract bought at the rings of the exchanges as the medium of actual delivery, he has taken such grades as met with the particular requirements of his mill and has disposed of the balance by selling future contracts against the same and retendering on said contracts. Said spinners now think that under the Comer amendment they could, by demanding actual delivery, procure at least 50 per cent of the grades which they prefer. Now, suppose under the Comer amendment the spinner took up 1,000 bales on future contract, of which 50 per cent was middling and above, the grades which he preferred, and 50 per cent was low middling, which he did not desire to use. If he sold a future contract against the residue, he would have to go out into the market and buy 50 per cent of middling and above in order to be in a position to comply with the terms of the Comer amendment. He would therefore be just where he started from, and if the better grades happened to be scarce he would probably set up a great howl that he was being squeezed by Senator COMER'S contract and that the future contract itself was a devilish piece of machinery designed for the purpose of robbing him of a modicum of the 200 per cent profit to which he has in recent years become accustomed.

Mr. President, I have a letter from the commissioner of agriculture of Louisiana, protesting against this proposed legislation, and also letters and telegrams from several other parties representing agricultural associations, protesting against the Comer amendment, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ASSOCIATION STATE FARMERS' UNION,
PRESIDENTS OF FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA, OFFICIAL HEADQUARTERS, NEW ORLEANS, LA.,
Weatherford, Okla., April 28, 1920.

Senator E. J. GAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The more our people find out about the Comer amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill the more they oppose it, for it will sure knock the farmer out on low-grade cotton, and it is not the farmers' fault that wind and rains turn cotton from good grades to low grades. We want the Agricultural appropriation bill, but we don't want the Comer rider, and we ask you and the Members of Congress to take off that Comer rider and let a separate bill be filed and let a full hearing be granted before it becomes a law. It strikes me this would be the fair way to do this, to give everybody a chance to be heard.

Yours, very truly, JOHN A. SIMPSON, President.

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C.

Hon. E. J. GAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The amendment offered by Senator COMER to the Agricultural appropriation bill enters so vitally into the business life of the Nation and is so far-reaching in its effect that, in my judgment, it would be only fair that the great interests involved should have ample time and opportunity to thoroughly study and discuss with the interested parties and the Members of Congress this matter in the fullest way. Therefore I believe that Senator COMER'S amendment should not be adopted as an amendment, but that, if he desires, it be offered as a bill and take the regular course and not be attached to the Agricultural appropriation bill, which it is desirable should be passed at an early day. I am,

Sincerely, yours,

GRAY SILVER,
Washington Representative
American Farm Bureau Federation.

NATIONAL GRANGE, PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY,
Washington, D. C., May 3, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD J. GAY,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: It has come to our knowledge that there is a wide difference of opinion among the cotton growers as to the Comer amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and because of the great importance of the matter I believe it should have a full and fair hearing before being enacted into law.

I therefore trust the bill will be reported without the Comer amendment.

Very truly, yours,

T. C. ATKESON,
Washington Representative.

BATON ROUGE, LA., March 30, 1920.

Hon. E. J. GAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We think Comer amendment is detrimental to cotton growers. You and RANSDELL please confer with Senator SMITH of South Carolina at once.

HARRY D. WILSON,
Commissioner.

MANY, LA., March 29, 1920.

Hon. E. J. GAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Kill the Comer rider to the Agriculture appropriation bill, as it outlaws the majority of the cotton raised by farmers and destroys price insurance.

I. N. MCCOLLISTER,
President Louisiana Farmers' Union.

GONZALES, LA., March 30, 1920.

Senator EDWARD J. GAY,
Washington, D. C.:

The rider to the Agriculture appropriation bill by COMER, if permitted to become law, would so restrict the contract as to be a vital blow to its usefulness to the producers, sellers, and buyers of American cotton. Briefly, the Comer rider is in the interest of the cotton spinner and opposed to the cotton producers, and if incorporated as the law would mean a death blow to the cotton producers. I hope you will do all in your power to eliminate this Comer rider entirely. The passage of the Comer rider would place the American farmer at the mercy of the American spinners and foreign manufacturers, as they would control the price of American cotton.

H. ARTHUR MORGAN,
Secretary-Treasurer Association State Farmers' Union Presidents.

CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on May 6 last a resolution was introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] contemplating an inquiry by the Committee on Privileges and Elections as to contributions to the campaigns of candidates for nomination for President of the United States. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Washington Post this morning contains an article entitled "Big G. O. P. War Chest," which is written by Mr. George Rothwell Brown, one of the staff of the Post, from which I read as follows:

Encouraging reports to Republicans have become available with respect to campaign finances. The campaign fund this year will reach a most interesting figure, and if it should touch the $10,000,000 mark it would not be surprising. * * *

The collection agency of the Republican Party has been organized with thoroughness.

It covers every State and every county. Every State has been assessed its quota of money. In some States, if not all, the apportionment has been based on the Liberty loan subscriptions, and some of the Western States have already gone over the top.

* * * * * * *

The ways and means committee is composed of National Committeemen T. Coleman du Pont, the Delaware millionaire; James M. McGraw, the millionaire oil and lumber man, of Oklahoma; and CAMPBELL SLEMP, of Virginia; and, in addition, William Boyce Thompson, the New York millionaire; William Cooper Procter, the Cincinnati millionaire; and former Senator John W. Weeks, of Boston.

* * * * * * *

Only the most credulous, I judge, will cling to the theory that subscriptions to the Republican campaign fund are to be limited to $1,000 each, which has been officially advanced, but which is shot full of holes in private conversations. In fact, the crusade spirit is unmistakably abroad in the country, and the people are showing unusual willingness to contribute to the fund. I am told that those who formerly gave $50 and $100 in presidential years have been "coming across" with donations of $500 and $1,000.

I respectfully call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the circumstance that Mr. T. Coleman du Pont is the chairman of this finance committee, which it is expected will raise a fund of $10,000,000 for the purpose of electing a Republican President.

Mr. THOMAS. I trust the Senator from Montana will also call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to this remarkable piece of news. If the Senator from Montana will permit me for a moment, I may say that this is a situation which I anticipated when I prepared and introduced a pending amendment to the antidumping bill, intending to impose an income tax of 50 per cent upon all such contributions in excess of $1,000. If the Senate will only enact that provision into law, possibly, upon the principle that nothing is wholly bad, we may be able to get a very respectable revenue for the Government through the process.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask that the article in the Post to which I have referred be submitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for consideration in connection with the resolution to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is inconceivable to me that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] or any other Senator should think there is any truth in the newspaper report from which the Senator from Montana has read. It is written by Mr. Brown; it is sensational in character; and no one thinks that there are going to be $10,000,000 collected for the next Republican campaign. I do not believe that even the Democratic Party can collect that amount of money for the coming campaign, with all the power that they have for enforcing contributions, which, no doubt, they will undertake to exercise.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that in view of some developments of the immediate past if the Democratic Party is able to raise a million dollars I shall be very much surprised; but let me say to the Senator, with regard to this article, that it appears in a Republican paper——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; it is not a Republican paper.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes; it is. It does not call itself Republican, but it does not have to do so, for anybody who reads it knows what its politics is. It identifies certain millionaires in the United States who are prominent in the Republican Party, one of whom has been managing the candidacy of a very prominent and conspicuous candidate, and another of whom is a delegate at large from the great State of New York to the Republican national convention.

I hope this report is not true. Ten million dollars, Mr. President, in these days does not appeal to Senators of the experience of my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and myself as very large; it is "chicken feed" in these days, and compared to the extravagance of the country, as evidenced by the expenditure of a hundred million dollars a month in New York for candy, as announced by the New York Times yesterday, it is, after all, not surprising. I may be overcredulous, but I am inclined to think that there is something behind it. At least, I hope the Senator from Idaho will direct the energies of his investigation toward that subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I think at the same time the attention of the Senator from Idaho ought to be called to the fact that there are several millionaires in the United States who are very active at present directing the campaign of Democratic aspirants for the presidential nomination.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true——

Mr. SMOOT. And I wish to say to the Senator from Colorado that, as between the millionaires mentioned in the article to which reference has been made and the millionaires of New York having the campaign of Mr. McAdoo in hand, give me the millionaires of New York for money-raising ability, because I think that Mr. Barney Baruch and Mr. Chadbourne can raise $10 where any one of the men mentioned in the newspaper article can raise $1.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be so; I am not so familiar with millionaires as is my friend from Utah; but this matter should not be set aside by merely having the pot call the kettle black. If contributions are being made in these enormous amounts, I do not care whether they are made for Democratic candidates or for Republican candidates, it is wrong, and we should impose an income tax upon the men who spend these prodigal sums for corrupting the conscience and the political virtue of the Nation.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, the Senator makes a statement, of course, that anyone, perhaps, can agree to, that it is wrong to raise $10,000,000 for any campaign.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator says "anyone perhaps can agree" to it. Does not the Senator agree to it without the "perhaps"?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; but I did not want to speak for everybody, and that is why I used the word "perhaps."

Mr. THOMAS. Why not?

Mr. SMOOT. Because there are people in the United States who may not think it is wrong, and I do not want to say for them that it is positively wrong. Personally I think it is, and I do not believe that it will be done.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope not.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any such idea, and it seems to me almost a waste of time to call attention to this question based upon a newspaper report. I have not any doubt that both parties will use a great deal of money in the campaign——

Mr. THOMAS. More than they should.

Mr. SMOOT. But I wish to say now that as between the two parties I know the Democratic Party is in a better position to request, if not to demand, contributions than is the Republican Party.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. What the Senator from Utah says may be so; I do not intend to pass upon it; I do not know; but I shall not defend my party upon the theory that, because the millionaires of the other party propose to do these things, therefore we should do them. I think such action should be prohibited and punished, and when a Democrat violates the principle he is equally guilty with a Republican who violates it.

Mr. SMOOT. I was not offering any excuse whatever for the rumor that the Republican Party was going to collect $10,000,000 for the coming fall campaign. I simply rose to say that I do not believe there is a word of truth in the article read, and I think it is perfect nonsense to call attention of the Senate to an article written by Mr. Brown in which he gives an expression of opinion concerning a matter that he does not know anything about.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think it is perfectly apparent to anyone who has observed political conditions for the last six months that there is a very powerful organization in both parties which has come to the conclusion that the really dominating and controlling principle in American politics is that of money. There is nothing to be gained by either party undertaking to cover up the fact that there is a powerful element in both parties who believe in that proposition. Whether or not they constitute a majority in either party I do not know, but there are too many in both parties. The masses of the American people on both sides of the political fence are just as much opposed to that kind of practice as they ever were, and the thing which devolves upon us to do is to expose the coterie of profiteers and multimillionaires who have lost all sense of decency, and who propose if they can to control the conventions and the presidential election through the sheer use of money and let the American people take care of the situation. They will do so when they get to the polls. That is the best way to take care of the matter.

Mr. President, a few days ago I offered a resolution calling for an investigation of campaign expenditures, concerning which I wish to say a word in no sense reflecting upon the committee, for I state in all sincerity that I do not reflect upon it. It is pretty difficult to get a majority of any committee in session now owing to the absence of so many Senators. Therefore, without intending to reflect upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and for the reason that it is difficult to get a majority of the committee assembled, I am going to ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of Senate resolution 357 and that it be brought to the floor of the Senate in order that I may have it referred where it has to go in any event, namely, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HIGH COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CAPPER. I offer a resolution directing the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the advance in the price of bread in the District of Columbia. I should like to have unanimous consent to have it read and considered at this time. I do not believe there will be any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 358) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is reported that there is to be an increase in the price of bread in the District of Columbia; and

Whereas such increase will place an additional living cost burden upon the people of the District which a great many citizens believe is unwarranted at this time and out of harmony with the Nation-wide effort that is being made to stabilize prices: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, directed to inquire into the facts as to the proposed increase in the price of bread and make such recommendations as the situation warrants.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I offer this resolution because at the hearings conducted last July and August by the Special Committee on High Cost of Living appointed from the District of Columbia Committee information and facts were brought out which convinced me that there is absolutely no warrant for this proposed increase in the price of bread to-day. The committee gave special attention to the bread situation, as to the cost of bread and the prices prevailing at that time, and it brought out some very interesting facts.

That hearing showed, for one thing, that the chief of the profiteers in the city of Washington was a man by the name of Corby, engaged in the bread-making business; that he sold about one-half of all the bread baked and consumed by the Washington public. It showed that he had in a very few years become a millionaire. The committee required him to bring his books before it, and the figures are rather interesting. I think you will be interested in them at this time, because of the attempt at this time to hike the price of bread.

They showed that Corby had made net profits in the year 1918 at one of his bakeries—he has two large bakeries—of $294,059, after allowing himself a salary of $25,000. He has another bakery which at the same time made him $19,000 net profit, after allowing him another salary for the same year of $5,000. Including both bakeries and the salary allowed himself, Corby's profits on one year's baking business, the year 1918, amounted to about one-third of a million dollars. You will find all this on page 604 of the very interesting report of these hearings conducted by the District of Columbia Committee.

According to this testimony taken by the committee, Corby's profits have been steadily and rapidly increasing. In 1914, the year before the war, his largest bakery made $44,063 profit. This increased in 1915 to $59,294; in 1916 to $87,370; in 1917 to $142,202; and in 1918 to $294,059.

According to the information which came to our committee, his profits were equally large in 1919. In fact, they were increasing during the first half of 1919.

While we are on this subject of profiteering in Washington, let me say that coming up Pennsylvania Avenue this morning, I noticed a pair of shoes in one of the leading stores marked at $18.50. In this connection, it might be interesting now to know what this same report from the District of Columbia Committee shows as to the profits of a few shoe dealers.

Rich & Sons filed a statement with the committee, and you will find it on page 972 of this report, which showed that their net profits jumped from $2,044 in 1914 to $18,000 in 1917, and then to $64,743 in 1918, with every indication that since then the profits have been fully as large. This net profit of $64,000 in 1918 was made after each member of the firm had taken out a salary of $6,500. The total capital invested at that time was $111,924, according to their statement, on which the net profit in one year was $64,000, and the profits were increasing when the report was made to our committee.

Another shoe firm, William Hahn & Co., made a net profit of $38,819 in 1916, $40,807 in 1917, and $54,954 in 1918.

The report filed by Snyder & Little showed that their net profits jumped from $7,429 in 1916 to $11,773 in 1917, and then to $30,000 in 1918; and in all these cases the prices and profits were increasing during the year 1919, although our investigation, of course, concluded in July of last year.

Profiteering now seems to be rampant all over the country, but I think the price gouger has a little tighter grip on the city of Washington than any other city that I know of. It has become so shameless that the profiteers take advantage even of Mother's Day to hold up the public. Here yesterday they were holding up the people all over this city for 25 cents for a little carnation, selling them even in quantities in most of the leading florists' shops here for $3 a dozen on Mother's Day, an increase of some 400 or 500 per cent, because of the fact that there was an unusual demand for them.

So I say the profiteering spirit seems to be rampant in the Nation's Capitol, and it is no wonder that the people here are complaining. There are thousands of Government clerks here who are trying to support a family on $1,200 a year while necessities of life are going higher. The people have reached the limit, and a demand now of 17 per cent increase in the price of bread, amounting to about $2,000,000 a year that will be exacted from the consuming public of Washington, is unreasonable and in my opinion there is no basis for it.

For that reason, I think the Committee on the District of Columbia ought to be authorized to investigate the latest move on the part of the bakers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CAPPER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator reach the conclusion, from the investigation which he made, that most of the profiteering was by the retailer rather than the wholesaler?

Mr. CAPPER. So far as the city of Washington is concerned, we found there was general profiteering in this city in almost all lines of business.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which he is a member and I am also a member, should take up the question of licensing the various retail as well as wholesale establishments in this District, and have some provision in the ordinance that if they are engaged as monopolies, or charging extortionate prices, a license shall be denied them?

Let me say to the Senator that a committee waited upon me on Friday asking that an ordinance be passed dealing with the question of the hotels. They called attention to the immense dividends made by the Willard and the Raleigh and other hotels in this city, and asked that an ordinance be passed that would fix the prices to be charged by the hotel keepers of the District.

It is very clear that the District has the power to license innkeepers and hotelkeepers; and I think the committee, when they consider the Senator's resolution, should also formulate a law that will attack these profiteering landlords and hotelkeepers and eatinghouse keepers in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAPPER. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the committee considered that phase of the subject carefully; but just about the time the committee concluded its investigation the information came to us that the Department of Justice was going to take hold of the situation here in Washington in a vigorous way, appoint a fair-price organization, and do something to improve conditions. It seems to me, however, that the condition is getting worse instead of better; and especially now, when they are asking an increase of 17 per cent in the price of bread, when the leading baker of the city, to the knowledge of this committee, cleaned up something like a third of a million dollars in one year, I think it is time for Congress to enter protest. For that reason I ask that this resolution have immediate consideration.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, may I ask him if the committee investigated in any manner the quesiton of the profits of the meat dealers?

Mr. CAPPER. The committee did investigate that question and they showed that the profiteering to a very great extent was on the part of the retail dealers.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. May I ask the Senator if he knows whether there is any law on the statute books at the present time, or any ordinance of the city of Washington, which compels full measure and full weight, and whether there is any inspection system providing a penalty against fraud upon the public for underweight and undermeasure?

Mr. CAPPER. I have not any information on that subject.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CAPPER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. A resolution was offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] some time ago about the increase in car fare. My recollection is that it went to the Committee on the District of Columbia. What has been done about that resolution? That shows a greater increase, I think, than 17 per cent.

Mr. CAPPER. It does; and I think that is unwarranted.

Mr. HARRISON. What has been done with that resolution?

Mr. CAPPER. There has been no action taken by the committee, so far as I know.

Mr. HARRISON. I think something should be done, if possible.

Mr. CAPPER. I think so myself.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether the committee found any evidence of any prosecutions for profiteering here in the District of Columbia, either under Federal laws or under the laws of the District?

Mr. CAPPER. No; we had no information of that kind. As a matter of fact, the Department of Justice had done little or nothing here in the city of Washington until this committee took up the subject, but they started in immediately upon a system of prosecution or of regulating the matter in this District. It does not seem to me, however, that they have made much progress.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question. I have been busy in attendance on a committee this morning, and I was therefore unable to be present, and the Senator may have covered the question I am going to ask. If so, I shall not ask him to repeat his answer.

We have in this city a large number of what are called public markets. Has the Senator investigated those markets with reference to their prices?

Mr. CAPPER. The Senator refers to the Center Market?

Mr. REED. Yes; there is the Center Market, and there are other so-called public markets.

Mr. CAPPER. The committee did investigate them. It went into the matter very carefully, and had a number of these dealers before the committee, and the investigation showed that most of them were making unusual and I think excessive profits.

Mr. REED. How are those markets run? Does the Government merely own the building and rent the stalls without any regulation at all, or what is the arrangement?

Mr. CAPPER. The building is owned by a market company, and the stalls are leased by this market company. They are under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; that is, whatever regulation or supervision there is comes from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. I can hardly hear the Senator. The buildings are owned by companies, not by the Government, and these companies rent stalls. Is that the situation?

Mr. CAPPER. That is the situation.

Mr. REED. Nevertheless they are known as public markets?

Mr. CAPPER. They are.

Mr. REED. Does the Government have any officer to supervise the business of these stalls, to see that it is conducted in a fair manner?

Mr. CAPPER. The city of Washington has a market master, who is supposed to be responsible for everything going on at the Center Market.

Mr. REED. Does he undertake in any way to regulate the prices?

Mr. CAPPER. No, sir.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator think that if we are to regulate prices we could well begin with the public markets established under the control of the District?

Mr. CAPPER. The matter of prices in this District seems to be under the direction of the Department of Justice, with an organization selected by the Attorney General and his fair price committee. They are supposed to take notice of all wrongdoing in that direction.

Mr. REED. That applies to the whole District?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes, sir; and to the markets.

Mr. REED. It has been utterly impotent.

Mr. CAPPER. It applies also to the Center Market.

Mr. REED. The question I am asking applies to a different matter, and I can make my question plain perhaps by an illustration. In many cities of the country, for the benefit of the public, and in order to have a place where goods will be sold at moderate prices, there are established public markets, in many instances the municipality itself owning the building and renting the stalls, and a market master is placed in charge, whose business it is to see that the transactions are of a fair character, that the foods which are sold are wholesome, and so forth.

It seems to me that if we are to talk about any regulation of prices in the District of Columbia we ought to begin by the establishment of something that is in fact a public market, where goods are sold in the public market, under public supervision, at a reasonable price. If you go beyond that and go into the private institutions and begin the regulation there in times of peace, I do not know where you are going to stop.

If the principle is sound in the District of Columbia, it must then be sound in every other part of the United States, and if the Government undertakes the regulation of all prices everywhere, we will, of course, have set aside the law of supply and demand and substitute Government control. That is an entirely different proposition from regulating prices in a publicly owned and publicly controlled market.

As I understand the Senator, there is no real regulation of the markets in this city?

Mr. CAPPER. Not so far as the regulation of the prices is concerned; but there is a market master, appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who has authority to see that the market is properly conducted.

Mr. REED. That is, properly conducted along the lines of being clean, decent, and so forth?

Mr. CAPPER. Exactly.

Mr. REED. But no regulation of prices or of profits?

Mr. CAPPER. Not at all.

Mr. REED. Just one more question. Is the Senator prepared to embark upon a policy of the Government fixing the prices of all products, either National or State?

Mr. CAPPER. I think we now have law sufficient to warrant the Department of Justice in proceeding against any man who is exacting an unfair and unreasonable profit, and to that extent we can determine or fix the prices, and insist upon a reasonable price.

Mr. REED. That, of course, is not an answer to my question. I am curious to know whether the Republican Party or the Democratic Party is prepared in this country, in time of peace, to embark upon the policy of the Government regulating prices of all the necessities of life. If so, of course, it will involve the fixing of the price of labor, the fixing of the price of farm products, the fixing of every charge entering into the ultimate price.

While I may be speaking on a very unpopular side of the question, while I know that the people are suffering because of very high prices at the present time, I am not yet prepared to plunge into the sea of either socialism or communism. Those are exactly the waters we will enter when we begin the business, in time of peace, of regulating prices, for you can not regulate the price of one article with any justice unless you regulate the price of the constituent articles entering into it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Just one second. Neither can you get at the constituent elements of the cost unless you take labor, capital, and all the various products, and you can not regulate the price of one article with justice to the producer of that article unless you extend your scheme of regulation to cover all articles. So if we are to embark on this ocean, it will be well to do it after some careful thought. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator if such a policy could be even remotely successful unless we also undertook to regulate production and transportation?

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly you have to embrace everything. If you start with the question of the cost of bread, if you are to regulate the price of bread, you can not do it successfully unless you begin by regulating the price of wheat, the profits of the miller, the cost of transportation, the cost of warehousing, the wages of the baker——

Mr. THOMAS. Right there, Mr. President, let me suggest that there is at present an apt illustration of the truth of the Senator's statement appearing in the morning papers, the announcement being the rise in the price of loaves of bread of 2 cents per loaf, due to the advance of wages to the bakers who threatened to strike the other day and were prevented from doing so by a practical yielding to their demands. In other words, if we consume in the District of Columbia 200,000 loaves of bread per day, the people pay $4,000 a day because of that advance, and any attempted regulation of the price of bread will necessarily have to regulate the price of labor in its production, because otherwise, as is the case, and as is always the case, it is passed right on to the consumer, who pays now an additional price for bread alone in this District of $120,000 a year as a result of the settlement of that strike.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, at the risk of repeating arguments I have made before, I feel like calling attention for just a moment to some fundamentals which we in the Senate must not overlook.

One of those fundamentals is that when you interfere with business you must be very careful lest you stop the expansion of business and lest the effect of your act is not exactly the converse of what you desire. The great fundamental trouble in the world to-day—and it is admitted by every intelligent man—is that there is an immense gap between production and consumption. That was occasioned by a cause so great that it has touched every quarter of the earth. Twenty-five million men were taken from industrial and productive activities and put upon the field of battle for substantially five years, and every man, woman, and child in the United States, to a greater or less extent, employed their energies in producing the materials for the sustaining of the Great War. The result is a shortage of everything, a shortage of railway facilities, a shortage of ships upon the sea, a shortage of machinery in mills, a shortage of labor, and a shortage in everything due to destruction and failure to produce. Until that shortage is made up there will be a keen market, and that market will be aggravated, of course, by all those speculative practices and tendencies which come under such conditions.

Among these shortages there is a shortage of houses. Let us assume that we undertake to remedy the shortage of housing by a regulation of rents, and let us practically apply that experiment, and see how it will work out. There is a shortage of houses, rents mount high, and building costs have also mounted very high. Everything entering into a new house costs approximately twice as much as it did before the war, and even more than that. But there is a shortage of housing. A man desires to build a house and figures at present rents that he can build a great apartment house, which will cost him $2,000,000, which formerly would have cost a million, but that at the present rents he can build the house and pay the $2,000,000 and still make money.

At about the time he is ready to break ground, he is informed by his lawyer that Congress has appointed a man to fix those rents for him. He does not know at what figure that man will fix the rents. What sensible man would build an apartment house under those circumstances and embark his fortune in that venture? What sensible loan company would lend any considerable amount of money with which to build property under those circumstances? The result is that the apartment house is not built. The result is that the dearth of houses continues, and rents will continue to advance unless held down by some arbitrary act of government. But the longer you hold them down, and the more you aggravate the shortage, the worse the result will be in the end.

I grant you that the profiteer, the—I do not like to use the term—the rent hog, and men of that kind ought to be controlled if they can be controlled. But it is a serious question in my mind whether in the end we will not be forced merely to allow the law of supply and demand to take its course, confident of the fact that we will soon reach a point where prices will become so high that they will become prohibitive that consumption will be reduced, that the gap between production and consumption will thereupon be filled, and that the prices will come down by natural causes. If the men and women of the United States could be persuaded not to buy a new suit of clothes or a new dress for six months, not to go through this silly performance of wearing overalls, but to wear their old clothes, there would be a surplus of dress goods and of suitings in the United States at the end of six months and the prices would go down.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator speaks of the operation of the law of supply and demand. The trouble is that the law of supply and demand has been controlled in this country and is no longer permitted to operate by reason of the fact that a certain limited number of individuals have obtained control of the necessaries of life and have repealed, as it were, the law of supply and demand.

Mr. REED. The Senator refers to great trusts and combinations?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. REED. I am glad the Senator spoke of it, because there is no man on the floor of the Senate who has inveighed against them oftener than I have, or who is more wedded to the doctrine that every combination ought to be punished and that every monopoly ought to be dissolved. I hesitate to say a word of criticism of the Supreme Court, but I confess that when I find the Supreme Court of the United States can ratify and confirm the Steel Trust combination and do it upon the ground that it seems to be necessary to let it live, the way I read its opinion, when nearly all trust prosecutions have ceased in the country, I look with a good deal of dismay at that phase of the situation, unless we can get a Congress that will reenact the antitrust acts in such a form that they mean something and force action, unless we can some day get an Attorney General who can look a $100,000,000 combination in the face without fainting. The truth is that the laws of Congress have been nullified by the action of Attorneys General and by the action—I am sorry to say—of courts. I dislike to criticize the courts. I have never done so except upon the rarest occasion.

Mr. President, this morning passed through my hands in the newsprint hearing the indictment filed against the newsprint paper combination, and the pleas of nolo contendere of these great concerns, enormously capitalized, one of them I recall at $45,000,000. They were fined in the aggregate upon pleas of nolo contendere $11,000, and that was done by the consent of the Attorney General of United States. Eleven thousand dollars was not as much to one of those corporations as the smallest marble that a schoolboy ever carried in his store was to him.

Mr. BORAH. Undoubtedly, however, they promised never to do it again.

Mr. REED. Let me tell you what they promised. Then the Attorney General fixed up an agreement with them in advance, by the terms of which he was to file a suit in equity, and when the suit in equity was filed they were to confess judgment, and when the judgment was confessed the decree was to be written that during the war and for a period of three months thereafter they would sell their paper at a price fixed by the Federal Trade Commission, with the right on the part of the company to appeal from the decision of the Federal Trade Commission to the United States Circuit Court of New York. But the decree contained a further clause that they did not have to sell at that price provided they could make and did make contracts with purchasers at another and different price.

The practical working out of it was that although the Federal Trade Commission's price, plus the raise made by the United States court, was at the highest point, 3.7525 cents per pound, every great newspaper in the United States closed contracts with the concerns by which they paid a price that was to be fixed by the company to them and readjusted by the company every three months, with the right on their part to refuse to take the paper if they wanted to, and thus go without any paper.

So acute was the situation and in such danger did the great newspapers of the country find themselves that they contracted for 110 per cent of the product of the greatest of these mills—that is, for 10 per cent more than it could produce, and at prices ranging as high as 5 cents a pound, while the public price fixed was 3.7525 cents. In other words, the effect of the decree was absolutely nullified, and the newspapers were left just where they were before the decree was entered.

I desire to say nothing harsh of institutions engaged in business, but a trust act which provides the pains and penalties of the penitentiary, and which is reduced to a mere farce by a fine of $11,000 on an institution of that kind, ceases to be a law, because it has been nullified by the governmental authorities themselves. As long as we have that kind of enforcement of law against the great offenders of this country, and a keen and shrewd enforcement of the law against the individual who is poor and helpless, we will have discontent in the country and disgust with the Government.

It is time these performances were stopped. They were begun by Wickersham. They have been continued under Palmer and under his predecessor, Mr. Gregory. The time for the executive department of the Government to cease disregarding the statutes of the land has come. The time to carry out the laws of the land according to their letter and their spirit has arrived. Either that will be done, or the country will be pushed into the dangerous experiment of governmental regulation of everything. There must either be an open market for the law of supply and demand to operate or there will be a governmental control, and I sincerely hope we will never be driven to the last alternative.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before the resolution is agreed to, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment.

Bread is made from flour, and flour is made from wheat and other cereals. Of course, it will be at once claimed that the producer is profiteering. To show that this is not the case, I wish to have read at the desk a letter from Mr. Sam W. Teagarden, of Great Falls, Mont., a short letter addressed to me, and then a letter offering some criticism of Mr. Hoover, who seems to be able to control the prices of wheat to the farmer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

GREAT FALLS, MONT., April 27, 1920.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Inasmuch as various eulogists of former Food Administrator Herbert A. Hoover have read into the permanent records of the Congress, I ask the honorable Senate, through you, to allow to go into the same Record a differing estimate upon the record of Mr. Hoover as Food Administrator.

Not only am I a native-born American, but my great grandparents on both sides in the family line were American born. I am also a farmer, and have for many years been active in farm-organization work. I believe that millions of American farm men and women will indorse the discussion for which I request a place in the Record.

Sincerely, yours, SAM W. TEAGARDEN.

GREAT FALLS, MONT., April 12, 1920.

Because during a five months' stay in Washington while the Gore amendment to increase the wheat price was pending, and to assist in the passage of which I was sent by the Congress of Montana Farmers' Organizations, I made a careful study of Hoover's conduct as Food Administrator, which study I also maintained until the close of his administration. I do not hesitate to say that his nomination for President, by whatsoever party, would be deeply resented in the homes of the millions of farm men and women of the Nation, whom he grossly betrayed to the whole brood of profiteers included in the Packers' Trust, the Milling Trust, the Milk Condensery Trust, and the prepared-food combines.

More than that, Hoover's nomination by the Republican Party—the party whose birth was in the farmer States and whose lease of power was strongest and most lasting when it commanded the vote of the farmers as a class—would be an unforgivable outrage and a tragedy to the party from which it might well take years to recover.

The day Hoover was named as Food Administrator the price of No. 1 northern wheat on the Chicago market was $3.05. He at once inaugurated a sustained campaign of misrepresentation to break down the high price of wheat. Through the press he conducted the greatest "bear" raid on wheat ever carried on in the history of the Nation; indeed, his campaign exceeded in effectiveness in reducing the wheat price the greatest of all the bear raids ever carried out by grain gamblers of the great exchanges of the country.

As a result, the final work of the commission appointed to fix a minimum price of wheat resulted in 85 cents per bushel under the price at the time of Hoover's appointment. And at that the price fixed by the commission was 30 cents per bushel higher than the price Hoover sought to force the commission to make.

To heighten his offensive against the wheat farmer, Hoover foisted upon President Wilson a set of differential prices at the various terminal markets that was designed solely to put, and did so put, all the big mills of the country on an even basis of profit making, and in utter and brutally unfair disregard of the economic rights of the wheat farmers. Our Government and the allied Governments bought flour on the basis of the wheat price fixed for New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, the flour to be delivered at those terminals. Interior mills paid so much less per bushel for wheat that they could pay the freight on the flour to those eastern terminals and still make a per barrel profit identical with those eastern mills. That freight was in actual effect paid by the farmers who grew the wheat for the interior mills.

The wheat farmers protested to Hoover and to the President, but in vain.

This economic outrage was made possible because Hoover, in defiance of the purpose of the Congress, so unlawfully manipulated his powers as to make the minimum wheat price also the maximum price.

The farmers lost profits in tens of millions of dollars. The American millers and the treasuries of England, France, Italy, and Belgium profited by the amounts the wheat farmers of this country lost.

Again, Hoover sent two of the country's big men—Gifford Pinchot and Ed. C. Lassater, of the American Live Stock Association—out to the corn-belt States to urge the farmers to put more fat on their hogs. The farmers responded, but when the fat hogs came on the packers' markets they were promptly penalized 25 cents per hundred pounds because they were overfat. Pinchot and Lassater protested to Hoover in person, as did representatives of the hog producers. Lassater presented his written resignation to Hoover in person, saying in that document: "I do not intend to be used by you to rob the hog-growing farmers in the interest of the Packers' Trust." Pinchot also resigned.

But Hoover sustained the packers. And the packers in consequence gained the millions of dollars the farmers lost in the crooked transaction.

And, more, Hoover allowed the packers a profit of 9 per cent on meat products and 15 per cent on by-products, based on all the money they had in the business and all they borrowed from time to time. The Federal Trade Commission protested this gross favoritism, but in vain, as were a storm of other protests. To further fatten packer profits, Hoover allowed them to charge as manufacturing costs all interest on borrowed money above 5 per cent. The packers borrowed from themselves as bankers in huge sums at 6½ and 7 per cent and charged the difference up to the Government and the public as "costs."

Is it a matter of wonder that J. Ogden Armour, from his seat of power as a member of the National Council of Defense, was for Hoover's appointment as Food Administrator and sustained Hoover during the war with all the power of the packers—financial, political, and otherwise?

Hoover also handed the milk producers of the country a jolt. He put the milk condensaries under license and cunningly arranged them into districts. He fixed no maximum price for condensed milk to the Government or the consumers, but he put the milk-producing farmers at the mercy of the condensers' combine by requiring each of them to certify as follows under oath:

> This condensary hereby certifies that it has not during the preceding week paid a higher price for milk than any other condensary in its district.

With this air-tight monopoly on the throats of the milk producers, and no maximum on the condensaries' products, these concerns exported during the year 1918 the huge sum of $82,000,000 worth. They sold to the American public as much more.

Some fat thing, that, for the milk condensaries combine! Like the hog growers with the packers, the trust profited by the tens of millions filched by Hoover's connivance from the farmers.

By the way, and lest I omit reference to it, Hoover pulled another stunt aimed at the hog growers. He sent E. Dana Durand out to Chicago, to raid the corn and hog price. Durand gave out interviews to the Chicago papers and to the Associated Press, predicting a return to $1 corn and $10 hogs. The uproar that went up from the farmers and the agricultural press compelled Hoover to lay down. But his intentions were good to break down the price of hogs for the benefit of the treasuries of the foreign Governments that had sent him over here and had wished him onto the American people by the most extensive and cunningly concealed propaganda ever carried on in America.

Then, there was the food-substitutes graft. Hoover put the dealers in these substitutes under license and "regulated" their profits; but the mills and manufacturers were omitted from the regulations, and the manufacturers' prices for substitutes had only the sky as the limit. These profiteers literally gorged themselves with extortionate profits.

But the crowning infamy of Hoover's schemes to exploit the American farmers in the interests of his real patrons—the allied Governments—comes from the part he has played behind the scenes of the maladministration of the wheat administrator, Julius Barnes, promoted to that high place from his office in Duluth, where he was king of the grain gamblers.

From his place in the confidence of President Wilson, at Paris, Hoover manipulated the appointment of Barnes as soon as Congress had passed the bill appropriating a billion dollars to make good the Nation's previous guaranty of a minimum price for the 1919 wheat crop.

Immediately upon his appointment, Barnes issued a proclamation suspending the export of wheat and wheat flour to all counties except those of our allies in the war. The rest of the whole world, hungry for wheat and flour, was shut out of the American market.

At the time of the Barnes-Hoover proclamation the Chicago wheat market was 60 cents per bushel over the Government's guaranteed minimum. Only our allies could purchase wheat or wheat flour. The allied Governments were represented in this country by a single buying agency, the Wheat Export Co., of New York. As no one could buy for export save Barnes and this foreign-owned price-depressing monopoly, down crashed the wheat price. One other step was necessary to make effective this graft for the Wheat Export Co.—that there should be no competition from American mills, bakeries, or grain buyers. Competitive buying would have raised wheat prices above the Government's guaranteed minimums.

These three classes were called into conference in the New York office of Wheat Administrator Barnes. There an understanding was had by which wheat, as wheat, was to be purchased only at the Government guaranteed minimums on the various terminal markets. But the Barnes agreement permitted all three of these classes to take their usual and liberal profits of the war period, so they were content. And this strangle hold of the Wheat Export Co. on the American wheat price was continued for eight months, during which period American wheat farmers were forced to market 700,000,000 bushels of wheat, on an unlawfully and fraudulently depressed market.

Thus was the object of the American Congress set at naught; the world's competitive bidding rendered impossible for what was shown by the United States Department of Agriculture to be the greatest surplus wheat crop ever grown on American farms, and allied Governments permitted to buy American-grown wheat at prices greatly under the guaranties these same Governments had given their own wheat farmers.

The American wheat farmers were thus mulcted in tens of millions in the forcibly reduced export price of wheat, and in addition were mulcted in even more huge sums by the unlawful choking down of the prices on American markets.

Can anybody marvel, then, at the statement of Senator GRONNA in the United States Senate that the grossly unfair maladministration of Hoover and Barnes had cost the American wheat farmers since the United States entered the war the staggering total of $2,000,000,000?

Upon occasion and upon occasion while the country of his nativity was at war for the saving of western civilization Hoover perpetrated wrongs like those I have recited. Columns might be written, all in truth, of Hoover's cold and calculated betrayal of his country's farm men and women in the interests of alien Governments, and whose newspapers are now going as far as they dare in joining the clamor of the profiteering propaganda here to put into the Presidency the very king of graft promoters.

And the Republican newspapers and Republican leaders—some of them—are seeking to foist this unspeakable expatriate Hoover upon the Republican Party—the party in all its history to which the American farmer has given his loyalty and devotion.

Would it not be an outrage infinite upon American farm men and women? Would it not be a real tragedy for the Republican Party?

SAM W. TEAGARDEN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER].

The resolution was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 1 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.). The morning business is closed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, on Saturday last I submitted the conference report on the civil service retirement bill, and I gave notice at that time that I would move to proceed to the consideration of the report to-day; but this morning the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made earnest request that the consideration of the report go over until to-morrow. The Senator from Alabama is not now in the Chamber, and I think he may have understood that I agreed that the report should go over. Knowing that the request that it go over was made in entire good faith and without any desire to delay the consideration of the report, but in order that Senators might have a little further time for its consideration, I agree that it may go over until to-morrow, and I give notice that immediately after the close of the morning business to-morrow I shall move to take up the conference report for consideration.

RECORDS OF RECLASSIFICATION COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I have no objection to taking up the joint resolution, provided that the amendment on page 2, beginning in line 7 down to and including line 12, be disagreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. So far as I am personally concerned, I am in favor of the amendment reported by the committee, but in order to expedite the matter I will say to the Senator that personally I shall not ask the Senate to adopt the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be satisfactory; but I merely want to say, Mr. President, that I hope Congress never will vote for any legislation authorizing the detail of employees from one department of the Government to another. It is wrong in principle and should never be practiced.

In the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill this question came up before the Appropriations Committee, and when we inquired into the question we found that the practice had been, not merely in one of the departments of the Government but in most of them, that employees, paid from lump-sum appropriations salaries that no appropriation bill would ever carry and that Congress never would agree to, were being detailed from one department to another department to do the same identical work for which men paid in that department under the statutory roll received hardly half what was being paid under the lump-sum appropriation. It is for that reason, and that only, that I object to this amendment; and I am very glad the Senator from New Mexico has consented that it shall be rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I will state, however, in justification of the committee's action in proposing this amendment, that the situation with regard to this matter is somewhat peculiar. During the work of the Reclassification Commission a number of people were detailed from the various departments to aid the committee in that work. These detailed employees have become experts in this matter, and I am confident that they could carry on this work very much better than anyone else could do it. I had nothing to do, however, with the proposing of the amendment. It was a matter which was acted upon by the committee to which the resolution was referred, and the amendment was thought justified by that committee. I think myself that under general conditions the Senator from Utah is right in his position, but these people are especially fitted to perform this duty. However, under the circumstances I shall not insist upon the amendment, and I ask that the joint resolution may be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment with an amendment, and it was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the United States Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized and directed, upon request of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, to assume custody of the records and reports of the said joint commission, which was created by section 9 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1919, and to maintain and keep current such records pending the consideration by Congress of the final report and recommendations submitted to it by the said joint commission, under the system established by said joint commission for reporting and recording changes in the personnel and the number and nature of positions in the municipal government, the various executive departments, and other governmental establishments in the District of Columbia, except the navy yard and the Postal Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the committee.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 7, after the words "Postal Service," the committee proposes to insert:

Provided, That the heads of the various governmental services and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized, as provided in the original act, to detail officers and employees not exceeding 20, and without additional expense for clerical services, to carry out the purposes of this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CALLING THE ROLL.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Gronna	McNary	Spencer
Brandegee	Hale	Norris	Sterling
Capper	Harris	Nugent	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Henderson	Page	Thomas
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Phipps	Townsend
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Trammell
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Sheppard	Walsh, Mont.
France	Kenyon	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Smith, S. C.
Gay	Lodge	Smoot

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] are absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names, not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Reading Clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FERNALD, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. MOSES, Mr. NELSON, Mr. PHELAN, Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. KING, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. COMER, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. ROBINSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GLASS] on important public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar under the rule requiring a consideration of the calendar on Monday be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he has the permission of the steering committee to bring up this bill, or if he has it arranged in any way that this bill shall be brought up now?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There has been no arrangement that it shall be brought up now. I spoke to some of the different Senators the other day about when they wanted to bring up the shipping bill.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator when it was reported from the committee?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It was reported on May 4.

Mr. KENYON. About a week ago?

Mr. JONES of Washington. About a week ago.

Mr. KENYON. The reason why I ask these questions is that I am curious to know how a bill reported only a week ago can be placed on any assignment by a steering committee, when bills that have been reported out of committees months ago, such as the bill for the regulation of the packers, can secure no consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether it has been done by a steering committee or any body of that kind. I was asked to bring it up to-day.

Mr. KENYON. I am not opposing the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I understood from the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] that this bill was to be brought up to-day, because I had a consultation with him about an appropriation bill, and he said that unless there should be some appropriation bill to be considered he expected that this bill would be brought up this morning.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know anything about that.

Mr. KENYON. Did the Senator from Wyoming say that it had been arranged?

Mr. WARREN. I did not say that I knew it had been arranged. I said that I understood from the Senator from North Dakota, chairman of the steering committee, who talked to me about an appropriation bill, that the shipping bill was to come in, though not to displace the appropriation bill; that it was on the urgent list because in many ways it affected appropriations and financial matters.

Mr. KENYON. I am not protesting against the consideration of this bill, but I am suggesting that other bills, which have been here for months, notably the "packers bill," can receive no place for consideration, while a bill of this character can be brought up. I want to say further that, despite the fact that no place is given the "packers bill" by the steering committee, an effort will be made to take it up at every convenient time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being taken up, and in fact I thoroughly appreciate its great importance, and hope that it will be taken up, but I wanted to arrange with the chairman of the committee that certain amendments would be passed over in the consideration of the bill, so that I might have an opportunity to discuss them at a later date. Of course, if they should be agreed to at this time it would make it rather difficult to discuss them at a later date without a reconsideration. There are four or five sections of the bill that I wish to discuss before the bill is finally passed, and I simply wanted to make that arrangement. I understand that other Senators have a similar view.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think there will be any trouble about that. I certainly will give my consent, as far as I am concerned, to pass over any amendment which any Senator desires to have passed over until we get through with the bill.

Mr. EDGE. That was my thought. I do not want to delay the bill for one moment. I do not think there is any more important legislation pending than that designed to settle the policy for the future of the merchant marine; but I would like to have an opportunity of discussing some of the sections and I want to have them passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

NEW YORK STATE BARGE CANAL.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in charge of the bill which has just been called up. I purpose asking unanimous consent to call up at this moment a joint resolution which is on the calendar, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) to exempt the New York State Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of H. R. 10453. Although not of tremendous importance to the country at large, it is of considerable importance to the State which I, in part, represent. It is a joint resolution introduced by me and reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it creates no discussion, I shall have no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am positive there will be no discussion of it.

Mr. KENYON. I would like to ask the Senator from New York, who is chairman of the subcommittee of the steering committee, as to what arrangements have been made by the steering committee for the balance of the bills for this session.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not aware of any arrangement of a definite character that has been made.

Mr. KENYON. Have no bills been assigned for consideration by the Senate?

Mr. WADSWORTH. To my knowledge there has been no definite assignment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not think I have any objection, but the joint resolution has not been read in full, and I would like to have the Senator from New York make a short statement as to its purport.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Section 201 of H. R. 10453 is that section of the recently enacted railway legislation which confided to the War Department the management of inland water transportation. It was intended originally to cover only the operation of barges upon the Mississippi and the Warrior Rivers, but inadvertently the language was so drawn as to include the canals. It so happened that during the recent war the Legislature of New York and the canal board of New York placed at the disposal of the Federal Government the New York State Barge Canal, and the Government proceeded to operate barges upon that canal as a war measure. Inadvertently, as I said a moment ago, that operation is continued under the railway legislation passed a few weeks ago.

The people of the State of New York built these canals, paid for them themselves, have taxed themselves for them, and so long as the Government operates barges upon the canal owned and built by the people of the State of New York no citizens of that State will go into the barge canal-business. At the earnest request of the governor, the legislature, the canal board, and the superintendent of public works, who has charge of the canal in New York, a hearing was held before the Interstate Commerce Committee, presided over by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and this Senate joint resolution was reported. Its effect is to remove from the New York State barge canal system the Government management and operation of barges and to direct the sale of the barges by the Secretary of War.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no desire in the world to interfere with the legislation which the Senator desires in reference to his own State, but a part of the railway legislation relates to transportation on the Warrior and Mississippi Rivers, in which I am very much interested, and which I would not like to have disturbed. Therefore I would like to have the joint resolution read.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is very brief and quite explicit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The READING CLERK. The Committee on Interstate Commerce report to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That at the end of 30 days after the passage of this resolution the authority conferred upon the Secretary of War under section 201 of the transportation act, 1920, to operate for commercial purposes boats, barges, tugs, or other transportation facilities upon the New York State Barge Canal shall cease, and thereafter there shall be no such operation by the Secretary of War or any other agency of the United States. The Secretary of War shall within said 30 days, or as soon thereafter as practicable, dispose of all boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities purchased or constructed for use upon the said canal, giving to proposed purchasers who intend to use the same upon the said canal the first opportunity to buy, and, pending final disposition, the Secretary of War may lease the same for such use. If the Secretary of War and any such proposed purchaser are unable to agree with respect to price and the proposed purchaser is willing to fix a price by arbitration, the Secretary of War shall select one arbitrator, the proposed purchaser one arbitrator, and the two thus chosen shall select a third. The award may be made by a majority of the arbitrators and when made shall be final.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as the joint resolution relates entirely to the affairs of the State of New York, I have no objection. I just desired to have it read so that I might be sure how far it went.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORK OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to interrupt the proceedings for just a moment, as I am obliged to leave the Chamber. I wish to make one or two statements in connection with the work of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

As is generally known by Members of the Senate, each member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is appointed a subcommittee, who has charge of the nominations from certain designated States which have been assigned to him. Out of courtesy, that committeeman presents the nominations from any State to the two Senators from that State, with the idea of getting their approval, and if they have objections to the confirmation, which are based on complaints or reasons which the committee should consider, it is the duty of the subcommitteeman then to present those complaints to the whole committee. Otherwise, the subcommitteeman, if he has the approval of the two Senators from the State and there are no complaints filed with the committee, reports them directly to the Senate in executive session and they are acted upon without further consideration by the committee.

A condition prevails at the present time which is to say the least most annoying. Nominations have been submitted by the subcommitteemen to the various Senators from the States and many of them have been holding these nominations since last January without any complaint being made to the subcommitteeman or to the committee. When we ask for them they simply say they are not yet ready to report or to sign.

I make this statement now so that all Senators may understand that the committee will not withhold action upon these nominations unless the Senators within a reasonable time submit their objections, founded upon some complaint which they are ready to prosecute so that we can proceed in an orderly manner with the nominations. The committee are constantly besieged by representatives of appointees for a reason why the nominations have not been acted upon. The Post Office Department call us up and want to know why the nominations are not confirmed, and we have no reason to give except that Senators are holding the nominations.

So, Mr. President, I desire to give notice—and I should like to have all the Members of the Senate present to hear it, but they probably will read in the RECORD what I say—that hereafter, within a reasonable time, these names will be reported to the Senate, and Senators will then act at their own pleasure in executive session as to whether or not the nominations shall be confirmed. I am very willing, indeed, to extend every possible courtesy to every Senator; to listen to what he may have to say with reference to nominations, but where we are not even approached in reference to the matter but the names are held for months without consideration—where that is done—it is beyond reason; and I propose to act upon such nominations.

There is another matter, Mr. President, to which I desire to advert. I suppose that every Senator is receiving a large amount of correspondence relative to the report of the Joint Commission on the Readjustment of Salaries of Postal Employees. That commission has been at work some 17 or 18 months, or, at least, it has been that length of time since it was appointed. It is confronted with a much larger task than was anticipated when the joint commission was created. Very many events have happened, circumstances beyond the control of the committee itself, which have necessarily delayed action; but the commission has been industrious, and it is now busily engaged in completing its work. It meets daily; it has a very large amount of work already completed. Necessarily all branches of the work are more or less correlated and interrelated, and until we can get a complete report a bill can not be framed and introduced and urged for passage. Nobody realizes more fully than do I the desperate situation in which the Postal Service is to-day, so far as its employees are concerned. People are leaving the service very rapidly. To-day I received in one mail 396 letters from different parts of the country, from business organizations, advising me as to the conditions of the Postal Service in various localities, and asking that action be taken.

I make this statement now, Mr. President, in order that Senators and the country may know that the joint commission is about ready to report. It would be folly, it seems to me, for that commission to make a report unless it made a complete report, for the question involved must be settled rightly. It is of more consequence that it be settled in that way than it is that immediate relief be granted, which will be only temporary and, possibly, a makeshift at that.

Mr. President, I desire to make another statement upon my own responsibility which, however, I think is approved by most of the Senators with whom I have spoken, that whatever action Congress may take in reference to the increase and readjustments of the salaries of postal employees will date necessarily as of July 1. It is not thought we could pass any legislation that would affect existing appropriations, but that it should take effect as of July 1.

If we fail to secure the passage of a measure of relief based upon the scientific report of the joint commission by the end of this session or by the time we take a recess—if we do take a recess—I have no doubt that whatever action we take will date back to July 1. Certainly that is the date when it should take effect, because we are to-day holding in the service thousands of men who are relying upon the action of the Senate and of the House of Representatives to grant the relief which is absolutely necessary to the existence of very many of them.

So, Mr. President, the commission is industriously at work and is about completing the business which was assigned to it, a very great and complicated business and of the greatest importance. As soon as that report is made, I propose to call the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads together for the purpose of considering a measure of relief; and, I repeat, whether or not that action is taken at this session or before we take a recess, the benefits, in my judgment, should, and I hope will, date as of July 1.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in what the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], has said about the report of the joint commission. I happen to be one of the members of that commission, and I will say that that commission has made great progress in its deliberations recently, and I see no reason why we shall not have a report ready within a week; I see no reason why we should not get early action, and, as it seems to me, before the recess, for the reason that I do not believe there are going to be any differences between the members of the commission themselves. If we reach a unanimous report, as now seems to be most likely, I feel very sure that both branches of Congress will be glad to accept the views of the commission and enact them into law immediately. I have never seen any 10 men work better together than have the 10 members of this commission. I believe their conclusions will be recognized, certainly in the main, as fair and just.

The salaries of the employees of the Post Office Department need readjustment and in many cases need substantial increases. I feel no doubt that the report will be satisfactory to the two Houses of Congress, to the employees themselves, and to the country; and will commend itself as a fair and just measure. I see no reason why it may not be adopted at the present session of Congress before we recess. I shall certainly use every effort of which I am capable to see that the subject is brought up at the present session.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I desire to address a question to the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I desire to ask him if my understanding is correct that the intent of the commission, so far as he has been able to ascertain, is that whatever changes are made in salaries of postal employees shall take effect as of July 1, the beginning of the next fiscal year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have assumed that that course would be followed.

Mr. GAY. Mr. President, as a member of the joint commission, I can say that the commission has had that idea in mind in their deliberations. They began some time ago to take testimony; they have gone around the country; they have visited the great postal centers and they have taken testimony here. They are now about to complete their report; it may be possible that their report will reach the Senate this week, and legislation may be enacted in reference to the matter before the end of the fiscal year. However, in the event that it should go beyond that time, the commission will recommend that the changes which they propose shall take effect as of July 1.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. So that whatever increases there are will begin with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1920, and be prospective rather than retroactive?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, that is the idea of the commission. I wish to say, further, that I am not a member of the joint commission. The Senate will probably understand the circumstances which prevented my going on the commission at the time it was appointed; but I have been in constant touch with the commission, and I know that what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] and other Senators have stated is correct, that the commission is not shirking any duty but that it is trying to handle successfully and efficiently the most difficult problem which has been intrusted to it.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Commerce Committee with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it may be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be considered first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, after line 2, to insert:

That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best-equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine, and, in so far as may not be inconsistent with the express provisions of this act, the United States Shipping Board shall, in the disposition of vessels and shipping property as hereinafter provided, in the making of rules and regulations, and in the administration of the shipping laws, keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 12, after the word "hereinafter," to insert "in this section," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 2. (a) That the following acts and parts of acts are hereby repealed, subject to the limitations and exceptions hereinafter, in this section, provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 12, to insert:

(5) Sections 5, 7, and 8, shipping act, 1916.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill why so many existing statutes are proposed to be repealed by the act?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The various statutes referred to here are the various emergency acts passed during the war, under which the appropriations were made, and under which the ships were built.

Mr. THOMAS. They were for emergency purposes only?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. The pending amendment is to repeal sections 5, 7, and 8 of the shipping act of 1916. All those provisions are covered by the terms of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. My inquiry, of course, went to the whole scheme of repeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, after the word "or," to strike out "part" and insert "parts"; and in line 23, before the word "shall," to strike out "part" and insert "parts," so as to make the clause read:

(2) All rights, interests, or remedies accruing or to accrue as a result of any such contract or agreement or of any action taken in pursuance of any such act or parts of acts shall be in all respects as valid, and may be exercised and enforced in like manner, subject to the provisions of subdivision (c) of this section, as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 4, after the word "such," to strike out "act" and insert "acts"; in the same line, after the word "or," to strike out "part" and insert "parts"; in line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "act which" and insert "acts, but such acts or parts of acts"; in line 7, before the word "penalty," to strike out "such" and insert "the"; and in the same line, after the word "penalty," to insert "therein provided for the violation thereof," so as to make the clause read:

(3) The repeal shall not have the effect of extinguishing any penalty incurred under such acts or parts of acts, but such acts or parts of acts shall remain in force for the purpose of sustaining a prosecution for the enforcement of the penalty therein provided for the violation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 8, to insert:

(4) The board shall have full power and authority to complete or conclude any construction work begun in accordance with the provisions of such acts or parts of acts if, in the opinion of the board, the completion or conclusion thereof is for the best interests of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 18, after the word "or," to strike out "part" and insert "parts"; in the same line, after the word "of," to strike out "act" and insert "acts"; and in line 21, after the word "compensation," to insert "Provided, That any person dissatisfied with any decision of the board shall have the same right to sue the United States as he would have had if the decision had been made by the President of the United States under the acts hereby repealed," so as to make the clause read:

(c) As soon as practicable after the passage of this act the board shall adjust, settle, and liquidate all matters arising out of or incident to the exercise by or through the President of any of the powers or duties conferred or imposed upon the President by any such act or parts of acts; and for this purpose the board, instead of the President, shall have and exercise any of such powers and duties relating to the determination and payment of just compensation: Provided, That any person dissatisfied with any decision of the board shall have the same right to sue the United States as he would have had if the decision had been made by the President of the United States under the acts hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, because of the importance of the bill which has just been taken up I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington how long he expects the merchant-marine bill will occupy the attention of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If we can just keep going on with it we can get through in a day or two.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator is of the opinion that it will take perhaps two days?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Really I have not heard of any opposition to the measure or of anyone who desires to discuss it, except that there are what might be considered minor amendments. It is barely possible, but I hardly think we can get it through to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wanted to ascertain, so as to gauge my own time by it, as I have an important committee hearing to attend.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that there are some provisions which I shall ask to have passed over on account of the absence to-day of Senators who will be here to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator who has charge of the dye bill, which constitutes the unfinished business, if he intends to ask to have it called up before the merchant marine bill is completed?

Mr. CURTIS. It was not the intention to call it up again to-day, and to-morrow it will not be called up because of the peace resolution, which is likely to come up.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator from Kansas if it is the intention to postpone action on the dye bill and the merchant marine bill pending action on the peace resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. I am in charge of the dye bill only temporarily. I do not know what course will be pursued by the Senator in charge of the bill when he returns. I am merely in charge of it during the absence of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. MOSES. I suggest that it might as well go to the calendar.

Mr. CURTIS. The bill is already on the calendar.

Mr. MOSES. But it is on the calendar as the unfinished business.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes. I ask that it may hold its place on the calendar as the unfinished business. I promise that it will not be taken up to-day, and I think it will not be taken up to-morrow because of the peace resolution coming up, and it will not be called up while the peace resolution is pending. If I have charge of the dye measure, it will not come up until after the merchant marine bill is disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator, Is it the intention to have the peace resolution taken up and displace the dye bill as the unfinished business?

Mr. CURTIS. It may and it may not be. There will be a request made at 2 o'clock to-morrow to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business. Of course, if that is objected to, I judge that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will move to take up the peace resolution, which, of course, would displace the unfinished business if carried.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not the intention to take up the peace resolution before 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know about that. I have not asked the Senator from Massachusetts, but I am just advised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] that he thinks it will be called up after the morning business to-morrow.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it the intention to keep it continuously before the Senate until disposed of?

Mr. CURTIS. That is my understanding.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will it be laid aside and be taken up from time to time as speeches are ready?

Mr. CURTIS. My understanding is that it is going to be kept before the Senate until disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To the exclusion of other business?

Mr. CURTIS. That is my understanding.

Mr. POMERENE. Does this colloquy, which I have not been able to hear, have reference to the peace resolution?

Mr. CURTIS. A part of it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have an engagement of some considerable standing which is going to take me out of the city on Wednesday; I can not be back here until Thursday. I certainly hope that no attempt will be made to dispose of it on Wednesday.

Mr. CURTIS. I, of course, have nothing to do with the peace resolution; that is, I am not on the committee nor have I charge of it. I am advised, however, that there are several speeches to be made on the resolution—two or three upon this side and three or four upon the other side. How long those speeches will take no one can tell. It was thought that the peace resolution, if taken up to-day, would be ready for a vote probably about Wednesday. If it is taken up to-morrow, I do not know whether it will reach a vote on Wednesday or Thursday. I have been told that there are several speeches to be made upon the resolution, but I have no positive information upon that point.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I am about as diligent in attendance upon the sessions of the Senate as any Member of it. I made this engagement some weeks ago, and I can not with propriety forego it. Meanwhile if the steering committee sees fit to take up a matter of this very great importance, I do not think it should be pressed for immediate passage. I have not any desire whatever to avoid or evade a vote upon the resolution, but it does seem to me that a little consideration should be given me.

Mr. CURTIS. I am satisfied that the Senator from Massachusetts will give consideration to the Senator from Ohio; but the Senator realizes that I, not being on the committee and not having charge of the measure, of course, have no right to say what will be done. I am simply giving the Senator the information which has come to me.

Mr. POMERENE. I have observed that the resolution was not called up to-day, because it was the desire that certain other Senators might return, so that they could be here Tuesday or Wednesday. I am not of the class who were had in mind at that time, but I am speaking of the predicament in which I find myself, and I have no hesitancy in saying that I believe it is due me that a vote shall not be had on Wednesday.

Mr. CURTIS. I am informed that the Senator from Massachusetts is on his way here, and I suggest that the Senator from Ohio take up the matter with him after the Senate goes on with the pending measure.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not object to-day to the temporary displacement of the regular order of business, but I shall reserve the right to do so when the request is renewed to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, and, without objection, the consideration of the shipping bill will be proceeded with.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, at the top of page 5, to insert:

SEC. 3. That section 3 of the "shipping act, 1916," is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That a board is hereby created, to be known as the United States Shipping Board, and hereinafter referred to as the board. The board shall be composed of seven commissioners, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and the President shall designate the member to act as chairman of the board, and the board may elect one of its members as vice chairman. Such commissioners shall be appointed as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and shall continue in office two for a term of one year and the remaining five for terms of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from the date of their appointment, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he succeeds. The commissioners shall be appointed with due regard to their fitness for the efficient discharge of the duties imposed on them by this act, and two shall be appointed from the States touching the Pacific Ocean, two from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean, one from the States touching the Gulf of Mexico, one from the States touching the Great Lakes, and one from the interior, but not more than one shall be appointed from the same State. A vacancy in the board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. No commissioner shall take any part in the consideration or decision of any claim or particular controversy in which he has a pecuniary interest. Each commissioner shall devote his time to the duties of his office, and shall not be in the employ of or hold any official relation to any common carrier or other person subject to this act, nor while holding such office acquire any stock or bonds thereof or become pecuniarily interested in any such carrier. The duties of the board may be so divided that under its supervision the directorship of various activities may be assigned to one or more commissioners. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the board shall not impair the right of the remaining members of the board to exercise all its powers, and four members shall constitute a quorum. The board shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed. The board may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business. Each member of the board shall receive a salary of $12,000 per annum. The board may employ, within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress, such attorneys as it finds necessary for proper legal service to the board in the conduct of its work, or for proper representation of the public interests in investigations made by it or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the board's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the board in any case in court or other tribunal, any provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. THOMAS. I assume that this section, if enacted into law, will displace the present Shipping Board?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is my understanding.

Mr. THOMAS. Is there a provision by which the present board shall hold until the new board is appointed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is not; but I think it might be wise to have a provision of that sort.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest to the Senator that otherwise there might be a hiatus, which would prove inconvenient to the administration of the board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is a good suggestion. I will offer an amendment later with reference to that matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to state that the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] may desire to offer an amendment to this particular section as amended; and if so, I shall then ask to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, referring to the bill under discussion and to section 3, which has just been acted upon, I am not going to offer an amendment to the section, but I wish to go on record very briefly, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, having given considerable consideration to the entire measure in its formation, as opposing the provision of that section creating a board of seven members. Personally I feel that the merchant-marine interests, so far as the Government is responsible for the continuation of their administration, would be better administered by one commissioner. However, I would have been glad to have seen a compromise retaining the same number of commissioners we now have, namely, five. I really see no use for seven commissioners at $12,000 per year to administer the affairs of the merchant marine. I appreciate that the various sections of the country are covered under the details of the section, so that commissioners must come from the Pacific coast, the Atlantic coast, the Gulf coast, and the interior; but personally I oppose the general policy of large boards to administer business details.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I desire to take the occasion to express the greatest appreciation for the hard and earnest work of the committee, and particularly of the chairman of the committee, in evolving what in a general way I believe to be a splendid plan; but I am not in sympathy with the general policy of control and administration proposed by the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 7, line 6, to change the number of the section from "2" to "4"; in the same line, before the word "vessels," to strike out "merchant"; in line 10, after the word "acts," strike out "and" and insert "or"; in line 11, after the word "section," to strike out "1" and insert "2"; in line 20, before the word "required," to insert "in the opinion of the President"; in the same line, after the word "required," to strike out "in the military and naval" and insert "by any other branch of the Government"; and in line 22, before the word "transferred," to strike out "shall be" and insert "are hereby," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That all vessels and other property or interests of whatsoever kind, including vessels or property in course of construction or contracted for, acquired by the President through any agencies whatsoever in pursuance of authority conferred by the acts or parts of acts repealed by section 2 of this act, or in pursuance of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of any vessel within its jurisdiction, which at the time of coming therein was owned in whole or in part by any corporation, citizen, or subject of any nation with which the United States may be at war, or was under register of any such nation, and for other purposes," approved May 12, 1917, with the exception of vessels and property the use of which is in the opinion of the President required by any other branch of the Government service of the United States, are hereby transferred to the board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 23, to change the number of the section from "3" to "5"; in the same line, after the word "order," to strike out "that the merchant vessels now owned or controlled by the United States may be returned to or placed under private ownership and operation, and to the end that an efficient merchant marine, adequate to meet the requirements of our ocean-borne commerce and to serve as a naval auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, may be established and operated by citizens of the United States," and insert "to accomplish the declared purposes of this act, and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof," in line 7, before the word "authorized" to strike out "hereby"; in line 8, after the word "practicable," to insert "consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act"; in line 10, before the word "citizens," to insert "persons who are"; and in the same line, after the words "United States," to strike out "(as defined in section 2 of the shipping act, 1916, as amended)"; in line 12, after the word "section," to strike out "4" and insert "6"; in line 13, after the word "section," to strike out "2" and insert "4"; in line 16, after the word "price," to insert "and interest"; in line 17, before the word "more," to insert "deferred"; in the same line, before the word "years," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty"; in line 18, after the word "board," to insert "in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels"; in line 19, after the word "vessel," to strike out "is authorized to" and insert "shall"; in line 20, after the word "consideration," to strike out "in fixing the sale price of such vessels"; in line 21, after the words "price of," to insert "the available supply of"; in line 22, before the word "demand," to insert "the"; in the same line, after the word "vessels," to insert "freights received and prospects of their maintenance," so as to read:

SEC. 5. That in order to accomplish the declared purposes of this act, and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof, the board is authorized and directed to sell, as soon as practicable, consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act, to persons who are citizens of the United States except as provided in section 6 of this act, all of the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwise acquired by the board. Such sale shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, but the completion of the payment of the purchase price and interest shall not be deferred more than 20 years after the making of the contract of sale. The board in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels shall take into consideration the prevailing domestic and foreign market price of, the available supply of, and the demand for vessels, freights received, and prospects of their maintenance, the cost of constructing vessels of similar types under prevailing conditions, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 1, after the word "sold," to insert "and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell: Provided, That no sale shall be made at a less price than the cost at the time of making such sale of constructing vessels of similar types in private yards in the United States, after deducting the depreciation charge against the vessels sold generally allowed in shipping operations."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] would like that amendment to go over, although I presume he would just as lief discuss it to-day; but the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is also very much interested in it, especially in the proviso; so I ask that the amendment may go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest that the word "Provided" is misspelled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The correction will be made, and the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 9, in line 10, after the word "act," to strike out "of."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, my attention has just been called to the fact that in the bill as it passed the House, in line 10, it read, "shipping act, of 1916, as amended," without any quotation marks around the words "shipping act, of 1916." I think we should have the quotation marks, so I want to amend that so as to have the words "shipping act, of 1916," appear stricken through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, in lines 9 and 10, the words "shipping act, of 1916."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I want to reinsert, in quotation marks, "shipping act, 1916."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to insert "shipping act, 1916," in quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 9, line 12, to change the number of the section from "4" to "6"; in the same line, after the word "authorized," to strike out "hereby"; in the same line, after the word "empowered," to insert "if unable to sell to American citizens after diligent effort so to do"; and in line 15, after the word "determine," to strike out "subject to the same limitation as to completion of time of payments as provided in section 3," and insert "except that payment therefor shall be completed within 10 years," so as to read:

SEC. 6. That the board is authorized and empowered, if unable to sell to American citizens, after diligent effort so to do, to sell to aliens, at such prices and on such terms and conditions as it may determine, except that payment therefor shall be completed within 10 years—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 18, after the words "such vessels," to insert "having a dead-weight tonnage of not exceeding 6,000 tons, unless such vessels are over 10 years of age."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that amendment may be passed over for the same reason as the preceding one. I refer to the amendment in lines 18, 19, and 20.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I understand that the provision authorizing the sale to foreigners means that vessels under 10 years of age and in excess of 6,000 tons can not be sold. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It means that only vessels under 6,000 tons can be sold to foreigners and those over 10 years of age.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where they are over 6,000 tons and not over 10 years of age they can not be sold?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; it means that only vessels under 6,000 tons can be sold to foreigners and only vessels over 10 years of age, whatever the tonnage.

Mr. McKELLAR. Whatever the tonnage?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; as I understand.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey, and that was my understanding of its intention.

Mr. EDGE. I can see very plainly the way the amendment is drafted that it can be subject to two interpretations. I had not noticed it until the Senator from Tennessee drew attention to it. I think it is a very important matter. The intent of the amendment—I offered the amendment in the committee and it was adopted—at least, my intent was that vessels over 10 years of age, of any tonnage, whether over 6,000 tons or otherwise, could be sold to foreigners. Of course, in the case of vessels under 6,000 tons, there is no question about it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. That is precisely what it says.

Mr. EDGE. Well, that is precisely what it means, or what I meant it to mean, at least. That is different from the way the Senator stated it, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 9, in line 20, after the word "shall," to insert "after careful investigation"; and in line 22, after the word "marine," to insert "and it shall make as a part of its records a full statement of its reasons for making such sale," so as to read:

As it shall, after careful investigation, deem unnecessary to the promotion and maintenance of an efficient American merchant marine, and it shall make as a part of its records a full statement of its reasons for making such sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at top of page 10, to insert:

SEC. 7. That the board is authorized and directed to investigate and determine as promptly as possible after the enactment of this act, and from time to time thereafter, what steamship lines should be established and put in operation from ports in the United States or any Territory, District, or possession thereof where adequate terminal connections with rail carriers can and will be made or already exist to such world markets as in its judgment are desirable for the promotion, development, expansion, and maintenance of the foreign and coastwise trade of the United States and an adequate postal service, and to determine the type, size, speed, and other requirements of the vessels to be employed upon such lines and the frequency and regularity of their sailings, with a view to furnishing adequate, regular, certain, and permanent service. The board is authorized to sell, and, if a satisfactory sale can not be made, to charter such of the vessels of the United States as will meet these requirements to responsible persons who are citizens of the United States who agree to establish and maintain such lines upon such terms of payment and other conditions as the board may deem just and necessary to secure and maintain the service desired; and if any such steamship line is deemed desirable and necessary, and if no such citizen can be secured to supply such service by the purchase or charter of vessels on terms satisfactory to the board, the board shall operate vessels on such line until the business is developed so that such vessels may be sold on satisfactory terms and the service maintained, or unless it shall appear within a reasonable time that such line can not be made self-sustaining. The Postmaster General is authorized to contract for the carrying of the mails over such lines at such price as may be agreed upon by the board and the Postmaster General: Provided, That preference in the sale or assignment of vessels for operation on such steamship lines shall be given to persons who are citizens of the United States who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines if the board is satisfied of the ability of such persons to maintain the service desired and proposed to be maintained, or to persons who are citizens of the United States who may then be maintaining a service from the port of the United States to or in the general direction of the world-market port to which the board has determined that such service should be established: Provided further, That where steamship lines and regular service have been established and are being maintained by ships of the board at the time of the enactment of this act, such lines and service shall be maintained by the board until, in the opinion of the board, the maintenance thereof is unbusinesslike and against the public interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at top of page 12, to insert:

SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of the board, with the object of promoting, encouraging, and developing ports and transportation facilities in connection with water commerce over which it has jurisdiction, to investigate territorial regions and zones tributary to such ports, taking into consideration the economies of transportation by rail and highway and the natural direction of the flow of commerce; to investigate the causes of the congestion of commerce at ports and the remedies applicable thereto; to investigate the subject of water terminals, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment, and appliances in connection therewith, with a view to devising and suggesting the types most appropriate for different locations and for the most expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities regarding the appropriate location and plan of construction of wharves, piers, and water terminals; to investigate the practicability and advantages of harbor, river, and port improvements in connection with foreign and coastwise trade; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage the use by vessels of ports adequate to care for the freight which would naturally pass through such ports: Provided, That if after such investigation the board shall be of the opinion that rates, charges, rules, or regulations of common carriers by rail subject to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission are detrimental to the declared object of this section, or that new rates, charges, rules, or regulations, new or additional port terminal facilities, or affirmative action on the part of such common carriers by rail is necessary to promote the objects of this section, the board may submit its findings to the Interstate Commerce Commission for such action as such commission may consider proper under existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 10, to change the number of the section from "5" to "9"; in line 11, after the word "sale," to insert "of a vessel made under the provisions of this act"; in line 12, after the word "board," to strike out "(in order that the United States may be protected against loss, liability, or damage, and have additional security for the payment of the balance of the purchase price and charges)"; in line 16, before the word "terms," to strike out "the" and insert "such"; in line 18, before the word "marine," to strike out "all"; in line 20, before the word "insurance," to insert "such"; in the same line, after the word "companies," to insert "associations"; in line 21, before the word "forms," to insert "such"; in line 22, after the word "amount," to strike out "approved by" and insert "as"; in the same line, after the word "board," to insert "may prescribe or approve"; in the same line, after the word "approved," to strike out "which insurance shall be made payable to it in event of partial loss or collision liability"; in line 25, before the word "insurance," to insert "such"; on page 14, line 1, before the word "forms," to insert "such"; in line 2, after the words "and to," to insert "such"; in the same line, after the word "amount," to strike out "approved by the board" and insert "as the board may prescribe or approve. The insurance required to be carried under this section shall be made payable to the board and/or to the parties as interest may appear. The board is authorized to enter into any agreement that it deems wise in respect to the payment and/or the guaranty of premiums of insurance," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That if the terms and conditions of any sale of a vessel made under the provisions of this act include deferred payments of the purchase price, the board shall require as part of such terms and conditions, that the purchaser of the vessel shall keep the same insured (a) against loss or damage by fire, and against marine risks and disasters, and war and other risks if the board so specifies, with such insurance companies, associations or underwriters, and under such forms of policies, and to such an amount, as the board may prescribe or approve, and (b) by protection and indemnity insurance with such insurance companies, associations, or underwriters and under such forms of policies, and to such an amount as the board may prescribe or approve. The insurance required to be carried under this section shall be made payable to the board and/or to the parties as interest may appear. The board is authorized to enter into any agreement that it deems wise in respect to the payment and/or the guarantee of premiums of insurance.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me that the phraseology on lines 3 to 5 of the amendment is rather confusing. It reads:

The insurance required to be carried under this section shall be made payable to the board and/or to the parties as interest may appear.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is a sort of technical language, used in these contracts of insurance. It was submitted by the Shipping Board officials. I know it is rather awkward.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know whether it is technical or not, but it would seem to a layman to be unintelligible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is claimed that it is merely used under the technical rules.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 9, to change the number of the section from "6" to "10"; in line 11, before the word "which," to strike out "in"; in the same line, after the word "may," to insert "use"; in line 12, before the word "covered," to strike out "usually" and insert "commonly"; in line 13, after the word "policies," to insert "in such cases"; in line 16, after the word "board," to insert "are hereby transferred to the board"; and in line 17, after the word "board," to strike out "the board shall at all times maintain adequate surplus and reserves as required by the best actuarial practice to secure any such policies, and to secure the reasonable costs, expenses, and charges of maintaining such insurance fund, and shall annually pay into the Treasury of the United States, as miscellaneous receipts, any net profits realized from the operation of such insurance fund," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That the board may create out of net revenue from operations and sales, and maintain and administer, a separate insurance fund, which it may use to insure in whole or in part, against all hazards commonly covered by insurance policies in such cases, any interest of the United States (1) in any vessel, either constructed or in process of construction, and (2) in any plants or materials heretofore or hereafter acquired by the board or hereby transferred to the board.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 23, to insert:

SEC. 11. That during a period of five years from the enactment of this act the board may annually set aside out of the revenues from sales and operations a sum not exceeding $50,000,000, to be known as its construction fund, to be used in the construction, or in aid of the construction, of vessels of the best and most efficient type for the establishment and maintenance of service on steamship lines deemed desirable and necessary by the board, and such vessels shall be equipped with the most modern, the most efficient, and the most economical machinery and commercial appliances. The board shall use such fund to the extent required upon such terms as the board may prescribe to aid persons, citizens of the United States, in the construction by them in private shipyards in the United States of the foregoing class of vessels. No aid shall be for a greater sum than two-thirds of the cost of the vessel or vessels to be constructed, and the board shall require such security, including a first lien upon the entire interest in the vessel or vessels so constructed as it shall deem necessary to insure the repayment of such sum with interest thereon and the maintenance of the service for which such vessel or vessels are built. If there are routes upon which the board deems it highly important to establish service requiring vessels of the kind described in this section, and responsible persons, citizens of the United States, can not be found to construct the same the board may construct such vessels out of such fund in private shipyards in the United States, but no contract for such construction shall be let on a cost-plus basis, and when such vessels are sold the board shall require a cash payment of not less than 25 per cent of the purchase price and ample security for deferred payments. Interest on loans made under this section and on deferred payments shall be at a rate not less than 4 per cent per annum, payable semiannually.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, section 11 provides a very important policy, to which I think we should give some consideration. It very clearly provides that for five years, at least, the board may continue the construction of vessels on account of the Government entirely. I think the policy should admit of an opportunity for the Government to loan its credit to further develop and assure a workable merchant marine, but I question very much the policy of continuing outright on the account of the Government the construction of more ships. It is true, it simply provides that such construction shall be confined to $50,000,000 which shall be set aside from sales and operation; but of course it is one and the same thing whether we retain $50,000,000 from sales and operation, or whether we appropriate the money directly from the Treasury. It is the matter of spending that much money, or whatever part of it is expended, which otherwise would be saved to the taxpayers.

I feel, Mr. President, that the people of this country are opposed to any further continuation of the Government operation of the merchant marine than is absolutely necessary to put the merchant marine on a proper basis, and then as rapidly as possible we should have it absorbed by the private interests of the country under proper governmental regulation. The bill itself, by a section we have already adopted, very positively sets forth that policy, and authorizes and directs the Shipping Board, as I recall it, to sell the fleet as rapidly as good business will dictate, and yet we invite by this particular section the continued construction of ships at the same time we are directing the Shipping Board to dispose of the fleet.

I appreciate that there will be occasions when, in order to round out the fleet, the Shipping Board should encourage the construction in American yards of a certain type of ship; but I feel that the balance of the section, providing for aid on the part of the Government, two-thirds of the amount necessary being loaned by the Government under the provisions of the section, will provide for the filling of such necessities as they accrue. On the other hand, if we do provide for two methods of building these ships, one entirely by the Government and the other by the aid of the Government, it strikes me that it is reasonable to assume that the Government will be compelled to build the ships rather than private interests borrow the money and pay interest on it. I question the advisability of passing an act establishing the policy for the future, as we are unquestionably going on record, through this bill, that ultimately the entire fleet shall be in private hands, and at the same time we are directly authorizing the construction of more ships, for five years, entirely on account of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I rise to make one or two remarks in connection with what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] has said. While on the whole I am favorable to the bill, yet I think in some respects it is drawn on erroneous lines. It contemplates the establishment of a lot of Government shipping lines whether those lines pay or not. I call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the provisions of section 11, to which he refers, authorizing the board to expend from the revenues of sale and operation not to exceed $50,000,000 a year in the building of new ships. If the board carries out the program provided for in section 7 of the bill, establishing independent routes in different parts of the country and operating them whether they are profitable or not, there will not be much left for the building of these new ships, because the cost of building is to come from the revenues from the sale and operation of the ships.

If Senators will examine the provisions of section 7, they will find that it contemplates the establishment of a large number of shipping lines to be operated by the Federal Government. There is no limitation to the length of time they shall be operated nor is there any inhibition against operating them at a loss. I think if they succeed in establishing these lines, many of them, they will be found to operate at a great loss.

It is not only ships on the high seas from port to port that make commerce. Commerce comes from the exporting and importing of the necessities and requirements of trade. If, for instance, the people of South America desire to ship their coffee to Boston or New York, we can not compel them to ship that coffee to Mobile or New Orleans by merely establishing a shipping line.

When it comes to the matter of exports, the people will export their goods in those directions and to those countries where they can most readily dispose of them at a profit. The farmers of the Mississippi Valley will have a great deal of agricultural products to export. They will naturally want to export these over the shortest and best route to reach the chief market, and the chief market for our agricultural products, taken wholesale or in the lump, is found in Europe. The people of this country are not going to divert their products as a mere matter of sentiment from the ordinary lines of commerce. Our people in the Mississippi Valley, who desire to ship their goods direct to Europe, are going to take the shortest and most rapid route to get the goods to Europe. They are not going to divert their commerce to ports at one side of the main routes of commerce. They are not going to send their traffic around by a by-path just for the sake of establishing traffic at a given small port, either on the Gulf coast or the Atlantic coast.

In one way I can sympathize with small ports on the Atlantic and Pacific regarding which there is an idea that by furnishing ships for them we can build up their commerce and give them a trade that under natural conditions they can not obtain.

If I thought that merely establishing shipping lines and furnishing shipping facilities would build up a commerce at those ports and give them the traffic that would warrant them in establishing the lines, I should not hesitate a moment in favoring such a disposition. But there are two matters involved in the problem. It is not only a matter of furnishing ships but it is the course and trend of the import and export trade of the country. In other words, will a certain class of commerce go to a certain port just because you have ships ready, or will it go to a port because the trade and traffic and market for the goods are there? My own idea is that you can not build up any such commerce by artificial means.

I should be very glad myself to see our commerce diverted and scattered over the country instead of concentrated at one or two ports on the Atlantic, but I doubt the scheme provided for in the bill, which is that by establishing lines in all these different ports we can succeed in diverting the commerce and traffic there.

I hope that will be the result of the bill. I should be very glad if we can do it, but, in my opinion, the more of new lines established by the Government from small ports, the more we shall find the shipping left on the hands of the Government to be operated at a loss.

While I joined in reporting the bill favorably, the only criticism I have to make of it is that in its entirety it contemplates Government operation of ships on the seas. I was very much pleased with our railroad legislation when we took it out of the control of the Government. I hope the outcome may be to divert traffic out of the hands and control of the Government into the hands of private enterprise, into the hands of American citizens, and to vessels operated under the American flag. I hope that will be the outcome, but I very much doubt it.

I fear that the large board which has been created by the bill, scattered all over the country in order to meet certain local requirements, will result in the establishment of a lot of non-paying shipping lines that will be an expense to the Government years to come. I thought, when the committee was considering the bill, that it was a mistake to increase the board from five to seven. I think it would be a far better board if it were composed of not more than three members. Now it is made up of seven members, and they are going to be distributed throughout the country, and I fear it will lead to what we call in common parlance logrolling. I mean by that that the two representatives of the board on the Pacific will say to the members on the Gulf and Atlantic coasts, "Give us a line to Vladivostok, or give us a line to Shanghai, or give us a line to some of the far eastern ports; if you will give us that line we will give you a line from New Orleans to Africa, or we will give you one to China, or we will give you one to South America." They will say to the representatives on the Atlantic coast, "help us to establish these lines on the Pacific and we will help you to establish the lines that you want here."

I do not mean to say it in an odious sense, but in this manner you will have a system of logrolling. You will have the representatives on the board from one part of the country looking at it wholly or largely from their standpoint and anxious to get what they want, and they will acquiesce in what the representatives in other parts of the country want. Thus you will have, as I said a moment ago, no end of logrolling on that board.

To avoid such a system of what, for short, I term "logrolling," I felt that it would have been much better and much wiser if we could have had a board of three members, independent of local interests in any part of the country, men who would represent all portions of the country in their entirety and would not be wholly swayed by local influence.

There are one or two other items in the bill to which I want to call attention. One is placing the Philippine Islands under the coastwise-trade provisions. I regard that as the most wicked and cruel provision in the bill. Those islands are more than 10,000 miles from our shore; their products are shipped all over the world. By putting them under the coastwise trade you practically say that none of the products of the Philippine Islands shall come to America except in American ships under the American flag. We have only one port there where we have much commerce direct to this country, and that is Manila. The great crops of the Philippine Islands are sugar——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator if this provision which he says extends our coastwise laws to the Philippines is incorporated in the House bill or in the Senate committee amendments?

Mr. NELSON. It is incorporated in a Senate committee amendment to the bill. The Philippine Archipelago extends from north to south upward of between 400 and 500 miles, and from east to west from 300 to 400 miles. In the north we have the island of Luzon, and south of that what are commonly called the Visayan group of islands. Among those are the islands of Mindanao, Mindoro, Masbate, Samar, Panay, Negros, Cebu, Leyte, Palawan, Bohol, all of them large islands; and it so happens that the chief exportable products which are produced in those islands are sugar and hemp. The greatest amount of sugar is, perhaps, produced in the island of Negros, which is between three and four hundred miles south of Manila. From other islands adjacent to that, which belong to the Visayan group, come considerable sugar, most of the hemp, and a large part of the tobacco which we get from the Philippine Islands. I do not take into account the rice crop of the Philippines, because while they may export some rice they import more than they export. They need as much rice for food in those islands as is there produced.

Nearly all of the products of the Philippine Islands which have come to this country during the recent war have come to us, not in American ships, but in foreign ships. What would be the result if we adopted the proposed policy? It would be a death blow to the commerce and trade of the Philippine Islands, because they will not be able to ship any of their goods to America; the American market will be cut off from them unless ships flying the American flag are furnished for the transportation of their products.

The other chief ports of the Philippine Islands are Cebu, a very good port on the island of Cebu, and Iloilo on the island of Panay. The sugar of Negros is transported a few miles across the island of Panay, and from there it is shipped abroad through the port of Iloilo.

I heard it remarked in committee by means of the plan proposed we could retain control of the sugar crop of those islands and insure its coming to this country. That can not possibly be true. Even if we put that commerce under the coastwise laws, what is to prevent foreign ships entering the port of Iloilo or the port of Cebu and transporting goods direct to Europe? If the commerce between the Philippine Islands and the United States is put under the coastwise laws, it will force the people of those islands to ship their sugar and hemp and other products to countries other than the United States.

Mr. President, I am utterly opposed to placing the people of the distant Philippine Islands into a strait-jacket as is proposed by the pending bill. It is true that the bill provides that the provision referred to shall not take effect for a year; and it is also true that the committee has recommended a further modification to the effect that the President may extend the time in case of necessity; but, Mr. President, I believe that those far-away islands should have the same privilege of trading with the world at large as we in the United States have. While I do not remember exactly their population according to the last census, there are in those islands, I think, between ten and twelve million people. They are situated ten or twelve thousand miles from our shores.

To enact legislation to the effect that those people can not ship any of their products from the Philippine Islands to any port in America, either on the Pacific or on the Atlantic coast or anywhere else, unless they are shipped in a vessel flying the American flag, will be destructive to the commerce and a burden to the people of those islands. Neither will it help our country in securing the products of the Philippines, because, as I have said, European vessels can go to any port of the islands, to Manila, to Cebu, or to Iloilo, and there buy their hemp and their sugar for shipment direct to Europe; and that is what they will do.

Mr. President, we have another anomaly in our shipping laws. It is not directly reenacted in the pending bill. The first legislation in reference to the matter, I think, was passed in 1868, and provided that no person could travel in a foreign vessel from one port in the United States to another port in the United States unless he paid a fine, which, under the original law, was $2 a head; in other words, a foreign vessel could not take an American citizen from one port to another in the United States unless he paid, in the first instance, $2. Some 11 or 12 years subsequently—I do not remember the exact date—that law was amended so that now a fine of $200 is provided; that is, if a single passenger is carried from one port in the United States to another port in the United States in a foreign ship, that ship has to pay a penalty of $200. My attention was called to that law some years ago. Some friends of mine became stranded in the Hawaiian Islands; they waited there for weeks and weeks for the arrival of an American ship to take them back to the Pacific coast, but none came. Finally a foreign vessel, a British ship, I think, came along, and they were obliged to travel in that ship in order to get to their destination.

The ship had to pay a penalty of $200 for every American passenger which it carried from the Hawaiian Islands to the Pacific coast. Of course, the ship would not pay that penalty; the fine came out of the passengers; so that the man obliged to hurry home, to get back to America, in addition to his ordinary transportation charges had to pay $200, for the ship would not bear the burden of its payment.

While I am in favor of limiting and restricting coastwise trade to American ships, I certainly think that travel in this country ought to be free; I certainly think that if any American citizen at any port in the United States or within its dominions has occasion to travel to another port in the United States he ought to have the privilege of traveling on the first ship that comes along and not be compelled to wait indefinitely or to pay a penalty of $200.

As I have said, that provision is not in the pending bill. There is, however, a restrictive clause in the bill tending to carry out that idea in reference more particularly to conditions on the Pacific coast at Seattle. I refer to the provision prohibiting the checking of baggage of those who go out on our railroads and desire to go to Alaska. They may travel to the Pacific coast on the Northern Pacific or the Great Northern or any other route, and on reaching there may be anxious to take passage to a port in Alaska. Perhaps the first ship that comes along is a Canadian or British ship, but in the event they sail on such a vessel a provision in the bill prohibits them from checking their baggage. That, I think, is unduly and unjustly restrictive.

I am aware of the antipathy entertained on the Pacific coast against the Canadian Pacific and the Soo Railroad; but I wish to say to those who entertain that feeling that the Soo Railroad, which is the American end of the Canadian Pacific in our country, has been of more value to our people in giving fair and reasonable rates than have any of the operations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the matter of accommodations and of transportation our people have felt that the Soo Railroad—that is, the part that operates through Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan, and reaches down to Chicago—has, to some extent, been an antidote against the rapacity of some of the big western roads. So our people in the upper Mississippi Valley have never cherished the hostility toward the Canadian roads that seems to prevail in the Puget Sound section.

Mr. President, when I rose to reply, as it were, to the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] I had no idea of taking up so much of the time of the Senate. I have called attention briefly to what I regard as some of the unwise features of the bill, but recognizing the fact that all legislation is in the nature of a compromise, while I differed from the majority of the committee on some of these matter, I did not feel like obstructing the report on the bill or interfering with its passage; and even though I look upon some of the features of the bill as unwise, I shall not make any factious opposition. I hope that some of the objectionable matters may be cured in conference, and I hope that then the future will show the mistakes we are making in this legislation so that they may be remedied.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will take just a moment or two to refer to some of the matters to which the Senator from Minnesota has adverted. I appreciate more than I can say the attitude of the Senator in connection with this bill. He has shown the same broad-minded spirit with reference to it that he has shown with reference to all matters of legislation. I have the highest respect for his judgment and his opinion, not only with reference to the questions involved in the pending measure but with reference to other questions, and for the patriotic stand that he takes on all matters that are of interest to the country. While I hesitate to differ from him, I can not agree with him as to two or three of the propositions he has presented.

With reference to the coastwise trade and the passenger traffic to which he has just referred I wish to say just a word. He calls attention to the fact that some of his friends in the Hawaiian Islands were marooned for a while and had to pay $200 as a penalty to get back to the United States because American ships were not available, the islands being embraced within our coastwise laws. The only provisions contained in this bill with reference to that feature of the coastwise law is a provision that prevents its evasion. Whether the coastwise law should be repealed is another question, but so long as we apply the coastwise policy to our ports it seems to me we should not permit a foreign country to evade that law. If the law says that American passengers shall not be carried in a foreign ship between American ports, we should not permit that law to be evaded by aliens, and all that we do by the provision of the pending bill in this respect is to prevent the evasion of the law.

As the Senator from Minnesota has said, the necessity for the provision grows out of a situation peculiar to the trade between this country and Alaska. The Canadian Steamship Co. maintains an agency in this country in Seattle. If I go to their office and tell them that I want to go from Seattle, Wash., to Skagway, Alaska, an American port, what do they do? Under our coastwise law they can not sell a ticket directly from Seattle to Skagway.

They can not send a ship directly from Seattle to Skagway under our coastwise laws; what do they do? They sell me a ticket to Vancouver, British Columbia, and at the same time, in the same office in Seattle, they sell me a ticket from Vancouver to Skagway. They then send me to Vancouver, and I get off of one vessel and onto another, and go on to Skagway.

Mr. President, we have a provision in this bill to prevent that. It is a clear evasion of our law; and, as I have said, so long as we continue our coastwise laws I am not in favor of a foreign country evading them in that way. If our coastwise laws are not proper, if they should be done away with, all right; let us do away with them. That is another proposition. We should not keep them on our statute books and permit them to be nullified by alien competitors.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do.

Mr. EDGE. Did I understand the Senator to say, in leading up to that description of the situation on the Pacific coast, that we had in no way amended the coastwise laws under this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all, in that respect.

Mr. EDGE. Then, we did not include the Philippine Islands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes. That is another proposition. We do not change our coastwise law; we just extend it. I want to discuss that now for just a moment.

Mr. President, if we are going to have an American merchant marine, we shall have to take advantage of every opportunity we have to get it. I have no doubt about that. I do not blame any other country for doing everything it can to prevent us from establishing ourselves upon the sea. I admire them for it. What I should like to do is to take a leaf out of their book. This is really a new proposition for us. When the war began we had practically no ships under the American flag on the high seas. Practically the only shipping we had was in the coastwise trade, built up under our coastwise laws; and if we had not built up that merchant marine under the coastwise laws, the result of this war might have been far different, because when we got into this war the only ships that we really had available to transport our troops across the seas and carry supplies for them were ships taken out of the coastwise trade.

How did Great Britain build up her merchant marine? She built it up by saying that goods from her colonies should not be brought into Great Britain except under the British flag and in British ships. She continued that policy for years and years until she had built up her merchant marine. Then she removed those restrictions. Why, we remember in our histories reading about how the colonists were restricted in bringing products into this country. They could not bring them in except in ships flying the British flag, nor could they ship them except in the same way. Why? It was done under a wise and judicious national policy for the building up of a British merchant marine.

Mr. President, we want to build up our merchant marine in the foreign trade, the overseas trade. We had no such merchant marine when the war broke out, but we have a lot of ships now. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] said, however, ships alone do not make a merchant marine. They must have cargoes, they must have traffic, they must have business, or they will be laid up or be sold to foreign countries. Routes must be established and trade developed to maintain them.

Mr. President, the trade of the Philippines, between those islands and this country, is ours if we see fit to take it, and why should we not take it? Why should we not have it so long as we retain the Philippine Islands? When the opportunity is at hand for us to say that the traffic between those islands and the United States shall be transported in American ships, and thereby build up that much trade for American shipping, encourage the building of American ships, and the establishment of American lines across the Pacific, where we need them so badly, why should we not do it?

If the Senate does not think it is a wise thing to take the trade that is ours and hold it to our flag and to our ships, very well; but my opinion is, my judgment is, that this is something we ought to take when we can, and we ought to hold it. It does not mean injury to the Philippine Islands. Why, under the provisions of this bill we are very particular about that. We put it off for a year, and we direct the Shipping Board at that time to see to it that adequate shipping facilities are provided for those islands, so that their commerce will not suffer, but that ample facilities with proper rates for passengers and commerce shall be provided. Then we go further, we take an extra precaution, and we say that if at the end of the year there are not sufficient shipping facilities the President shall extend the time to such period as he sees fit and as may be necessary in order to establish proper and suitable shipping facilities. Surely these islands want this done. We are not going to put them in a strait-jacket. We are going to insure them access to the greatest market in the world.

Mr. President, I have this in mind: As the Senator said, it is 7,000 or 10,000 miles to the Philippine Islands. Fine ships will be required for that trade, splendid passenger ships, combination passenger and cargo ships, ships suitable for any ocean carrying trade. We will establish the lines that we want and that we ought to have, in a section and a territory where we need them and where we ought to have them.

What should we make out of Manila? We should make out of Manila the great distributing point in the Orient for the products of this country, and those products should be carried to Manila in American ships, and then distributed throughout the Orient in American ships. It would mean a prosperity, growth, and development for those islands they can have in no other way.

We do not interfere with the foreign commerce of those islands. So far as British ships are concerned, or Japanese ships, or any other foreign shipping that desires to go into Manila from their ports, or to go into Manila from their ports and then go out from Manila to some other ports, we make no change. We do not interfere with that at all; but we do say that the trade between those islands and the United States shall be in American ships, under the American flag; that it will be for the benefit of this country and for the benefit of those islands.

Mr. President, in my judgment the closer we can bring those people to us, the better it will be for them, as well as for us. If we deal with them in the right sort of way, if we show them that we have their interests at heart, we will make them our friends, even better friends than they are now. If those islands should ever leave us, or be separated from us, we should maintain a relationship with them that will be not only of great benefit to them, but also of great benefit to us. This will be so if we establish close business relations with them now.

From every standpoint of American interests, the interests of the Philippines, and for the building up of our American merchant marine, it seems to me that it is wise, judicious, and patriotic to extend the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands.

Now, just a word with reference to the fund.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. May I ask the Senator if he does not think that what is proposed in this bill is necessary in order that the Philippine people may be able to secure equal traffic conditions in their trade with this country and in their trade with other countries? That is to say, if the Philippines are to rely solely upon the ships of other countries than the United States, will not the shipping conditions that are imposed by our competitors, those who own these ships, naturally be such conditions as would drive the Philippine trade to European countries instead of to this country?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, there is no question at all about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. That has been our difficulty with reference to the trade of other foreign countries. It would be our difficulty with reference to our trade with the Philippines. We will not secure American shipping facilities unless we give our facilities some advantage that far from home; and if we have no American ships to bring the trade of those islands to this country I think it is almost certain that we will not get anything like a fair share of the business of those islands. I believe that with the provision we have in this bill the United States will get a fair share of that traffic—in fact, will get the lion's share of that traffic—because this country always will be guaranteed rates to the Philippine Islands that are as favorable to trade with this country as rates from the Philippines to any other country in the world are favorable to that trade.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from North Carolina is absolutely correct; and I might suggest, Mr. President, that so long as we do nothing toward establishing steamship lines to the Philippines, the Philippines will get just whatever service foreign shipping sees fit to give them between them and this country. If it desires to give them irregular service, it will do it; and, as the Senator from North Carolina suggested, its endeavor and attempt will be to divert the trade of the Philippine Islands from the United States to its pockets.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. In that event, what will regulate the rates between American ports and the Philippines?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Shipping Board has authority under the shipping act to regulate our coastwise trade from port to port and on regular routes.

Mr. PHELAN. Is there no danger of retaliation by any power if we discriminate in favor of our own possessions? Has that been considered?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not see how they could retaliate, or have any ground for retaliation. We have a right to deal with our own territory as we see fit.

Mr. PHELAN. For information, I would like to ask the Senator whether he has considered the significance of the imperial preference? Great Britain, in dealing with her colonies, practices what is described as an imperial preference. What is the meaning of that, in so far as shipping is concerned?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have not given that any consideration. It is an internal affair of the British Empire. She will look after that and we can not complain.

Mr. PHELAN. Recently the Australian Government refused an American ship the privilege of a return cargo of copra, which led to considerable correspondence with the State Department. Australia claimed, as the only reason why the refusal was made, that she needed the copra herself. That left the American ship to return in ballast; it had to endure a very great hardship. It is my information that there is an abundance of copra, and that it was a discrimination. I believe the State Department regarded it as a discrimination against the American ship. Therefore, in view of this announced policy, that the coastwise law shall be extended so that ships may ply between the Philippine Islands and the ports of the United States, I was going to observe that this imperial preference might properly justify a policy of discrimination on our part. That might strengthen the argument of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So it would. It is but an example that should teach us to look after our interests as other nations look after theirs. Mr. President, I have looked at this problem, so far as I am concerned, just in this way: I feel that Great Britain will do everything in her power to promote British interests in trade and in shipping, and I do not blame her for doing it; I admire her for doing it. What I want is that we shall look after our interests in that same way, and that is what I have tried to do, to the extent of what little influence I have had in connection with the framing of this bill. It is a bill to aid and promote an American marine and no other.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, agreeing absolutely with what the Senator is endeavoring to accomplish, is there any method which the Government can adopt, learned from past experience, by which it is possible for the Government to establish these new lines to the Philippines, or any other section, which have not already been established, and maintain and administer them more cheaply—which means at cheaper rates—than private interests can maintain them?

My fear is that we are adopting a policy in which we announce that we want private interests to administer the merchant marine, and then surround the bill with such restrictions, or give to the Shipping Board such opportunities, that we are simply tying ourselves down to the administration of the merchant marine for years to come. I would like to see it more clearly established that the direction of it, given under one section of the bill, will be carried out under the remaining sections of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that phase of it I was not discussing. I am discussing now the advisability of putting the Philippines under the coastwise law.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator was discussing his belief that the Government should establish new lines to the Philippines, and I am just trying to bring out from the Senator his view as to whether or not that should be a permanent proposition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator knows that it is the declared policy of this bill to get these ships into private ownership ultimately. I do not agree with the suggestion the Senator made a while ago, that we want these ships disposed of, and that we are directing the Shipping Board to dispose of them as soon as practicable in a businesslike way regardless of anything else. We direct them to do it consistent with the declared purpose of this bill, which is to build up and maintain an American merchant marine. That is the essential thing; that is the important thing to be accomplished. That is of even higher importance than private ownership and private operation.

Will private parties establish shipping lines between this country and the Philippines? Is there anything we can do to induce them to do it? Mr. President, we might be able to induce them to do it if we would pay them many thousands of dollars in subsidies, but we have many times tried to pass subsidy legislation in order to have shipping lines established but we could not get it done; we could not pass it. Here is a 7,000-mile trip. Japanese ships are paid hundreds of thousands of dollars a year for traversing the Pacific Ocean between Japan and the United States, touching at the Philippines. In my judgment, Mr. President, there is nothing Congress can be induced to do, leaving these islands outside the coastwise laws, that would enable private owners to establish shipping lines in competition with Japanese shipping lines aided by the Japanese Government, through the assistance it gives to them.

But, Mr. President, there is one thing we can do; we can hold the trade of the Philippines under the American flag by passing the provisions in this bill. There is no doubt of that. That is one thing we can do. If we do not do it, we can have no excuse to offer if foreign shipping continues to carry the trade of the Philippines and if that trade with us should grow less and less.

The Senator fears that the Shipping Board will not act as we really intend it to act under the provisions of this bill. Of course, Mr. President, there is nothing we can put in the bill which will make the Shipping Board act wisely and fairly and justly. We must put confidence in somebody. We have to place the greatest discretion in somebody in dealing with the problems of the American merchant marine. We have placed it in the Shipping Board, the only agency in which we could place it. We must depend upon that board to act wisely, to exercise the power and the discretion we give it in a wise way; and what I would like to impress upon the Shipping Board, if I can do it, is that we want them to be animated by a spirit of Americanism; that we want them to be moved with the desire, an intense desire, to build up American trade, American shipping, and American interests. I want them to understand that we are placing in their hands the greatest and widest power, probably greater than was ever invested in any governmental organization before, and that we are giving them this power and giving them this discretion to use in the interest of American trade and American shipping, and not for the purpose of simply getting rid of the ships we have in the most expeditious way possible.

I would like to see these ships all in private American hands to-morrow; but, Mr. President, I do not want to see these ships sacrificed in price and the establishment of lines of trade fail in order to get rid of them. I want these ships to be used as the basis or the foundation of a great and permanent American merchant marine, and I feel sure it can be done if the board acts in the right way, and I believe the board will act in the right way. I will believe that until I see it acts otherwise.

Mr. PHELAN and Mr. EDGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES of Washington. In just a moment. We have in this bill gone even further than I believe it is safe to go in directing the Shipping Board and limiting the powers of the Shipping Board in its disposition of these ships. I believe it is for us to lay down a great national policy that we want carried out and then let the Shipping Board lay down the administrative policies to effect that great object. The wider the discretion the more likelihood of success. I yield to the Senator from California. I think he addressed the Chair first.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, in the conference report on "Fees for passports and visés," agreed to last Saturday, I find this section:

> From and after the 1st day of June, 1920, it shall be unlawful for any alien, other than a seaman, to enter or attempt to enter the United States without a passport duly viséed by a person duly authorized by the Secretary of State to issue such visé: Provided, That this section shall not apply to nationals of Great Britain domiciled in the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermudas, or the Bahamas, or to nationals of France domiciled in St. Pierre and Miquelon, or to citizens of Cuba, Panama, or Mexico.

The privilege is denied to nationals other than those of Great Britain or France and citizens of Cuba, Panama, and Mexico residing in these near-by places of coming into the United States, under this new regulation, without passports or without the viséing of passports. Presumably they will be amenable to the immigration laws. I know nothing to the contrary. But in advices received from San Francisco within the last five days it appears that Judge Rudkin, judge of the Federal court, held that a Japanese seaman who had escaped from a Japanese vessel, a deserter, when apprehended could not be returned, that there was no law by which such a seaman escaping from a vessel could be deported. That is the customary way of seeking entry by those ineligible to land, not only the Japanese but anarchists and Bolshevists and those who are bent upon the destruction of our Government, it is claimed. They come in as seamen. I can not understand why an exception should be made in favor of seamen under these circumstances, and why we should not require a passport or a visé at the port of departure, because then the American consul, in viséing such a passport, could determine whether they were bona fide seamen or not. This conference report was agreed to without any comment, and I will state to the Senator in charge of the bill that I was seriously contemplating offering an amendment to the shipping bill providing that seamen should not enjoy that exemption unless there is some very good reason why they should enjoy the exemption.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, personally I see no objection to it. What the reasons were for making that exception I do not know. If they were presented to me, they might appeal to me. But I am moved, in connection with this bill, by the spirit of doing everything in the world for American shipping and looking after our interests and our interests only; and I would like to see us do everything we possibly can for our interests and for the building up of a merchant marine. I would extend no favors to any country unless I could see a corresponding or greater benefit to my country.

In connection with what has already been said, I am going to call attention to what Canada does with reference to this coastwise-trade law, the evasion of which we would like to prevent, and it will suggest to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] what the British do, what Canadians do, what the Japanese do with reference to maintaining their shipping, and something we do not propose to do in this bill.

I have here a document entitled—

> Dominion of Canada report relating to mail subsidies and steamship subventions as controlled by the department of trade and commerce for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1918, with traffic returns, etc., to December 31, 1918.

Here are estimates for the year ending March 31, 1920, as compared with those for the year ending March 31, 1919, with statement of services rendered and expenditures to December 31, 1918, on account of mail subventions and steamship subventions. Apparently this is called chapter 18. It reads:

> MAIL SUBSIDIES AND STEAMSHIP SUBVENTIONS.
> Amount to be voted..... $2,467,120.67

By Canada as subvention—for what purpose? For the purpose of maintaining shipping lines. What is one of the lines that is to be maintained by subvention?

Victoria, Vancouver, and Skagway. Skagway is in Alaska. It is an American port. How much do they pay the steamship company to maintain a line to Skagway? Twelve thousand five hundred dollars. They estimate $12,500 for the year 1920. That line, paid $12,500, maintains an agency in Seattle and evades the laws of the United States, and we are permitting her to do it. That we propose to stop by this bill if the Senate will indorse the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I gather from the previous remarks of the Senator from Washington, in referring to the fact that Congress had never granted a subsidy, that the Senator favors a subsidy by the Government in some form or another to assist in the development of American shipping.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I favor anything that will establish and maintain an American merchant marine, and I will support direct subsidy legislation if it is necessary. I do not believe that it is necessary at the present time. I believe we have some provisions here in this bill—you may call them subsidy provisions if you want to—that will do what we want done. One provision enables the administrative agencies to make contracts with reference to the carrying of mails. Instead of paying over $2,000,000 of our own money to foreign steamship lines for carrying our mail I am in favor of paying it to our own; and I will go much further, so far as I am personally concerned, if necessary, to establish an American merchant marine.

Mr. EDGE. I want to make it clear that I rather agree with the Senator. The term "subsidy" seems to have had a rather bad sound in the country generally, but many efforts on the part of the Government will make up for what might ordinarily be called a direct payment of subsidy. The question I was leading up to is this: In establishing these lines, for illustration, to the Philippines, I assume from what the Senator says he imagines that they will be operated at a loss, inasmuch as I think the Senator stated that it would be impossible, in his judgment, to induce private capital to establish similar lines.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator misunderstood me.

Mr. EDGE. I wanted to get that clear.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I said I thought it would be impossible to induce private parties to establish these lines without putting them under the coastwise laws, leaving them in competition with the Japanese and letting the Japanese run their ships to Manila and then on to the coast. I think if we give notice that in a year from now the coastwise laws will be extended to the Philippines that private parties will go to work to prepare to take advantage of the trade and will establish private lines, and that it will not be necessary for the Government to do that. That is what I confidently believe.

Mr. EDGE. In other words, if in the meantime there is any loss because of the Government establishing these lines to the Philippines and thus endeavoring to encourage Philippine trade to this country, it will be in the nature of a subsidy in order to build up that business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I make no question about that at all.

Mr. EDGE. That is the point I am trying to bring out.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course the Senator and I agree with reference to that, but it will be more than balanced by trade expansion and development that will take place, and the people of the country will approve it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am obliged to leave the Chamber because of another engagement. I assume, if this part of the bill is reached, that it will not be disposed of this afternoon?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator would like to have it go over——

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to say something on it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall be very glad to have it go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that the Senator has made it perfectly clear yet that the Government, under the provisions of the bill, assumes no obligations whatever to establish these lines unless private individuals fail to establish them.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true. I am glad the Senator emphasizes it. We try to emphasize that in the bill, that unless private enterprise does it, the Government will establish it. We also tried to emphasize that we do not want the Government to maintain it any longer than is necessary; that if they establish it and develop a good business and can sell the ships, we want them to do it, and I am sure this can be done. Let there be no mistake. We do not propose to extend the coastwise laws to the Philippines and leave them without shipping. It is made as plain as can be that ample shipping facilities shall be ready when the coastwise laws are extended and that such shipping is to be maintained.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the first place, we allow a year in which this provision of the bill is not to become operative; that is, a year's time in which private individuals may get ready for this trade. At the end of that period the President may further extend the time of Government operation, if it is wise to do so, in order to give further opportunity for private capital to supply the requirements of the trade. That is what I understand the bill to provide.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. EDGE. May I interrupt the Senator there? If private capital could not make a reasonable profit on the operation, is it not reasonable to assume that the Government can not make any profit on the operation, judging from previous experiences in governmental administration?

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, if private capital can not operate the line at a profit, the Government can not do so.

Mr. EDGE. Then we must assume that it is a subsidy.

Mr. SIMMONS. The purpose of the bill is to offer inducement to private capital to do that. If private capital does not do it, then the Government of the United States, in the interest of its trade with these islands, proposes that it will operate this line, whether at a profit or a loss. It may be, for that question continually arises, that the Government can not operate these ships at a profit—I mean a profit upon the actual operations—but the Government has other interests in the Philippine Islands than that of making money out of the ships, which it may have to supply as a last resort, in order that the country may get its proper share of the trade with one of its own possessions.

If the Senator from Washington will pardon me just for a moment——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no doubt that under present conditions the people of the United States are not enjoying anything like as large a part of the trade of the Philippine Islands as they are entitled to enjoy. I have no doubt that under present conditions Japan, Great Britain, and other European maritime nations who supply the Philippines with their ocean transportation are doing it upon conditions that are much more favorable to the shipment of their products and the purchase of their supplies from foreign countries and the United States; that they are getting to-day the lion's share of that traffic, and that they will continue, as long as those conditions exist, to get the lion's share of that traffic.

The traffic in the Philippine Islands as a whole is a very large traffic, and yet up to this time, while our traffic has been increasing from year to year, we are getting but a very limited portion of the trade of the Philippine Islands.

I say up to this time we are getting a very limited portion of the traffic from the Philippine Islands. It is perfectly natural that if Great Britain wants that trade she should take it to her ports at a less rate than she is willing to bring it to our shores. Is it not perfectly natural that if Japan wants that trade, and Japan is the only nation furnishing ocean transportation, Japan will take that trade to her ports instead of bringing it to our ports, and if she brings it to our ports by force of necessity, she would charge a higher rate upon that than she charges for transportation of the same thing to her own ports?

So I say that we have this condition confronting us with reference to one of our own possessions. We can not give the people of those islands a fair opportunity to trade with us and we can not ourselves enjoy a fair opportunity to trade with them, because they buy their transportation from other countries that are interested in diverting the trade from this country to their own country, and that will continue.

Now, it may be that under present conditions it will be impossible for private capital to operate ships between this country and the Philippines at a profit. It may be under present conditions that it will be impossible for the United States Government to do that, because when they get to these ports, whether the ship be under private control or under Government control, it meets the competition of Japan and the competition of Europe. But suppose we eliminate that; suppose we send our ships there in private ownership or in Government ownership in certain quest of that trade and there is no possible competition between those ships and foreign ships. We send them there with the fixed purpose that we will give to those people as favorable trade conditions as ships of any other country will give to them. What is the result? The result will be that not only the present traffiic between that country and this country will all be brought in American bottoms, but that traffic between this country and our possession across the sea will greatly increase as the result of the concentration of that traffic, and as a result of the increase of that traffic, it seems to me, it is reasonable to suppose that we will build up a sufficient trade between this country and the Philippines to make it profitable for American ships engaged in coastwise trade to operate at a profit.

The committee considered the question very maturely and very thoroughly. It is the hope of the committee that by extending our coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands, by cutting off competition between our ships and foreign ships for this trade, we will be able in a short time to build up a trade sufficient to justify private capital in investing money in that enterprise. But if we can not do that, it seems to me it would be a gross disregard of our duty to those people if we did not see to it that they are furnished by the Government of the United States, even if it entails some little loss to the people of the United States, an equal opportunity to trade with this country to that which they enjoy in their trade with other countries of the world.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for the splendid statement he has made. He has covered the whole question fully and completely.

I wish to call attention briefly to what Canada is doing with reference to trade between Canada, China, and Japan. Her own estimate for 1919 was $253,333.34. That comes out of the Treasury of Canada in direct aid to her shipping lines. The estimate for 1920 is $253,333.34.

I wish to call the attention of Senators to a very significant statement on page 101 of this official document. This is with reference to a $200,000 item for traffic between Canada and France:

> Freight rates. The rates charged for freight to or from any Canadian port included in this contract shall not exceed the rates charged by regular passenger steamers of the same class to or from New York, Boston, or Portland, and the minister may at any time revise the rates if he deem it advisable.

In other words, the rates from Canadian ports shall not exceed those from Boston and New York. Then listen:

> No discrimination of any kind shall be made against Canadian merchants or shippers, who shall always have precedence for their freight and goods over all other merchants and shippers.

They propose to look after their interests. That is what I want us to do with reference to our interests.

Now, Mr. President, just a word with regard to section 11, which has been adopted, which provides for a fund for aiding private parties to build ships and for building the ships by the Government if that becomes necessary. The Senator from New Jersey is not opposed to, in fact he favors, creating a fund to be used in aiding private parties in the building of ships. I can not see the justice of a discrimination. We probably have a situation on the Pacific coast very different from that on the Atlantic coast, and it emphasizes, to my mind, at any rate, the need of a larger board. The Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota think the present board is too large, being composed of seven. The Senator from Minnesota would make it much smaller; he says we should have one, two, or three commissioners who will represent the whole country. The trouble is that when you get the three they do not represent the whole country; they do not know anything about the conditions in certain sections of the country; they do not know the needs of the Pacific as compared with the Atlantic, and they represent only the Atlantic, and probably only a small part of that.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will.

Mr. RANSDELL. It seems to me it would be just as apropos for us to have the various States of the South and the Pacific, for instance, represented by two or three Senators as to have our immense commerce on the Pacific, the Gulf, and the South Atlantic represented by three men, probably all taken from one city. We have got to have representatives from every section of this great Republic on our Shipping Board, exactly as we have in the House of Representatives and in the United States Senate, in order to have the interests of the respective localities properly looked after.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly, that is true. One of the most important provisions of this bill is that increasing the board and distributing it over the different sections of the country. There will be no log rolling, but the interests and shipping needs of every section will be considered. A broad, national policy will be carried out in a broad, national way and a merchant marine will be created that will serve every interest and every section. If this proposition simply involved the selling of ships, the getting rid of ships, if it were simply a liquidating proposition, as a prominent gentleman who is a member of the shipping force though not a member of the Shipping Board has several times designated it, then I would agree with the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from New Jersey that one man would be better than a board of three or five or seven; but the Shipping Board is anything but a liquidating agency. Its great purpose and aim are administrative and the development of administrative policies to carry out the great policy which we declare in this bill. It will require men with knowledge of every section and of the needs of every section of the country to do what ought to be done.

Now, what is the situation on the Pacific coast? We do not have regular lines on the Pacific, such as cross the Atlantic from New York. We have the Japanese and the English and other lines controlling the business on the Pacific, but few, if any, American lines; and yet, if there is any section outside of South America where the commerce of the United States should develop and grow and expand, it is in the Pacific and in the Orient. We must have men who know the conditions and the needs and the situation there in order to work out a policy that will build up lines; and we want regular lines on the Pacific. We must have them or aliens will control the trade of the Pacific, including our own.

Mr. President, I hope, under the encouragement given in this bill, that private parties will establish such lines, but, if they do not, the lines ought not to go unestablished simply because private parties do not see sufficient profit in the enterprise to establish them and to operate ships on them. So, while it is the policy of the bill and of the committee to have private parties build all these ships and establish these lines and these routes, if they can be prevailed upon to do so, we do not propose to leave very highly desirable routes without ships.

We deem it not only wise but good governmental business to provide a way by which if there is a highly important route that should be established and private parties will not establish it, the Government agency may construct the ships and put them on the line and develop the business; develop the business at a loss, if you please; and when it gets profitable sell the line and the ships on a profitable basis to private parties and let them continue to operate them.

The people of the country will sustain a proposition of that sort. They will recognize that while they are paying a subsidy, or call it whatever you please, they are paying for the establishment and development of a business that will mean millions of dollars for the commerce of this country, the development of American shipping that will be a great asset of national defense in time of need. So, Mr. President, I am glad that the Senate has approved that section of the bill. It is one of its most important sections. Under it private parties will be aided in building the finest type of ships for trade lines they believe will be profitable, and under it the Government will see to it that important routes are established and new markets developed.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, may I ask a question right here?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. Simply to bring out the matter in the RECORD, I desire to ask the Senator what is the proposed policy? If I understand it correctly, in establishing these new lines, even though they are operated at a loss—and I am inclined to agree also with that policy—the Senator does not, of course, mean by that that we shall establish lines where American lines are already in operation?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. EDGE. But simply where such lines are not running?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly; I do not imagine that the Shipping Board would think about establishing lines where American lines are already established, because we do not propose and do not desire this legislation to be used by the Shipping Board to destroy private enterprise, private industry, and private capital which has been invested. On the contrary, we want the Shipping Board to aid and sustain private energy and industry.

Now, just a word further. The Senator from Minnesota is fearful that we shall establish a great many routes that will not pay. Mr. President, we do not have the American merchant marine established as it ought to be established; we do not have the routes developed as they ought to be developed and as we should like to have them developed. This bill may not do what we hope it will do. We will do nothing if we do not try to do something. If we wait to be sure of results nothing will be done. We must take some chances. Like the Senator from Minnesota, I hope the policy proposed will be a success. I do not know, but I believe it will be. I do not believe that the Shipping Board, under the direction that we give them, will fail to carry out the intentions of the legislation, if we get the right sort of a board; and I want to say that the committee, in my judgment, is going to do what it can hereafter to see that we have the right kind of men on the Shipping Board, whether we have them now or not. We recognize the tremendous importance of the Shipping Board; we recognize that it ought to be composed of men of the highest standing and the greatest business ability and experience that we can possibly get; men who are moved by the highest motives of patriotism and the desire to build up American interests and the American merchant marine. We are going to do the best we can to aid in securing that sort of men on the Shipping Board. No Government board has a more difficult task nor a greater work to do. They are going recklessly into the establishment of new routes. They are going to look into the matter very carefully before they act. We will have to depend upon them; we will have to trust them; and we are going to give them the general outlines of the policy we want carried out and the great purpose we desire to accomplish, and then we are going to intrust them with the power to accomplish that purpose and that object.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I expected. I did not intend to speak at all but I thought it well to present the other side of the questions suggested by the able Senators from Minnesota and New Jersey. I should like to have the consideration of the bill continued for a few moments until we can finish the reading of the text of the bill as it passed the House, and then I will be willing to have it go over temporarily before we begin the consideration of the new provisions.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 16, line 7, to change the number of the section from "7" to "12"; in the same line, before the word "sold," to strike out "not" and insert "until"; in line 9, after the word "terms," to insert "and conditions"; in line 11, after the words "merchant marine," to strike out "provided the operation, charter, or lease of such vessels by the board shall be limited to the time fixed" and insert "pursuant to the policy and purposes declared in sections 1 and 5 of this act; and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation shall continue in existence and have authority to operate vessels until all vessels are sold in accordance with the provisions of this act; and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation shall continue in existence and have authority to operate vessels until all vessels are sold in accordance with the provisions of this act, the provision"; and in line 18, after "1916," to insert "to the contrary notwithstanding," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That all vessels until sold shall be managed and operated by the board or chartered or leased by it on such terms and conditions as the board shall deem wise for the promotion and maintenance of an efficient merchant marine, pursuant to the policy and purposes declared in sections 1 and 5 of this act; and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation shall continue in existence and have authority to operate vessels until all vessels are sold in accordance with the provisions of this act, the provision in section 11 of the "shipping act, 1916," to the contrary notwithstanding.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 19, to change the number of the section from "8" to "13"; in line 20, before the word "property," to strike out "any" and insert "all"; in the same line, before the word "transferred," to insert "other than vessels"; in line 21, after the word "section," to strike out "2" and insert "4"; in the same line, before the word "such," to strike out "under" and insert "upon"; in line 22, after the word "may," to insert "determine and"; and in the same line, after the word "prescribe," to strike out "but completion of payment of the purchase price shall be within five years from the date of the contract of sale," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 13. That the board is further authorized to sell all property other than vessels transferred to it under section 4 upon such terms and conditions as the board may determine and prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 1, to change the number of the section from "9" to "14"; in line 3, after "1916," to insert "or by the acts specified in section 2 of this act"; in line 4, before the word "such," to strike out "save" and insert "except"; in line 6, after the word "section," to strike out "7" and insert "12"; in the same line, after "12," to strike out "of this act," and insert "hereof"; in line 7, before the word "for," to strike out "or" and insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "section," to strike out "6" and insert "10 hereof, and for the construction fund authorized in section 11 hereof"; in line 13, after "July 1," to strike out "1920" and insert "1921"; in line 16, after the word "capital," to strike out "or" and insert "and less such sums as may be needed"; in the same line, after the word "insurance," to insert "and construction"; in line 17, before the word "shall," to strike out "fund" and insert "funds"; in line 21, before the word "or," to strike out "act" and insert "acts" and in line 22, after the word "section," to strike out "1" and insert "2," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 14. That the net proceeds derived by the board prior to July 1, 1921, from any activities authorized by this act, or by the "shipping act, 1916," or by the acts specified in section 2 of this act, except such an amount as the board shall deem necessary to withhold as operating capital, for the purposes of section 12 hereof, and for the insurance fund authorized in section 10 hereof, and for the construction fund authorized in section 11 hereof, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the board and may be expended by it, within the limits of the amounts heretofore or hereafter authorized, for the construction, requisitioning, or purchasing of vessels: After July 1, 1921, such net proceeds, less such an amount as may be authorized annually by Congress to be withheld as operating capital, and less such sums as may be needed for such insurance and construction funds shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. The board shall, as rapidly as it deems advisable, withdraw investment of Government funds made during the emergency under the authority conferred by the acts or parts of acts repealed by section 2 of this act and cover the net proceeds thereof into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 1, to change the number of the section from "10" to "15"; in line 2, after the word vessels," to insert "owned by the United States Government"; in line 3, after the word "furnished," to insert "by the board"; in line 5, before the word "department," to strike out "the" and insert "such"; and in the same line, after the word "department," to strike out "when such vessels are owned by the United States Government," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 15. That the board shall not require payment from the War Department for the charter hire of vessels owned by the United States Government furnished by the board from July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919, inclusive, for the use of such department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 7, to change the number of the section from "11" to "16"; in the same line, before the word "build," to insert "purchase"; in line 8, after the word "requisition," to insert "lease"; in the same line, before the word "exchange," to strike out "or"; in the same line, before the word "houses," to insert "or otherwise acquire"; in line 9, before the word "buildings," to strike out "or"; in the same line, before the word "land," to strike out "to purchase or requisition"; in line 15, after the word "is," to strike out "suspended" and insert "hereby terminated"; in line 16, after the words "for the," to strike out "repairs"; in line 21, before the word "such," to insert "all"; in line 22, before the word "such," to insert "all," and in same line, after the word "practicable," to insert "consistent with good business and the best interests of the United States," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 16. That all authorization to purchase, build, requisition, lease, exchange, or otherwise acquire houses, buildings, or land under the act entitled "An act to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire, and to sell or otherwise dispose of improved or unimproved lands, houses, buildings, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1918, is hereby terminated: Provided, however, That expenditures may be made under said act for the repair of houses and buildings already constructed, and the completion of such houses or buildings as have heretofore been contracted for or are under construction, if considered advisable, and the board is authorized and directed to dispose of all such properties or the interest of the United States in all such properties at as early a date as practicable, consistent with good business and the best interests of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. An executive session is desired, and I will not ask that the Secretary read further at this time. I understand, however, the Senator from New Jersey wishes to occupy the floor for a few moments.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I did not wish to interrupt further until the reading of the provisions of the bill as passed by the House had been completed, but I do not want the impression to be permitted to remain or any misunderstanding to arise as to my view of the policy of the Government in aiding the construction of new vessels as compared to the actual appropriation of money for the building of new vessels. I desire to say merely a word in reference to that matter. I consider absolutely consistent the position agreeing with the one policy and not with the other. When we loan money for the construction of necessary new ships we are simply advancing our credit; we are not accumulating additional property to be disposed of in some way or other, probably at a loss, at a later date. In order to follow out the policy which the Senator from Washington so eloquently announced to-day of building a merchant marine, I think it is one of the most businesslike policies of the Government to loan its credit when it is being absolutely secured and protected under the terms of the act, and quite a different policy from actually expending money and having the property on hand. While I offered no amendment, I stated at the time that I believed in a $50,000,000 limit, and that the section was not compulsory. It simply placed the matter in the hands of the board, and left it optional with the board. I would not attempt to amend the section; but I do think there is a distinct difference between loaning credit and spending our own money, and thus having the goods on hand.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 11, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 10, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God of law and order, peace and equity, justice and mercy, truth and purity, whose love reaches the farthest star in the vast universe and would enter in and possess the most forlorn and lonely soul, control our minds, direct our ways, and bring us with all the world in harmony with the eternal plans Thou hast ordained. Under the divine leadership of Thy son, Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, May 8, 1920, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. PATRICK HENRY DREWRY, who comes from the old Lexington district in Virginia, is present and wishes to qualify. His credentials are with the Clerk.

Thereupon Mr. DREWRY, accompanied by Mr. FLOOD, appeared before the bar of the House, and the Speaker administered the oath of office to Mr. DREWRY.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] will take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil bill, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insane of Alaska: For care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in Alaska, including transportation and other expenses, $115,000: Provided, That authority is granted to the Secretary of the Interior to pay from this appropriation to the Sanitarium Co. of Portland, Oreg., not to exceed $520 per capita per annum for the care and maintenance of Alaskan insane patients during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes that some provision would be made and carried in this bill in regard to the insane from Alaska, to provide for these insane to be returned to Alaska, or, if citizens of Alaska and found in the States of the Pacific Northwest, that they shall be sent to the sanitarium at Portland. Legislation is asked for to cure that condition. I hope that the time will come when we shall have a sanitarium for the insane in Alaska.

As it is now, a citizen of Alaska found insane in the States can not be sent to the Morningside Asylum at Portland for the reason that that citizen has not been adjudged insane in Alaska. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Education in Alaska: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and under his direction, to provide for the education and support of the Eskimos, Aleuts, Indians, and other natives of Alaska; erection, repair, and rental of school buildings; textbooks and industrial apparatus; pay and necessary traveling expenses of superintendents, teachers, physicians, and other employees; and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses which are not included under the above special heads, $275,000: Provided, That no person employed hereunder as special agent or inspector, or to perform any special or unusual duty in connection herewith shall receive as compensation exceeding $200 per month, in addition to actual traveling expenses and per diem not exceeding $4 in lieu of subsistence, when absent on duty from his designated and actual post of duty: Provided further, That of said sum not exceeding $7,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee, in connection with this paragraph in regard to education in Alaska, whether or not the subject of education could not be brought closer home, say here in the District of Columbia, and if the chairman at this time would permit us, without raising a point of order against it, to offer an amendment to this paragraph to provide for what is known as the teachers' bonus of $500 for the teachers of the District of Columbia? Many of the teachers here get less than $900 per year salary.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, that would not be germane to this item. The gentleman understands that this education that is carried on by the Department of the Interior in Alaska is for the native children.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know it is subject to a point of order; but the urgency of the matter is so great, the need of it is so great just now to save the schools of the District of Columbia, that I thought possibly the chairman would permit it.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman will agree that the committee having charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill went a long way, so far as increasing the pay of the teachers is concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. They had a long amendment, but after we passed it it did not amount to much increase for the teachers.

Mr. GOOD. I think it did. It requires the additional expenditure of about $750,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. The teachers are urging Congress right now for some immediate action, claiming that they have no means whatever to carry them through the summer months. I heard a distinguished educator in the House the other day say, "Oh, let them go to work and farm themselves out during the summer months in useful work."

I want to say right now that when a teacher spends nine months of the year in the schoolroom she is entitled to a little recreation in the summer time. If the teachers are going to be kept fit to teach the youth of the land during the rest of the year, they ought to have some time off in the summer.

Mr. GOOD. I could not agree to an amendment of that kind; that is not germane.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of it?

Mr. GOOD. I have been very sympathetic in my attitude toward the teachers' pay. I think the pay of the ordinary clerk in Washington is in most cases a good deal higher at present than the pay of school-teachers.

Mr. BLANTON. The pay of the idle negro janitor in a department in Washington is much higher to-day than that of the highly trained white lady school-teacher.

Mr. GOOD. In the subcommittee in charge of the deficiency bill——

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this discussion on the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not against education, is he?

Mr. SANFORD. Of course not; but I make the point of order against this discussion.

Mr. BLANTON. Let it be charged, then, against the gentleman that he is opposed even to a discussion of the subject. Let the teachers get after him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reindeer for Alaska: For support of reindeer stations in Alaska and instruction of Alaskan natives in the care and management of reindeer, $6,400: Provided, That the Commissioner of Education is authorized to sell such of the male reindeer belonging to the Government as he may deem advisable and to use the proceeds in the purchase of female reindeer belonging to missions and in the distribution of reindeer to natives in those portions of Alaska in which reindeer have not yet been placed and which are adapted to the reindeer industry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 108, line 8. After the word "industry," add a new paragraph, "That there shall be paid to each teacher in the District of Columbia a bonus of $500 for the school year of 1919–20."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 108, line 8, after the word "industry," insert a new paragraph, to read as follows:

"That there shall be paid to each teacher in the District of Columbia a bonus of $500 for the school year of 1919–20."

Mr. GOOD. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in the paragraph preceding this one to which I offered the amendment we provide for education in Alaska to the amount $275,000. We do not stop there. That is all right, however, and I am in favor of every dollar of it. You will never find me, as long as I am in the House, voting to reduce appropriations for education of the people one single dollar, because I am in favor of educating them to a blue-sky limit.

But, I say, we do not stop there; we go on further, and in the paragraph preceding this we provide that the Commissioner of Education shall expend $6,400 on the management of reindeer in Alaska, and so forth. Now, I want to ask my colleague if there is a single reason on the face of the earth that we can offer for not paying the teachers of the District of Columbia this little, measly amount of a $500 bonus when many of them are now getting less than $900 per year?

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman is asking me, I will tell the gentleman what I think about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I think in the past the teachers in the District of Columbia were the worst paid teachers in the United States. I always favored good compensation for the teachers. They all know that I have, not only here but all over the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will not take up all my time.

Mr. MADDEN. I will get the gentleman more time. I favored the pension for them, which they were justly entitled to. I favored the increased compensation provided for in the District bill, amounting to 50 or 100 per cent. They have got that. They come now and ask for a bonus of $500. I am against that; I think there is a limit beyond which we ought not to go.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that there is in the District now a young lady whom I know who is highly educated, who taught school in the high schools of Texas, one of the best teachers that you will find anywhere in the country, who is teaching in your District schools here right now on a salary of less than $100 a month. Why should she do it? She has got to stop. She told me the other day that she absolutely could not afford to do it; that she will have to resign her position.

Mr. HICKEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HICKEY. What salary did this young lady receive in Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. I think she received more than $100 per month, but she came to the District of Columbia, like other people come, for the advantages that a young person can receive here in an educational way.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If she is such a good teacher, is there anything to keep her from going down to Texas and getting $400 or $500 or $2,000 increase?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I will tell you what is the matter; you are trying to force every teacher in the District of Columbia to join the trade-union, which would be an everlasting disgrace to their profession; and when you do it you will not find a man here who will stand up and vote against their demands. Every one of you who talks against it now will be found jumping up here and voting for everything that you are called upon to do in the name of unions.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that next year the lowest-grade teacher in the District of Columbia will receive $1,200 and a bonus of $240?

Mr. BLANTON. But what are you going to do about this year and the summer months in front of them, when they have got to live, just like you and I? They can not pay their debts on promises for next year. They can not pay for their meat and bread and board and lodging on legislative promises of what is to come next year.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman's amendment does not take care of this year.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes, it does. It is for the school year of 1919–20. They will get it immediately. What you want to do is to force them to join the union, and then when Samuel Gompers comes up here and puts Morrison in the gallery and his cohorts around here call on you, you are going to give them what they want, and you know it. Why don't you act without being compelled to act?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane and is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the effect of the amendment is to increase salaries not fixed by law, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill when the item which was passed over Saturday is going to be taken up?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman means the item with reference to the reclamation project?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I have not had time to examine into the merits of the matter yet.

Mr. GANDY. It will be taken up at the end of the bill?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Park Service: Director, $4,500; assistant director, $2,500; chief clerk, $2,000; editor, $2,000; draftsman, $1,800; junior draftsman, $1,440; accountant, $1,800; clerks—3 of class 3, 2 of class 2, 1 of class 1, 1 $1,020, 2 at $900 each; messenger, $600; in all, for park service in the District of Columbia, $28,260.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr.

GOOD] what is the meaning of the terms, clerks of class 4, clerks of class 3, clerks of class 2, and clerks of class 1?

Mr. GOOD. A clerk of class 4 receives a salary of $1,800, a clerk of class 3 receives a salary of $1,600, a clerk of class 2 receives a salary of $1,400, and a clerk of class 1 receives a salary of $1,200. Without other specifications, appropriations are made for their employment under the classification law.

Mr. HARRELD. Is that provided in the bill?

Mr. GOOD. That is provided in the general law in regard to classification.

Mr. HARRELD. I notice that there was expended for this purpose in 1920, $22,220, and we propose now to increase it to $28,260, and to provide for three extra clerks, one of class 3, one of class 2, and one of class 1. I should like to know what is the necessity for increasing this clerical force at this time, when we are trying to economize?

Mr. GOOD. We gave four extra clerks—that is, a junior draftsman, an accountant, one clerk of class 3, and one clerk of class 1.

The director of the park service felt that there was no place where more economy could be effected than by giving them the clerical force here that was required to look after the national parks. They were having some trouble with regard to their accounts. They get in accounts from all of the national parks, and here is an appropriation of about $1,000,000 a year for the national parks.

Mr. HARRELD. Approximately $904,000.

Mr. GOOD. It is approximately $1,000,000 a year. The committee felt that with an appropriation of that kind we could not be too careful in the matter of accounts. The director thought that greater economies would be effected if they could keep their work current, if they could keep up their affairs in a businesslike way; that at the present time their force was so small that they were not able to keep their work current and to look after the national forests.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to point out to the gentleman that the increase in the appropriations is only $157,000 more than it was last year.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I have stated to the gentleman just what the situation is. I could state more if it would not show how stingy we have been in this regard and had made it necessary for the director to pay some of the clerks out of his own pocket.

Mr. HARRELD. Does it take three more clerks to handle $157,000 more than they had last year?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have said to the gentleman that the director states that their work is way behind now. I have tried to explain the situation.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to ask about this editor at $2,000. I withdraw my pro forma amendment and make a point of order against the item "editor, $2,000."

Mr. GOOD. The point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. Of course debate having taken place on the pro forma amendment, a point of order would not lie against the paragraph.

Mr. HARRELD. Then I move to strike out in line 21, page 108, the item "editor, $2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Harreld: Page 108, line 21, strike out after the figures "$2,000" where they occur the first time the words and figures "editor, $2,000."

Mr. HARRELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, at this time, when we have such a scarcity of print paper, I can not see the use of this expense of printing these advertisements, or whatever they are, affecting the national parks. I think it is time we began a program of real economy, appropriating only that which is necessary. I noticed the other day the statement that in 1916 we had a per capita national revenue of $7.16, and that the per capita expenditures for that year were $7.07. That year we were receiving more than we were expending. In the year 1919, the latest figures available, the per capita revenue was $48.10 and the per capita expenditures were $139.80, almost four times what our receipts were. It seems to me that this is a good place to begin economy.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the total revenue from the national parks last year amounted to $186,000. The revenue up to the time of the hearings for this year was $198,000, and it is estimated that the revenue for next year derived from people who visit the parks and from certain of the concessions in the parks alone will amount to $300,000. The only way the revenue can be increased is to advertise and make known the beauties of the parks.

This item has been carried a long time. It is not a new item. The editor prepares all the literature with regard to the parks, and it seems to me the item should remain in the bill. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Interior in his administration of the National Park Service is authorized, in his discretion, to accept patented lands, rights of way over patented lands or other lands, buildings, or other property within the various national parks and national monuments, and moneys which may be donated for the purposes of the national park and monument system.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item gives the Secretary authority to accept lands for park purposes. I will ask the gentleman if there was any information before the committee concerning the possible acceptance of some of the big-tree lands? There has been a good deal of advertising, and statements have been made in the newspapers, and it is interesting to know.

Mr. GOOD. A few years ago in the Yosemite Park there were private holdings which the director of the park service desired to secure, in order to prevent persons from going into the park and maintaining on such holdings certain establishments there that might interfere very seriously with the rules and regulations and conduct of the park.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand; but the statement was made during the winter or the fall that the director of parks, and I believe former Representative Kent, contemplated making quite a donation to the Government of land that has some of the big trees upon it.

Mr. GOOD. That was in the Sequoia National Park.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was the land for additional parks or for new parks.

Mr. GOOD. This is what Mr. Mather says about that:

In the Sequoia National Park we secured the finest stand of timber, known as the Giant Forest. Congress gave us $50,000 toward the purchase of the Giant Forest, and the National Geographic Society gave us an additional sum for that purpose. In that way we secured the largest and finest trees in the park, but there are some few stands in there now, right in the heart of the park, on which we are getting options. We hope that we will be able to obtain private donations, or we may come to Congress with requests to exchange public lands of equal value for lands within the national park. I think that if we can get this worked out we can get the private titles extinguished without making it too much of a burden on the Treasury, and, perhaps, there will be none at all.

The director goes on to state that he is at work trying to secure donations from individuals of certain tracts of land. Only recently he advised me that he secured an option of 40 acres of big trees in one of the forests—I have forgotten which one—and then went to a large manufacturer, who took up the option and holds the land and is ready to give it to the park. It is land within the park—the park entirely surrounds it—and I think the director is doing a very splendid work in trying to get these private holdings within the boundaries of the park all conveyed to the Government of the United States without the Government having to purchase them. In the same way he is adding to the attractiveness of the parks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I quite agree with the gentleman. I think Mr. Mather is a great asset to the Government.

Mr. GOOD. I think so myself.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Really a wonderful man.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glacier National Park, Mont.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including necessary repairs to the roads from Glacier Park Station through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation to various points in the boundary line of the Glacier National Park and to the international boundary, including not exceeding $1,000 for the maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $95,000.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word to get some information. I notice that the appropriation made for the Glacier National Park in 1916 was $75,000; in 1920, $85,000; and in 1921, $95,000, it being an increase of $20,000 over that of 1916 and $10,000 over that of last year. I would like to have some information why it is necessary to have these increases.

Mr. GOOD. The regular appropriation for the current year was $85,000, with a deficiency of $62,000 and a further deficiency of $19,849. The deficiencies had to do largely with the protection of the forests from fire. The amount of the estimate was $293,000. We carry in the bill $95,000, which is $10,000 more than last year. The gentleman complains because it is more than last year, but I want to remind him that in 1917 the appropriation was $110,000; the appropriation for 1918 was $115,000. The States have been increasing and improving the highways to the national parks, and the director desired very much to improve the highways in the park. However, the director, after going over this matter very carefully, I think, became convinced that at this time, because of the very high price demanded for materials for road building and for labor, the Government was getting only about 40 cents on the dollar for the money expended; at least that is the judgment of the committee. What the committee has done is to cut these items down to a maintenance item pure and simple. The gentleman may say that it is $10,000 more than last year. The testimony is that the increase in the wages and materials is practically 20 per cent more than last year, and with the present appropriation it is doubted if we will get as much in the way of maintenance as we had with an appropriation of $85,000.

Mr. HARRELD. I notice that the appropriation for parks in 1916 was $242,000 for these same 17 parks, and that this year it amounts to $904,000, approximately. Will there ever be a time when these parks will be revenue producers rather than an expense?

Mr. GOOD. Out of the appropriation of this year of $900,000 the director estimates the total increase will amount to $300,000. That is a growth of about $185,000 for the last fiscal year. I submit to the gentleman that shows a very healthy growth. The people are beginning to appreciate the national parks, and they will appreciate them more and more just as we are able, as I hope in the near future we will be able, to do something more for the national parks than we have this year. By improving our national parks we will keep many American tourists at home. If any complaint can be made, I think it would be because the committee cut this appropriation as much as it did. It cut it with one end in view, and that was to not appropriate money at a time when we were getting only about 40 cents on the dollar for the amount appropriated, but to postpone the opening up of roads and trails until a more normal condition exists with regard to costs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misunderstood in asking these questions. No one is more in favor of increasing appropriations for parks than I am, but I think at the present time these things ought to be limited to actual necessities. I am asking these questions for information; I am not opposing national parks, because in a few minutes I am going to ask that I be given additional appropriations for a park. I do not want to be considered inconsistent. I have every confidence in the Appropriations Committee. I know how well it has served in holding down expenses of government during these times, when economy should be the watchword. I have not a word of criticism, but I felt that the record of this House should show more fully the necessity for the various increases made in this bill over those of last year. I have heard the explanation of the chairman. It is satisfactory.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] suggested that possibly there ought to be a considerable increase in the receipts for the use of parks, and some people might think that the gentleman from Oklahoma believes that parks should be self-supporting, although I am quite sure that that is not his policy.

Mr. HARRELD. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. East Potomac Park, in the city of Washington, brings in no revenue to the Government. Rock Creek Park, in the city of Washington, brings in no revenue to the Government. In my city the expenses of the parks amount to a good many times the total appropriations in this bill for the maintenance of the national parks, but those parks produce no revenue at all. Yet they much more than pay for the expense of their maintenance. If there is any one thing that is of value to people who work it is to have some recreation parks. Parks are maintained not so much for those who can afford to pay for their use as they are for those who can not afford to pay high expenses in order to make use of them. I am in favor of parks and in favor of the use of parks. I believe that every citizen who goes into a beautiful park and enjoys a rest and recreation amid the beauties of the park makes himself or herself a better citizen of the country. There is nothing, in my judgment, of more value than good parks, both local and national. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to assess and collect from physicians who desire to prescribe the hot waters from the Hot Springs Reservation reasonable charges for the exercise of such privilege, including fees for examination and registration; and he is also authorized to assess and collect from bath attendants and masseurs operating in all bathhouses receiving hot water from the reservation reasonable charges for the exercise of such privileges. The moneys received from the exercise of this authority shall be used in the protection and improvement of the said reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. The language of this paragraph seems to be rather broad. It gives the Secretary of the Interior authority to assess and collect from physicians who desire to prescribe the hot water from the Hot Springs Reservation reasonable charges, and so forth, for the exercise of such privilege. Suppose a physician in the city of Washington had a patient for whom he desires to prescribe that he shall go to Hot Springs and take the water, how is the Secretary of the Interior going to levy a license fee on that physician?

Mr. GOOD. I think he can do that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would like to know how.

Mr. GOOD. The director says he can do it. They require now of every physician before he is authorized to prescribe treatment that he have a license to give a prescription. It is all on a Government reservation, and the Government has the right to regulate practices on its own reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; practices on the reservation, probably true; but it is not confined to that. A physician in Washington can be controlled by the Secretary of the Interior in writing a prescription. It is not confined to physicians at the Hot Springs.

Mr. GOOD. It is the only place where it will have any application.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, I think it is the only place where it will be practicable to apply it, but I have no confidence whatever in some Secretary of the Interior—not the present one, in whom I have all confidence—endeavoring to determine what shall be done about the use of water at the Hot Springs and what shall be done elsewhere.

Mr. GOOD. It is purely a matter of administration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not see upon what theory, by the way, physicians at Hot Springs are to be assessed if they want to prescribe the water there.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Suppose a physician in the city of Washington should prescribe a patient should go to the Glacier Mountain Park, for instance, and ride horseback, he may be charged a license under the same theory?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly; on the same theory, he could be.

Mr. GOOD. This is only intended to apply and will only apply to the physicians who are practicing there and persons who go there for treatment. These waters are not sent out, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, but people are sent there.

Mr. GOOD. They are sent there, and when they get there they go to the physician who knows about the medicinal quality of the water of the various springs. Now, an examination is made of the person and then the physician gives him a prescription as to the waters they should use and how they shall be used. Mr. Mather, who appeared before the committee in behalf of the item, feels this is necessary. I know very little about the practice——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It would mean additional fees for going to Hot Springs, because that is what it amounts to, of course.

Mr. GOOD. No; they say not. The director says it is absolutely in the interest of the protection to the man who goes to the Hot Springs, and the doctors have no objection whatever to paying this fee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Perhaps the doctors there would prefer to pay the fee to keep some other doctor from giving a prescription?

Mr. GOOD. No; it keeps out the quacks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not see how this keeps out the quacks. What Secretary of the Interior is going to determine whether a physician can prescribe these waters——

Mr. GOOD. Of course he does not allow everyone to prescribe the waters——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is trying now, so far as that goes.

Mr. GOOD. Yes. This merely extends that authority.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is for the purpose not only of doing that, but to make charges against the physicians and make charges against the masseurs and make charges against everybody who goes down there to do any work.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman submit to an interruption?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. WINGO. I have not studied the technical language here, but I do understand the law requires the physicians to stand an examination; in other words, must be registered. This is for the purpose of protecting the patients who go there from being victims of quack physicians, and they are guarded very closely, and they bar and strike from the rolls physicians who are not reputable and not attending properly to their patients. As I recall, when people go there they can only take particular waters under the advice of a physician. It is not safe to take some of them except on advice of a physician. And now the charge assessed against the registration of these bathhouse attendants is to propect the patients against improper attention in these bathhouses. I do not think the intention is to undertake to provide revenue out of it, but solely for the purpose of paying the expenses of registration and of protecting patients who go there. It is considered to be for the benefit of the patients, and it is not to exclude anybody who has knowledge or is qualified to prescribe the waters. Now, I have not examined the language, as I have said——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably the gentleman from Arkansas knows in reference to this, but it seems to me as if it would be nonsense. However, I withdraw the point of order. If the people of Arkansas want it, why, of course——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just to make one statement. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Representative from that district does not happen to be on the floor just at this particular moment. I am very familiar with the situation at the Hot Springs and know a great many people there, and the impression I have gotten is that at the present time these springs are being taken care of and being run better than they have ever been before to protect the people who go there for their health from all parts of the earth. The present superintendent of the springs is admitted by all reputable physicians to be trying to protect the people who go there in every way, and whenever he finds a doctor who he thinks is not a reputable physician, who is not acting properly, then he looks after him and gets after him and has him brought up, and frequently doctors have come to Washington to appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, and I have not heard any complaint of this arrangement except from those who claim they have been charged with being incompetent; but the general impression that I get from people there is that the present management is better than ever before and that the people who visit that place are better protected.

They can go to the office of the superintendent on the avenue there, and they can get a list of registered physicians, and they can go to any physician on that list and rest assured that he is a reputable man and will not make improper charges or neglect them, but will see that they get the treatment necessary. The object at the springs now is to try to protect the people who go there.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including not exceeding $800 for the maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for use of the superintendent and park employees in connection with general park work, $40,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the National Park Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the National Park Service. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Platt National Park, Okla.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, $6,000.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARRELD: Strike out lines 9 and 10, page 112, and substitute therefor the words "Platt National Park, Okla.: For administration, protection, maintenance, improvement, and extension of sewer system, including the purchase of a wagon and team of mules for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with the national-park work and the purchase of provender therefor, $9,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am actuated in asking for this increased appropriation for this little park because it happens to be in my district, and because of the necessity of the situation. I was in this park some five months ago, and it is deplorable to see the condition which exists there. It is a nice park, something on the order of Rock Creek Park in Washington. If the same amount of money was spent on that park that is expended in Rock Creek Park it would be a much more beautiful one; and it has this in addition to recommend it, that it is a health resort. There are to be found there some of the finest sulphur springs in the United States, and perhaps the finest bromide water in the United States. This bromide water was so valued by Uncle Sam that a few years ago he kept a guard over the spring and would not allow anyone to carry water away, because it was so valuable in the treatment of nervous diseases. Nobody could take it away, but could go there and drink it by the cup. Of course, lately that has not been kept up. This park was formerly known as Sulphur Springs National Park, and was established way back yonder when that country belonged to the Indians, for the benefit of the Indians, and since the whites have settled up that country they, too, have been coming in their wagons and their cars to drink of that water and recover their health. So it has that advantage over these other parks about which we are talking. It is not only a pleasure park but a health resort, 1 of 2 of the 17 parks included in this bill which in addition to being pleasure parks are also health resorts.

Right here I want to say that I am not opposed to beautifying and improving our parks. The questions I asked were simply meant to bring out the importance of these appropriations, and I will go my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] one better, and say that I hope the time will come when we will not only be able to do the right thing with these parks in the way of improving and beautifying them, but we shall appropriate money to build roads and connect them up with highways that will make them more accessible to the poor of this country who need these parks, as my friend from Illinois said.

As I said, I visited this park in November and I was struck with the deplorable conditions there. The pavilions over these springs—and there are several of them that the Government built at great expense—are absolutely rotting down. The 5 miles of hard-surface road that the Government built in the park is going to wreck because they have not a team of mules with which to improve it.

Formerly the Government appropriated $17,500 for this park, and then it dropped to $10,000, and then to $8,000. In 1916 and 1917 the appropriation was $8,000, and during the war it was dropped to $6,000, and for the last two years there had been appropriated $6,000. It is the only park in the list for which the appropriation has gradually decreased. The others have all increased until, as against $242,000 in 1916, there is this year being appropriated $904,000. But this is the only park in the list where there has been a decrease.

I found the conditions there deplorable in this, that there is only one available camp ground that can be used by these people who come there in their wagons and cars. It belongs to the city of Sulphur, which lies alongside of this park, and I found when I was there last fall that this camp ground had been closed to the public because of insanitary conditions; and hundreds of people coming to that park were obliged to turn around and go back home because they could not find a place on which to camp. So I ask you to give an appropriation of $2,000, which is necessary to connect up the sewerage, which is already in this park, with this camp ground, so that the people who come there this summer may be able to use that camp ground in enjoying the privileges of that park for the benefit of their health.

Now, when I got here last fall I found that the superintendent had already made his recommendation of $6,000 again for this year. You will understand I did not get here until the 1st of December, after a special election. I went to work immediately and tried to get the superintendent to increase his recommendation for this appropriation. In that case I asked for $5,000 more. He would not agree to increase the recommendation, because he had already made it, but he did write a letter to the Committee on Appropriations, in which he said that $5,200 could be spent to very fine advantage on this park. I have a copy of that letter. I do not know whether that constitutes a recommendation or not; but, anyway, the committee did not see fit to follow it, and I presume they had reasons for it. I am not impugning its motives. The fact is that both the committee and its chairman are entitled to much credit for the efforts they have put forward in the interest of economy—I have done my best to assist them in their plan of economy—but it is not economy to fail to keep up improvements that have already been made, or to refuse appropriations that are actually necessary, as in this case.

I want to say here now that I want to pay a compliment to Mr. Mather. I think that he is the man of all men that we should have as superintendent of these great parks of ours. The only trouble is that he does not know anything of the conditions in this particular park, and therefore recommends a smaller appropriation than is really necessary. We need a larger appropriation to keep up the park and its four or five pavilions and its 4 or 5 miles of road, with this creek that needs to be kept clear of débris, and the approaches to the bridges are washed out and should be repaired. And all of this is impossible to do unless this commission is given a team of mules. They are so poor that they have not got even a team of mules to haul off the brush and to cut the weeds and repair the 5 or 6 miles of road. The superintendent, who is a brother of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], told me that he took his own team of mules and worked in that park to cut down the weeds and to make repairs for three months last year without cost to the Government, but that he could not do it again this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma have five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am very much interested in the statement of the gentleman. This park is a matter of old controversy in this House. For a number of years this House has tried to give this park away, but nobody would take it. Now, I presume we are going to keep it.

Mr. HARRELD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right there. Does he not think that if we are going to keep it we ought to do something for it?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was what I was going to get at. If we are going to keep it, I think we ought to do something with it. I did not catch the full import of the gentleman's amendment, but, as I understand, all he has asked for is a team of mules.

Mr. HARRELD. No. I was asking for an increase of $3,000 only; $1,000 of which is to be used in the purchase of the team of mules to do this work and for the purchase of provender and $2,000 for the extension of the sewer system.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A team of mules for operation would involve a good deal of expense. They need material and labor. They have not got their material and labor. So far as I know the appropriation of $6,000 is nearly all used for salaries.

Mr. HARRELD. It provides for three laborers, but they have got nothing to work with.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They would not have much more to work with if all they had additional was the team of mules.

Mr. MACGREGOR. They are to be intelligent mules. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRELD. They would have $1,140 out of the original appropriation of $6,000, and the $2,000 for sewer extension, which I am asking for in this amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether we ought to keep the park or not, but I guess we will have to, because no one else will take it. It is valuable for its waters. There is no park there except the waters. That is all there is to it. They have valuable medicinal waters there. I think that is admitted. Let the gentleman tell us more about it.

Mr. HARRELD. I will tell you more about it. The gentleman does not know anything about it if he thinks it is valuable for its waters only. [Laughter.] This park, as I said a while ago, when the lands of the Indian Territory were allotted among the Indians in severalty, was left there for the benefit of the Indian tribes. At that time it was not contemplated that the whites would ever settle that country. It is a beautiful little park, about 4 miles by 6 in dimensions, if I understand it aright; and I want to say right now that it rivals Rock Creek Park, right close to this city. It is in the Arbuckle Mountains, right in the middle of the mountains, and there is an ever-flowing stream through the center of it. They have two bridges over it which the Government has built. It is more heavily timbered and the valley is wider than that of Rock Creek Park out here on the outskirts of Washington. It is a park that the people get a great deal of benefit from. As I said before, it is one of the two parks that is a pleasure park and noted for its medicinal waters at the same time. Now, why should a park that is both a pleasure park and a health resort be abandoned absolutely in favor of a park which is only for pleasure?

There is another thing to be said about it: I had a talk with Mr. Mather, and he told me that his plan contemplated some day having a highway system connecting all these parks. If that plan is carried out this park will be found to be on the direct line of that highway system between the other great parks and Hot Springs, Ark.—and it is only one day's travel from Hot Springs, Ark., to this park—and in the natural course that that highway would have to take when it is built, going from Hot Springs National Park to the other parks of the Rocky Mountains, this Platt National Park would be a good link in the chain, and I believe it ought to be preserved for that purpose if for no other.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, what sort of ills are these waters supposed to cure?

Mr. HARRELD. The sulphur water is good for stomach troubles. The bromide water is practically all the water that there is of that kind in this country; it is good for nervous diseases and is demonstrated to be very efficient in such cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRELD. This is what I want to say, gentlemen: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said that Congress has been trying to get rid of this park for a long time. That is no reason why you should let it go to rack. If you want to get rid of this park, keep it up in shape until you can get rid of it. As long as the Government owns that park it ought not to absolutely ignore it. I am not asking for a great big appropriation to beautify it and make it a great pleasure resort. I am only asking for what is absolutely necessary to keep that park in shape and preserve the improvements we already have made there, and I am limiting it to only $3,000 increase. Now, whether or not you want to preserve that park, whether or not you want to carry out the plan of finally getting rid of that park, so long as we have got it I believe it is our duty to preserve it and protect it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not understand that this amendment would be subject to a point of order, although the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has reserved a point of order against it.

Mr. GOOD. The entire item is subject to a point of order.

Mr. McKEOWN. The entire item is?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then are not all the items for all these parks subject to a point of order?

I want to say to the gentleman in reference to this park, after what my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] has already said, that this is one of the beauty spots of the Southwest. It is one of the places that the Indian tribes of Oklahoma have where they go and camp and get the benefits of the medicinal waters in that park. I want to say to you that if people who have never enjoyed the benefits of this bromide water—and there are thousands of them in the United States—could only get the benefits of that water, there would be less nervous disease and nervous trouble in the country. That bromide water is a water which, when drunk and bathed in, will enable nervous people who are troubled with insomnia and can not sleep to so improve that in three or four days they can sleep with the peaceful slumber of a baby. It settles and quiets their nerves, and the water is in such great demand that the United States Government permits the allowance of only half a gallon to each applicant each day. The water is limited in quantity. It is said by those who have examined it to be better than the waters of Carlsbad, and yet, because it is away out in Oklahoma, away in the Southwest, where no money has been expended to advertise it and where the superintendents of parks have not visited it, and because it has not attracted the wealthy people of the country to go there, there is this talk about small appropriations and this talk about abandoning this park. Why, gentlemen, let me say to you that this park, while it is small and situated in a new State, can yet be enjoyed by any American citizen and can be made more enjoyable than some of these parks upon which you spend thousands of dollars, because there are no large concessions to hotel people and transportation people which require high charges, such as obtain in those better-known national parks which are visited only by the wealthy, who for temporary purposes are confining their migratory activities to the scenery afforded in the United States instead of going abroad.

This park is a place where the American Indian in his native country can go and camp in his tent and enjoy the water that nature has provided for him. These children of the forests and plains can not go there now, because there is not sufficient money to provide sanitary conditions for them to camp in this park. And, gentlemen, this appropriation ought not to be merely for $3,000 additional. It ought to be for $5,000 additional, because I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that you will not be able to do much with a team of mules on the $3,000 that is provided here.

Sometimes here in this House I have heard some Members who are not familiar with the great West suggest that the United States Government ought to just give the West its public lands, and all these things, in order to get rid of them; that they are so much of a burden. Let me remind some of these gentlemen that the State of Oklahoma in 1917 was second in the American Union in the payment of excess-profits taxes into the Treasury of the United States. I want to say that in justice to my State. Gentlemen, I hope you will give this matter your careful consideration, and that you will give this little allowance that they have asked down there, that will do so much benefit and so much good to the people of that section of the country.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation and offer the following amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. GOOD for the amendment offered by Mr. HARRELD:

"Platt National Park, Okla.: Pursuant to the authority conveyed in section 64 of the act approved July 1, 1902 (Stats. L., vol. 32, p. 656), all of the land comprising the Platt National Park in the State of Oklahoma is transferred and title thereto vested in the State of Oklahoma.

"If the State of Oklahoma shall fail or refuse to accept the Platt National Park as herein authorized to be conveyed to it from the United States, the same shall be appraised and sold either by sealed proposals for the purchase of the same or by public auction after advertisement of the sale for such time as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the public interest may require, the proceeds of such sale, after payment therefrom of the expenses of making the same, to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, then I will make the point of order. It is clearly legislation, and subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois just what part of the amendment his point of order is directed against?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Against all of it. The whole amendment is legislation and nothing else. Whether the original item in the bill is subject to a point of order or not, I do not undertake to say. I do not know. I do not recall. But that is only for administration of the park. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] was only in reference to the administration of the park. That is an appropriation, not legislation. It may be an appropriation not authorized by law. That has nothing to do with the question; but this amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa is legislation and nothing but legislation.

Mr. GOOD. I think there is no question but what it is legislation. It is legislation under the Holman rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no.

Mr. GOOD. It is legislation to carry out the legislation that created the national parks. The section of the statute referred to in the amendment, the statute creating this park approved July 1, 1902, carries the following provision:

Provided, however, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed or held to commit the Government of the United States to any expenditure of money upon said land or the improvement thereof except as provided for herein, it being the intention of this provision that in the future the lands and improvements therein mentioned shall be conveyed by the United States to such territorial or State organization as may exist at the time when the conveyance is made.

Keeping that matter in mind, keeping in mind the statement of Mr. Mather that this was a park visited in the main by the people of Sulphur, that it was a local park, and when it was ceded to the National Government by the two tribes of Indians who owned the land—not a strip of land 4 miles by 6, as the gentleman from Oklahoma states, but a little over one section of land—it carried the express provision that the Government only took title to it until such time as the State of Oklahoma should take it back. The amendment which I have offered is in line with the provisions carried in that provision of law. The committee were perfectly willing to let the matter rest where it was and to give for this park every penny that the director had asked for simply as a maintenance proposition while the Government was holding title to the park for the town of Sulphur. But now when it comes to improving this park and putting on other additional improvements to land that we simply hold in trust, to a park that is not national in any sense of the word and can not be made national, it seems to me stretching the authority a good deal to ask us to appropriate money for permanent improvements for that kind of a tract of land.

Mr. HARRELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARRELD. I will ask the gentleman if he did not get a letter from Mr. Mather, the park commissioner, asking that $5,200 should be appropriated for this purpose?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and Mr. Mather said before the committee that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD] had been to see him and wanted him to make another estimate, and he said if it was the desire of the committee to have him increase his estimate he would increase it; but the Committee on Appropriations were not asking anyone to increase his estimate. Here is a letter, and I want the Members to hear the reading of it and see if there is a Member here who would act favorably to increase this appropriation over the amount estimated on this kind of a statement.

This is the letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, NATIONAL PARK SERVICE,
Washington, April 9, 1920.

Hon. JAMES W. GOOD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. GOOD: I have just received a letter from Hon. J. W. HARRELD, of Oklahoma, in which he refers to a recent hearing which the Committee on Appropriations accorded him on the question of an appropriation for Platt National Park additional to the estimate of $6,000 submitted by the Interior Department. Mr. HARRELD feels that as a result of his presentation the committee is interested.

Of course, in view of my conversation with you several weeks ago, I do not see how I could consistently ask the Secretary to submit a formal supplemental estimate at this time, but I would add that if the committee feels disposed to act favorably on the additional sum of $5,200 proposed by Mr. HARRELD, the National Park Service will be able to use it to very good advantage in the betterment of the park in the following manner:

Purchase of mules, feeds, etc	$1,500
Purchase of garden and other small tools	605
Installing toilets and connecting with sewer in auto camp grounds	2,600
Repairing existing buildings in park	1,095
	5,200

Very truly, yours,

STEPHEN T. MATHER, Director.

Anyone who knows Mr. Mather knows that he was not asking for any more than $6,000, which the committee granted him. Anyone that knows him and knows the wonderful service he has given to the Government in building up the national-park system, knows that Mr. Mather's heart was not in any proposal that would take out of the Treasury of the United States $5,200 for this purpose. It seems to me the amendment I have offered is within the Holman rule. It is to carry out a certain proposal when the park was taken over, and that is to reconvey it to the State.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the President or the Secretary of the Interior recommended anything like the proposal in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GOOD. I think not.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman from Iowa has never visited this park?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; I never knew that the park existed until recently. I do remember some discussion on the floor of the House, but I do not think many Members in the Chamber know anything about the park. It is a State park. In my town we have a much larger park called Beaver Park, but I do not suppose that gentlemen have heard of it. We spend four or five times as much as the Government spends on this park.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman's substitute is something that he offers of his own motion, without the recommendation from any official of the Government?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the same as the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Only my amendment is made in conformity with the statute that made provision for the taking of this park from these two tribes of Indians, or took the title to it, and which provided that nothing in the act should bind the Government to pay out any money for improvements. By this amendment I eliminate the $6,000. The State ought to have the park if it is such a beautiful park and so great an attraction. The State ought to take some pride in it and ought to be willing to take the park back and make it a great State park.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa admittedly contains provisions of legislation. The gentleman from Iowa says, first, that it is in order because the legislative provision is in accordance with the proviso in the act creating the national park, which provided—

That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to commit the Government of the United States to any expenditure of money on said plans of improvement therefor, except as provided herein, it being the intention of this provision that in the future the land and improvements herein mentioned shall be conveyed by the United States to such Territory, State, or organization as may exist at the time said conveyance is made.

That provision seems to the Chair to contemplate that legislation will at some time be had in accordance with this policy. But the mere fact that it contemplates legislation does not remove or change the character of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa as legislation, but confirms the Chair's opinion that the amendment is legislation.

The gentleman from Iowa also contends that the provision is in order under the Holman rule. If the first portion of the amendment were in order under the Holman rule the second portion is clearly not in order under the Holman rule, and under the rule which is to the effect that if any portion of an amendment is subject to a point of order the whole amendment is subject to a point of order, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GOOD) there were 37 ayes and 14 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rocky Mountain National Park, Colo.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, $20,000.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 112, line 12, strike out the figures "$20,000" and insert "$40,000."

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is with a good deal of reluctance that I present for your consideration this amendment to this appropriation bill. I sympathize deeply with the policy of the committee in its attitude in reducing appropriations for public expenditure in this bill. I think though, that this can be carried sometimes to a point where great injustice will be done. I believe that this is specially true with reference to the appropriation for the Rocky Mountain National Park carried in this bill and which the amendment I offer seeks to remedy.

Those of you who have read the hearings and know the appropriations that have been made for the several parks will recognize that the appropriation for this park is double the amount of the previous appropriations made for this park for the past five years, and they may infer that that is generous treatment by the committee in the consideration of this park.

I feel that it is necessary to say that that is not the fact, and state some of the ancient history in regard to this park. This Rocky Mountain National Park has an area of 254,000 acres in the central part of the United States, as I will show from a very poor map which I have here which I ask Members to look at. It is given this year $20,000 in order that the park service may make the park one of the most beautiful in the country, one which has been visited by more people than any other national park belonging to the Government. Last year there were in attendance on this park 169,402 people. That number registered in the park. The Mount Rainier National Park is given an appropriation of $40,000. I do not think that is asking too much or that they receive too much, and yet in view of the fact that their area is only about 200,000 acres and our park far exceeds that amount and the number of people visiting the Rocky Mountain National Park so largely exceeding the number visiting Mount Rainier National Park, we do not think it is too much to ask that we have $40,000 for this park.

This park was created in 1915, and under the provisions of the act it was provided that no appropriation in excess of $10,000 should be made for its maintenance without special authorization of Congress. We of the West have to thank very largely for his aid in helping get this bill enacted into law the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] who has in a very forceful way this morning set forth the appreciation he has for national parks as national assets. He believes in their improvement. If this park is to be accessible to the people, and if the people are to receive benefits from it, it is necessary that it be developed in the way of trails and roads. With the $10,000 limitation it is impossible to very much more than pay the expense of the supervisor and the various rangers. Very little is left with which to make improvements in the park. After coming here and recognizing this condition, I sought for three terms to get this inhibition removed. I succeeded only last year in having this removed, so that for five years we have had an appropriation of only $10,000. In view of that I felt completely justified, in view of the estimates presented by the Director of the Forest Service for an appropriation of $150,000 which he deemed necessary to make this accessible to the people, to come before you at this time and ask for a small increase of $20,000, or a total appropriation of $40,000.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MADDEN). The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. What has been appropriated for this park heretofore?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Ten thousand dollars a year.

Mr. CANNON. Nothing over that?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Nothing over that.

Mr. CANNON. And the bill carries $20,000.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes. sir.

Mr. CANNON. And the gentleman seeks to make that $40,000?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And we are all for a reduction of expenditures in appropriations.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I have been trying to explain that to the gentleman. I sympathize, as he does, with the efforts of the committee to reduce appropriations, but I sometimes think, and in this case I think, it is false economy for the Government to fail to make this park accessible to the people who desire to visit it. As I stated, more people visited this park last year than visited any other park which we have, and yet there are no roads there. We get no income from it. Under the provisions of the bill creating this park, it was the first park that was discriminated against in that respect. It was stated in the bill that no receipts from the park should be used in connection with its maintenance, and that the receipts should be covered into the Treasury of the United States. That was the first park that had that provision in respect to it. It is true that since June, 1917, there has been a provision of legislation that makes that apply to all parks, so that the receipts from all of them are now covered into the Treasury of the United States.

There is no automobile charge for entrance into the Rocky Mountain National Park, as is the case with Mount Rainier. The receipts from Mount Rainier last year were something like $20,000, while the receipts from the Rocky Mountain National Park were only $300. The park service can not consistently charge an entrance fee from automobiles where the Government has failed to build any roads that are fit to be used by them. For that reason there have been no receipts, or appreciably none, that are covered into the Treasury of the United States. I do not desire to delay the passage of this bill, and I appeal to you in the interest of what I think is good economy, that the park service be given an opportunity to expend at least this much during the present year in making this park accessible to all of the people.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Will not the gentleman call attention to the fact that this park by its geographical location is far more accessible to the rest of the country, and especially to the Middle West and the Southwest, than a park located on the Pacific coast—at the same time not wishing to indicate that those parks should not have the appropriations that are made for them?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is true. It is almost in the center, geographically, of the whole country. I have heard it said that this is a Denver park. I want to disabuse anyone of that idea. This map shows the Rocky Mountain National Park, and it will be seen that Denver is 65 or 70 miles distant from it. Colorado is interested in the development of the park and is aiding to make this park accessible. This year the legislature of that State appropriated $60,000 for the completion of the Fall River Road, which is a highway running clear through to the west line of the park, and previously had spent much more, and the counties of Boulder and Larimer have, at great expense, built splendid roads leading into the park.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] has presented the need of this additional appropriation so thoroughly that it leaves very little to say. I think the House ought to bear in mind the point he makes as to the accessibility of this park. The Government gets or could get a large amount of fees from the automobile licenses that enter this park. This is the first park in the United States that is encountered when people go west. It is so easily accessible to everyone that nearly everyone goes there. The counties and the State have built fine roads to the park, and consequently many thousands of automobiles do go there and many thousands more would go there and go through the park and over to Grand Lake and other wonderful scenery on the opposite side of the main range of the Rocky Mountains if the Government would aid some in building additional and better roads and trails and more accommodations. Additional money is needed also to protect the park, to guard the scenery, to regulate traffic, and take care of the people who go there, to build more garages to care for the traveling public. It is purely along the public-health and public-spirited line the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has so eloquently expressed that we ought to encourage the outdoor recreation of the American people. The American people ought to see and become acquainted with the marvelous scenery of our own country.

It would make them more contented and better citizens, and as this is one of the very best and grandest, as well as the most accessible, park there is in the United States, Congress ought to spend whatever sum is necessary to make it as nearly as possible accessible to all the traveling public, with suitable care and accommodations for them.

Mr. LAYTON. What about the people who do not travel?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Of course, there are unfortunately many thousands of people who can not visit this or any of the other national parks of the West. I wish everybody in the United States could see those parks. But if they are made as accessible as possible, that will encourage people to go there, and everyone who goes west can and should visit this park.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. If I may suggest to the gentleman, in one day's trip he will see cars—small cars, inexpensive cars, flivvers—from Oklahoma, Nebraska, Iowa, and even from the gentleman's own State, if he goes out there——

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, it would not make any difference if every automobile registered in the State of Delaware were to go to that national park. Under the present circumstances of the Treasury of the United States I do not believe in undertaking increased expenditures where they can be put off for a time. I do not wish to be placed in the category of those who do not appreciate the splendid heritage the country possesses in the national parks, comprising natural scenery unsurpassed anywhere in the world, but at this time I desire to go on record as opposing for the present any appropriation which is not absolutely necessary for the public welfare. When the national finances are stabilized and taxation reduced, when our income exceeds our expenditures, no one will vote more heartily or with greater appreciation for such matters as are now before us than I, but at this hour economy is an imperative necessity, or the consequences will be disasterous to the whole country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am as much in favor of economy as anyone and I always vote that way. There is a large volume of talk about economy in this House and very little practicing of it. But this appropriation is a matter of business economy. If the park was properly improved, there would be thousands more automobiles going there every year, and the Government might charge a small entrance fee and get all this money back, and I hope this amendment will he agreed to.

Mr. LAYTON. Will this increase in the expenditures increase the revenues?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. Because it will properly take care of the people and encourage many more of them to go there. The park accommodation is in a very congested condition now. There are thousands and tens of thousands of cars going into that park every year. I do not know what the revenues are, but they could be made very large.

Mr. LAYTON. What are the receipts?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My colleague [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] can tell that.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. What is the question?

Mr. LAYTON. What are the latest receipts from this park?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Why, they are only nominal now, only amounting to $307, because they did not charge for automobile licenses because——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. But when they can build proper trails and roads and other developments they can charge a reasonable fee and derive a large revenue from it if that policy is deemed advisable.

Mr. LAYTON. They are going to spend $40,000 to get $300?

Mr. VAILE. They are going to spend this money to give health to the American people, the same way as in the gentleman's own State, not to get $300.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Let me say a word about the receipt business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. I move to strike out a few words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield the gentleman a couple of minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are five minutes additional remaining.

Mr. GOOD. I am asking for recognition, and I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the Rocky Mountain National Park, to begin with, is a different kind of park from that we have been talking about in Oklahoma. This park is five times as big as the District of Columbia. It contain 358 square miles. It was taken over by the National Government about four or five years ago. The park has never had more than $10,000 a year, not enough money to develop it. You can not charge automobile fees or automobile licenses unless you have roads for them to go over. The Mount Rainier National Park in two years cost the United States Government $57,100 and took in in automobile fees and other receipts $39,475. The Mount Rainier National Park only had last year 55,232 people visit it, and the Rocky Mountain National Park had 169,492 people to visit it. I think as a permanent policy we ought not to try to make our park self-sustaining. But during the period of development we are entitled to charge something to the people who come in cars in order that the national parks may be developed more rapidly. The Rocky Mountain National Park is so close to the center of the country that we have thousands of cars from Texas, Oklahoma, Iowa, Kansas, and near-by States. If you gentlemen from Texas and Oklahoma would campaign in it, you would find many of your voters there and the climate much more comfortable than in your own States. We need this money, and in a few years this Government will get the money back. We had 33,000 automobiles in the Rocky Mountain Park last year. By charging $2 apiece, which could be done if anything had been done by the United States Government to help develop this park, we would have had $66,000 from that source, so by spending a little money we might make a revenue producer of that magnificent park. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a great national park, comprising, as the gentleman says, something like 254,000 acres, and a great many people visit the park, and the reason why the park does not have more revenue than $307 a year is because we have not developed the roads and trails in the park. This appropriation is just twice the appropriation for the current year and it will enable them to start a little on their work. The committee was not unmindful of the fact that in the near future considerable development work will be necessary in this park. We will be compelled to build some roads through this park, which is a wonderful park, but under present conditions the committee felt that it would be compelled to treat this park just as it treated the other national parks and practically confine the work to maintenance, and therefore it has carried in this bill $20,000, which is just twice the appropriation of former years, and I sincerely hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. TIMBERLAKE) there were—ayes 14, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yosemite National Park, Calif.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including not exceeding $1,800 for purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $275,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking why the form of all these appropriations is changed this year. Is it on account of some technical ruling?

Mr. GOOD. No; but to make them uniform. Heretofore there has been a difference in the phraseology, and it seemed to the committee that inasmuch as these appropriations are for similar objects, the only difference being expenditures in different parks, that the language carrying the appropriation should be uniform.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not think that the law heretofore has carried the words "administration" or "maintenance." It may in some one case——

Mr. GOOD. It has always been provided for and paid out of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand that. I am not criticizing the form, but I wondered whether there had been some technical ruling on the subject as to why the committee added those two words.

Mr. GOOD. I had not in mind the two words referred to; but they were not carried in this item, but in the Yellowstone appropriation; for instance, it is carried for administration and maintenance, and the committee felt, inasmuch as——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They were in one case, I think, maybe one other; but as a rule the language read before "for protection and improvement." Now it reads, "for administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement," and I just ask if this was caused by a ruling with reference to it or a desire to add language to the appropriation bill?

Mr. GOOD. No; the committee is not advised as to any ruling that would interfere because the money was used for administration and maintenance, and inasmuch as it was carried in the same items in this language the committee felt that as it was available for this purpose the language should be uniform.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Zion National Park, Utah: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, $2,500.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WELLING: Page 113, line 19, after the words "improvement," strike out "$2,500" and insert "$7,300."

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, the estimates furnished to the committee for the maintenance of this park for the next fiscal year amounted to $10,000, as follows: Salaries for chief ranger, rangers, clerk, $5,100; maintenance and repairs, $2,200; and construction of highways, $2,700. I believe the chairman of the committee, upon reflection, will feel that since this park has been established the appropriation for it ought to be increased above that which has been allowed in the past as a national monument. This park comprises an area of a little more than 70,000 acres, or about 113 square miles. From an archæological point of view it is one of the most interesting pieces of public land in America to-day. Along the perpendicular walls of this canyon gorge are the prehistoric dwelling places of the cliff dwellers of America. The scientists of the Smithsonian Institution and of almost every western university go into this region every year for the purpose of excavating in these important prehistoric ruins. Geologically, it is one of the most important scenic wonders of America. No increase has been given to this park over the amount heretofore granted to the national monument, and it seems to me that since it has been established as a national park some additional funds ought to be provided for its proper maintenance. I am not asking a cent, in accord with the views expressed by the distinguished chairman of this committee that the House at this time should not spend additional money on improvements in the national parks, but surely there ought to be given sufficient money for the police protection of the park and for the proper protection of these ancient ruins that have been found there. I sincerely hope the committee will adopt the amendment increasing the amount about $5,000.

This park is peculiarly a national institution. It does not belong to Salt Lake City, nor is it adjacent, as are many of our parks, to any great city. It lies on the main highway of what will soon be a direct route from the thickly settled area of the intermountain country to the northern rim of the Grand Canyon of the Colorado.

The State of Utah, recognizing the need and value of this great national recreation and educational center, has appropriated more than $200,000 to build a great highway to the gateway of the park, and the small amount asked for in this appropriation will barely police and care for the property of the Government.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, as we are just concluding the part of the bill relating to the national parks, it is an opportune time to call attention to the annual conclave of the Imperial Council of the Shriners, which is to be held in Portland, Oreg., on June 22, 23, and 24 of this year. It is opportune to do this because it is expected that many of the Shriners, in going to the council and returning, will visit our national parks. It is hoped that many of the Shriners will visit the wonderful Crater Lake Park in Oregon.

For several months I have had up the matter with the National Park Service of clearing the roads of snow leading to Crater Lake National Park in my district, so that the Shriners may view this wonderful phenomenon of nature. I have had assurance from Director Mather that the park service will do all in its power to clear the road of snow by the time the Shriners visit Portland, Oreg. I think the park service will be justified in going to every expense to afford the Nobles of this great order a view of this wonderful scene. They will return "boosters" of the National Park Service.

CRATER LAKE.

Crater Lake is situated in Klamath County, Oreg., in the southwestern corner of my district. It is a lake, cauldronlike and circular, 7,000 feet high, perched amid the peaks. Perpendicular sides of slaggy lava rise over a thousand feet from waters of indigo blue 6 miles across and 2,000 feet deep.

To the scientist, a mighty volcano collapsed within itself, Mount Mazama, 15,000 feet high, telescoped.

To the poet, "the sea of sapphire," "the sea of silence," "a lake of mystery."

To me, a shell hole of a war of worlds—who knows?

Could the great blind poet have seen this marvel ere his pen had Lucifer and his host of rebel angels—

Hurled headlong flaming from the ethereal sky,
With hideous ruin and combustion down—in Miltonic imagery here he'd have found the impact. [Loud applause.]

The Shriners will go to Crater Lake through Medford, in my colleague's [Mr. HAWLEY] district, or through Klamath Falls, in my district.

BEND.

After making the pilgrimage to Crater Lake the Shriners should go to Bend, in central Oregon, in my district. From Bend they will see the great amphitheater of hills which rise and radiate from the Columbia to the cardinal points. They will see how hill piles on hill. How the hills rise in the purple haze of twilight like billows suddenly stilled on the crest. They will see the rim of the amphitheater and horizon from central Oregon, pillared with a dozen lofty, eternal snow-capped peaks, once blazing beacons, now only reflecting above the dusk of the valleys from lofty eminences of snow and ice, the soft pink glow of setting sun, as the day drops into the westward waters of the Pacific. [Applause.]

These snow-capped peaks are our reservoirs, eternal, exhaustless in life-giving waters, in energy, and power.

COLUMBIA'S GORGE.

After seeing the mountains in their majesty from Bend the pilgrimage should continue to The Dalles through the Deschutes Canyon, so narrow that it might have been cut with a "saber stroke" of Mars. The Dalles, at the end of the old Oregon trail, is my home and birthplace. Here the Shriners will see where the great inland sea, which once covered eastern Oregon, Washington, and parts of Idaho, according to the geologists, broke through the barrier of the Cascades Range in some titanic convulsion of nature.

The Indian legend is that Mount Hood and Mount Adams, once espoused, engaged in a mighty marital combat, whose struggles broke the mountain barrier, and the inland sea disappeared through the gorge of the Columbia.

The Indian's awe even now bears witness to the tribe's tradition. From his canoe, as he glides through the Columbia's gorge, he sees the two mythical mates of a Miocene age, Hood and Adams, now hiding behind the towering hills, ever and anon, through favorable gaps in the gorge, stealing furtive peeps each at the other.

It may be so. Perhaps the Indian, "who sees God in the wind," witnessed some colossal cataclysm of nature. The surroundings bear evidence of the epochal. A broad river suddenly turns on edge at train speed, rushes through a gash in the lava flow. Palisades, a sheer thousand feet, dwarfing the Hudson's, rise from the water's edge. Giant causeways abound, dwarfing Erin's.

These are but few of the marvels of the mountains which we shall show unto the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. We expect few of the Shriners will ever leave our State. We shall hold them as willing, voluntary captives to the charms of where rolls the Oregon when they view these scenes, when they witness the billowy wheat fields of eastern Oregon and partake of the delicious Dalles cherry, the luscious Hood River strawberry, and the incomparable Hood River apple.

We know the visiting Nobles will exclaim with the poet, Joaquin Miller, who said the scenes a part of which I have feebly portrayed brought his love of song to the surface:

> See once these stately scenes, then roam no more;
> No more remains on earth to cultured eyes;
> The cataract comes down, a broken roar,
> The palisades defy approach, and rise
> Green moss'd and dripping to the clouded skies.
> The canyon thunders with its full of foam,
> And calls loud-mouth'd, and all the land defies;
> The mounts make fellowship and dwell at home
> In snowy brotherhood beneath their purpled dome.

All this, and even more than tongue can tell, awaits the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine on their pilgrimage to the hills of Oregon, "rock ribbed and ancient as the sun." [Loud applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, after the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Oregon on this wonderful park, it seems almost like dropping from the sublime to the ridiculous to commence to speak about Zion National Park, and yet the amendment before the House has to do with that park. Now, Zion National Park was a national monument until an act of Congress approved last November——

Mr. MADDEN. Zion is a little bit higher than the highest snow peak the gentleman was talking about, is it not?

Mr. GOOD. This is another Zion. This is Zion National Park out in Utah that I am discussing. For the current year there was an appropriation of $10,000 for national monuments. There are 10 of them. But by the act of Congress approved November 29, 1919, Zion was made a national park. Therefore the appropriations for national monuments would not be available longer for this park, and it was necessary to make an appropriation for the maintenance of this park. In 1919 they actually expended on this national monument $1,400. Now, it seemed to me that we were very liberal when we increased that appropriation to $2,500.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. Of course, in other national parks we have expended as much as $275,000.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. WELLING. And for this national park we are not asking a cent for roads, or improvements of that sort, but there were 10,000 or 12,000 people who visited the park area last year. It is away from any city two or three hundred miles. It needs police protection, and it is important, it seems to me, in view of the increased number of visitors that will be there next year, to provide this police protection.

Mr. GOOD. There are very few visitors to that park.

Mr. WELLING. I know there were not very many visitors to the park last year, but there will be a great many this year.

Mr. GOOD. I want to call attention to this fact: There is the Rocky Mountain National Park. When we first commenced to make appropriations for it in 1915, the first appropriation for that park of 254,000 acres was only $3,000, and I think we are commencing very liberally in the appropriations for this park, especially at this time, when everything that is done in the way of improvements costs so much money. It was only intended to give it police protection and to postpone until the future and to a more normal condition the appropriation for improvements.

Mr. WELLING. The amount asked is $10,000, to $2,200 of which was to be for road improvement. I sympathize with the purpose of the gentleman, and I have purposely avoided asking for any money at all for improvements but just enough to give the necessary police protection.

Mr. GOOD. The department asked for $150,000 for the Rocky Mountain Park, but we gave them only $20,000, and with reference to this item under the circumstances I think the committee has done all that could be expected at this time.

Mr. CANNON. Is this park a recent creation, or has it stood there for all the ages?

Mr. GOOD. It was accepted as a national park by the act approved last November.

Mr. CANNON. But the scenery was there all the time, was it not?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. Dating from Adam?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, these centers of recreation in the mountain regions are very interesting and it is a very nice thing for people to go to them and drink in the rare atmosphere that they boast of.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is there anything else that we have to drink?

Mr. MADDEN. That is about all. [Laughter.] But I want to call attention to the fact that while these men from those regions are asking increased appropriations that are not necessary at all, in every other section of the country where we have the business of the country to conduct we are endeavoring to assist in reducing appropriations in order that we may be able to keep the expenses of the Government within the revenues.

Take the Postal Service, for example. All the great cities of the United States have inadequate postal facilities, and the people in every one of these cities are clamoring for appropriations for added facilities, and they are justified in clamoring for such appropriations.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman has just said that the people in the neighborhood where business is conducted and where there are business activities are clamoring for increased appropriations for the postal men. Am I right?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no. I said for postal facilities—buildings and such things. We are asking also for increased salaries for the men, but we will cut that out of the present discussion.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why cut it out?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield just now. I just wanted to illustrate——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman answer one inquiry?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I will answer an inquiry.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Then why does the gentleman——

Mr. MADDEN. I wanted to make a statement, but I will let the gentleman ask the question?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why does the gentleman object?

Mr. MADDEN. I decline to yield for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to go on and make the statement that I was going to make.

These people who have been willing to make the sacrifice are getting along without the necessary facilities in order to help the country out of the national embarrassment which the country finds itself in; and yet these men coming from the mountain districts are demanding more money for playgrounds. We are compelled in the great city of Chicago and in all the other great cities of the United States to distribute the mail on the sidewalks because we have not the necessary building facilities to enable us to do the work as it ought to be done, and yet these sections of the country that pay no part of the great expenses of the Government send Representatives here who insist upon increased appropriations for things that are not necessary.

Now, I think that the men who are asking for these appropriations ought to begin to realize that they are a part of the United States and that if a panic comes as the result of the extravagant waste of public money, their people will realize it just as quickly as anybody else and they will suffer with the rest of us. Now, if we are willing to forego expenditures in our sections of the country, where we pay the bills—and these expenses are justified for legitimate Government reasons—these men ought to be willing to forego the right to demand appropriations for reasons that are not justified; and for one I propose to stand here in opposition, now and in the future, to all such appropriations as are demanded by these men from the Rocky Mountain districts for park purposes while the business of the country is embarrassed because of the inability of the Government to supply the needs, because it is believed that the people are already overburdened with taxation.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds passed a resolution not long since to the effect that no public-building bill should be considered in this Congress, because they believed that the Government can not afford to make the appropriation. Now, everybody will agree that in all the great business centers of the country we need buildings in which to transact the public business, and the people there can not understand why they do not get them. When they are told about it they are glad to conform to the conditions in order to help out the situation. We want these men in these sparsely settled regions where there is nothing but ice and snow, as the gentleman from Oregon

[Mr. SINNOTT] has just told you, with which to regale the men who are about to visit that section of the country, to be sufficiently patriotic to join us in an effort to economize in order that the people of the country may be released from the burdens that are placed upon their backs by this excessive taxation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLACK. I have listened with a great deal of interest and entire approval to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for economy in Government expenditures. In the splendid argument that he made he referred to the condition of the Postal Service and to the need for increased facilities. While the gentleman was making his eloquent remarks I was forcibly reminded that there is now before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads what is known as the Fess bill, which has for its object the repealing of the third and fourth year rates of the zone postal law and the relieving of publishers whose publications are now being carried through the mails at much less than the actual cost of carrying them. Even at the maximum of rates provided in the present law the Government will be a heavy loser in the transportation of second-class mail matter.

The commission, headed by the distinguished jurist, Associate Justice Hughes, which a few years ago made a very exhaustive investigation of the cost of carrying second-class mail matter, reported to the Congress that it cost 5¼ cents a pound to transport and distribute this class of mail matter, not including certain charges which were not allocated. It is admitted that the weight of second-class mail matter is more than a billion pounds a year, and that makes an annual cost to the Postal Service, conservatively estimated, of $55,000,000, exclusive of certain overhead expenses. The rates at present in force produced only about $15,000,000 the first year, will produce about $22,000,000 the second year, $27,000,000 the third year, and $32,000,000 the fourth year, when they reach the peak of cost and remain permanent at that figure. That will leave us a loss on the carriage and distributing cost of carrying every pound of second-class matter. It will be a very substantial loss at that. Yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], the distinguished economist of the Republican side of the House, is leading the fight to report out a bill that would stop these rates at the second year and relieve publishers like the Curtis Publishing Co., whose publications are being carried through the mails at an estimated loss of at least $4,000,000 a year to the Government. Mr. John C. Koons, in his testimony before the House Post Office Committee, stated some time ago that every issue of the Saturday Evening Post, even under the present rates, caused a loss to the Government of the United States of $150,000. I have no fight to make on the Saturday Evening Post, but I am not in favor of the Government carrying it at such a heavy loss.

I agree that the postal employees ought to have better salaries and better wages, and I am wondering if the steering committee on the Republican side of the House are going to bring out a bill that will relieve the millionaire publishers instead of relieving the postal employees. If that is what you gentlemen are preparing to do, then we on this side of the House are ready to meet the issue. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. WELLING].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment as a new paragraph, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKEOWN: Page 113, line 19, after the figures "$2,500," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"That no sum appropriated herein for national parks shall be available for use of any park wherein any hotel or transportation company is permitted to charge unreasonable rates for accommodations."

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee to debate this amendment. It has come to my attention that in some of these parks the rates are so prohibitive that nobody except the ultra rich can stop there. These parks are for the accommodation of the entire public of the United States, and men of moderate means ought to be permitted to have some of the accommodations that go along with the beauties of the national parks.

Mr. CANNON. Are the rates fixed by the present law?

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand they are fixed by regulation.

Mr. CANNON. Then before they could use any of this money we would have to get somebody to determine what are reasonable rates, and before that could be done I suppose the season would pass by.

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman would not be in favor of permitting some hotel company or transportation company to charge unreasonable rates?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all; but we have no machinery to ascertain what is provided in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand the Secretary of the Interior is charged with the duty of fixing the rate, and he ought not to permit them to charge unreasonable rates. If they are doing it, it ought to be called to his attention.

Mr. GOOD. I want to say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] that I have a good deal of confidence in the Secretary of the Interior. It is not only his right to fix these rates, but the law requires that he shall fix reasonable rates. I think we have a very able Secretary of the Interior, and I think we have one of the best and ablest park commissioners we have ever had.

Mr. McKEOWN. I agree to that part of it.

Mr. GOOD. And I am willing that they shall administer the law as it is upon the statute books. That law simply provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe reasonable rates. It has not been brought to the attention of the committee that any rates were unreasonable. There has been complaint that in order to bring about good accommodations, where we once had poor accommodations, where we had a whole lot of so-called competition and no service, a schedule of rates was fixed and a concession was given to one person, giving him the right to do certain things in the park and to perform certain services there. The service has been very greatly improved, but the cost of the service has not increased at all in comparison with the increased cost of labor.

Mr. McKEOWN. There has been considerable complaint about some of the charges in some of the western parks. Some people say they are absolutely prohibitive, and this amendment will regulate that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter members of the Board of United States General Appraisers may be allowed not to exceed $7 per diem for expenses of subsistence actually incurred while traveling or engaged on official business at places other than the city of New York.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I notice that it provides $7 per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence. My recollection is that the law provides $5.

Mr. GOOD. That is correct. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just a moment while I make a statement?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This provision applies to the Board of General Appraisers, of whom there are nine. The gentleman will recollect that a former and esteemed colleague of ours is a member of that board. This board of appraisers and the attorneys who appear before them are required to make trips over the country for the purpose of hearing contested customs cases. Their duties take them to the larger cities. They do not visit any city except the larger cities.

The statement is made, and I am sure borne out by the facts, that it is absolutely impossible for them to get even a room in a hotel in the large cities for less than the amount of the per diem now allowed. Seven dollars would not pay the entire expense. As a matter of fact, the Board of General Appraisers think they ought to have the same per diem allowance as the Federal judges who hold court in the large cities. But the committee decided to increase it $2, which, as I say, is not sufficient to pay all the expenses.

Mr. BLACK. I will state that the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads have had substantially the same complaint about the per diem allowance for post-office inspectors who do most of their work in the large cities. Probably we might have the same complaint all along the line. It seems to me that the equitable thing to do, if we are to increase the per diem allowance, is to take up the whole subject and provide for it by proper legislation.

I do not know any better paid officials in the Government service than this Board of General Appraisers. I know of some Government servants that are not nearly so well paid who are meeting worse difficulties that these officials.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman realizes that as a matter of fact the per diem which is provided for this board presents a different proposition from the per diem allowed for those who visit the smaller towns, where hotel expenses are not so great.

Mr. BLACK. I had that in mind. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman's point of order goes to the whole paragraph?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, referees, and trustees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice or the Department of State as may be directed by the Attorney General; hire of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, including not to exceed $200,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government, and including a director of the Bureau of Investigation at not exceeding $7,500 per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $2,000,000: Provided, That for the purpose of executing the duties for which provision is made by this appropriation, the Attorney General is authorized to appoint officials who shall be designated "special agents of the Department of Justice," and who shall be vested with the authority necessary for the execution of such duties: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for advances to be made by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice when authorized and approved by the Attorney General, the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso beginning on line 18, page 119.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of a point of order is made, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make an inquiry relative to this service. As I understand, there is another department of the Government which has for its purpose the same work as this Bureau of Investigation. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why it is that all of these departments can not be put under one division? Is it not true that a goodly part of these investigations are duplications?

Mr. GOOD. No; I do not think so. I suppose the gentleman refers to the department under the Treasury. Now, the department under the Treasury has to do with the question of counterfeiting, and that alone, practically. I think the only other function that that department performs is to furnish police protection for the President. This department is altogether different. It is true they carry on a detective service, but in this case they investigate practically all crimes committed against the United States except that of counterfeiting, and that is left to the Department of the Treasury, which confines its activities to that alone.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true that the Treasury Department does go outside of counterfeiting, and is it not true that before a prosecution is made it must be put up to an investigation by the Attorney General's office? Does it not finally come back to the Department of Justice to determine whether or not a crime has been committed?

Mr. GOOD. No; I think there is very little duplication. It is true that in the Customs Service there is some work carried on by the Treasury Department to prevent fraud against the Government. This is quite a different thing. This has to do with practically all of the criminal statutes of the United States.

Mr. DOWELL. They also have charge of investigating the same character of work that is carried on in the Treasury Department. For instance, if a crime is committed in counterfeiting, an investigation is or may be carried on by the Department of Justice in order to ascertain whether or not the crime has actually been committed.

Mr. GOOD. No; I think that is carried on by the Treasury Department.

Mr. DOWELL. My inquiry of the gentleman is whether or not it is not possible to put all this under one head so that the investigations may be made from one source instead of from different sources.

Mr. GOOD. I think that would be all right if there was any duplication, but if there is any duplication at all it is a very minor duplication. As I understand, the persons employed by Mr. Moran, of the Treasury Department, are only to make investigations along the line of counterfeiting and fraud on the Customs Service. These persons employed by the Attorney General's department do not give their attention to those particular crimes, and the Attorney General only takes up the work when his office is called upon to prosecute, and then I think he accepts the findings and work of the Secret Service men.

Mr. DOWELL. In view of the fact that the Department of Justice must finally handle the case, would it not be better that all investigations should be made by the Department of Justice?

Mr. GOOD. In many cases investigations do not go to the extent of prosecution. They go to the extent sometimes of preventing crimes. If a person has been apprehended, then the work is taken over by the Attorney General, and the evidence is turned over to him, and I doubt very much if there is any lost motion in this.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In the proviso the Attorney General is authorized to appoint officials who shall be designated "special agents of the Department of Justice." How are these officials now designated?

Mr. GOOD. These officials are known as operators, and without a special designation. As I recall, the statement was made that they did not have the authority to carry firearms. A person who is designated as a special agent of the Department of Justice as provided in the paragraph under the law would be authorized to carry firearms. The Attorney General feels that these persons should be protected; that they should go out with some protection in the way of firearms. That was the reason for including this provision.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This provision says "and who shall be vested with the authority necessary for the execution of such duties." I do not know just what "such duties" may be, but by general terms to give employees of the Government authority to do anything they please is making it pretty broad.

Mr. GOOD. The Attorney General has this to say:

Mr. PALMER. Under the statutes as they now exist, my understanding is that the special agents have no status whatsoever. It is a title that has been given under the administration of the department, and as an instance of that, an agent has no authority to carry a firearm. It is only by the courtesy of the States that they are allowed to carry any firearms. If a State official, a sheriff or any other State official, wants to prosecute one of the agents of our department, he can do so for carrying a concealed weapon. It is only in the District here that they are allowed to carry one, and this clause was inserted with that in view—to give them an official status and the same rank as a Secret Service operator under the Treasury Department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The fact is that the country is burdened with special agents of various departments, and when a man goes into a place seeking to exercise some authority which, perhaps, he ought not to exercise, and presents a card as special agent of the Department of Justice, and says that Congress has given him all of the authority he needs for the execution of any duty that he chooses to attempt to perform, it resolves itself into nothing more than a method of intimidation.

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, it has been suggested that some of these secret agents in New York City have been putting prisoners through the third degree even more cruel than anything heretofore experienced in the city of New York. I wonder if "such duties" would include the third degree.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This would give them all of the authority they thought was necessary for the execution of any duties that the Department of Justice chose to give them to perform, apparently without any limitation. It is the broadest language that I recall in any statutory provision of law. I am personally rather tired of the complaints, whether they be justified or not, of so many people about the constant visits they have from various special agents of the different departments of the Government.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have given the gentleman all of the light that I have on the subject, and when the Attorney General asked for this, in view of the very critical situation throughout the country at the present time, the committee did not feel warranted in declining to give that authority.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. While, perhaps, the Attorney General may be justified in all that he asks, I am not in favor of letting agents of the Department of Justice arrest anyone they please on any kind of a suspicion that they may have, and say that Congress has given them authority to do it. They probably would not arrest the gentleman from Iowa and probably not myself, although it is not unlikely that they might summon either one of us and put us under examination. I think it would be well to have this matter considered in the Senate. If the Senate choose to insert it, then it can be considered in conference, where probably it will get more investigation than it would if the item went into the bill to the Senate. I make the point of order against the proviso, beginning on line 18 and ending with line 23, page 119.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the proviso in line 18 and ending with line 23, on page 119. The Chair thinks the proviso is legislation and sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "further," after the word "Provided," in line 23, page 119.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 23, page 119, strike out the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill, on line 17, page 119, by striking out "$2,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Page 119, line 17, strike out the figures "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,500,000."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if it be adopted, will carry for the next year the appropriation now made for the Department of Justice for the purpose set forth in this paragraph, lacking $100,000. In other words, the appropriation for the current year carries for the detection and prosecution of crime the sum of $2,600,000. When the estimates were submitted the Department of Justice asked for $3,500,000 for that purpose. When the Attorney General appeared before the committee he stated that he realized the necessity for economy and that he was anxious himself to see economy practiced. Therefore, he voluntarily withdrew from his estimates $1,000,000, and stated that if the Congress would give him $2,500,000 for the next year he hoped to be able to get along. He now has a force or organization based on an expenditure at the rate of $2,600,000 per year. If you adopt the provision carried in the bill, then you will reduce the organization on July 1 by the sum of $500,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. What is the force of the Department of Justice now, in number?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I could not tell the gentleman that without referring to the hearings. I will look it up and let the gentleman know later. As has been stated, this sum is for the detection and prosecution of all crimes under the United States statutes. The Attorney General says that at least 40 per cent of the sum will be used in the campaign against the alien radicals and the anarchists in this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What is to be gained by employing a large number of special agents to make arrests on information and belief against aliens suspected of violating the anarchistic clauses of the immigration laws when we are unable to deport them?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It has a lot to do with it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Department of Justice, as the gentleman knows, has nothing to do with the decision of those cases, and I submit that merely because another department has failed, if that be the case, to take action on the cases that are put up to it, is no reason why we should deny to the Department of Justice the amount necessary to run down these radicals and anarchists and put them up to the proper party for decision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Permit me to put a proposition to the gentleman: We want the laws sustained, and while I have no desire to criticize one department more than another—or, in fact, any department—yet if we must do it we may as well make the criticism. The overloading of the jails is never good. Now, the organizer of these Department of Justice raids, if he had thought about it a minute, would have known that the number of arrests would be beyond the capacity of another department of the Government to quickly take up and investigate the arrests.

If we have too many special agents employed for the purpose of probing and finding out, they will keep on making those arrests, and aliens will be put into jail much faster than the Immigration Service can take care of them. The increase of appropriation is proposed in the wrong place. Let the sum be appropriated for additional immigration inspectors, who can prepare cases and evidence against revolutionary aliens.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, if the Department of Justice through its special agents is engaged in arresting those who are guilty of an infraction of our laws or inciting rebellion or undertaking to injure the Government or seeking to destroy it by force and violence, merely because some other department is not able to proceed as rapidly as it ought possibly to do——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Or as rapidly as arrests are made.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Or as rapidly as the guilty parties are detected and arrested, that is no reason why we should deny the Department of Justice the full complement of investigators necessary to make those investigations. You would not stop the running down and arresting of thieves or murderers merely because the courts could not dispose of the cases as rapidly as they were brought before them. Why make a distinction in the case of any violators of the law? Now, what are you doing by reducing this appropriation? You are serving notice upon the alien radicals and anarchists of this country who would use force and violence that we are reducing the organization of the Department of Justice, which was formed for the purpose of running them down and bringing them to book and sending them back to where they belong in the event they are found guilty. I do not think this Congress can afford at this particular time to take the position of cutting the organization of the Department of Justice 20 per cent during the next fiscal year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But notice to that effect has been served both through acts of the Department of Labor and through certain——

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I remember to have noticed a statement in the Washington papers quoting the gentleman himself, as chairman of the Committee on Immigration, in a hearing before the Committee on Rules, as very highly commending the Department of Justice for all that had been done, and stating——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask that the gentleman from Tennessee have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, if he commends what it has done up to this time, it seems to me that he must agree that when we undertake to cut down the appropriations beginning July 1 and reduce that organization we are doing something that we ought not to do, for we are depriving the Attorney General of the machinery necessary to carry out the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, what I said the other day before the Rules Committee was that in my opinion the Department of Justice had performed a great service in the United States in breaking up a conspiracy. Now, we have had some rulings since the arrests were made. We find, through the rulings of the Secretary of Labor, that the alien members of the Communist Party are deportable for membership; that alien members of the Communist Labor Party are not deportable except for individual overt acts; and alien members of the Russian Workers' Union are deportable for membership; and that alien members of the I. W. W. are not deportable except for overt acts. Now, you will not have to have a great number of special agents trying to classify revolutionary aliens and others, because they will all know enough to get out of the Communist Party into these other parties.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman stands for an amendment of the laws so as to make them more stringent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Attorney General stated that the work of the department was becoming more difficult day by day for this reason; these alien radicals and anarchists, who are of course subject to deportation, are now standing in the background——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Dodging and denying.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And dodging, as the gentleman says, and permitting citizens who have like radical tendencies and ideas to take the lead in these matters. Now, of course, it is as much the duty of the Attorney General to ferret out crime on the part of citizens as of aliens.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Although he complains—and I think complains very properly—that he has not sufficient authority under the law to enable him to effectively punish citizens guilty of such offenses. He has asked Congress for such legislation, but it has failed to give it to him. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to another fact. The appropriation as carried under this paragraph is not confined alone to this particular crime. I stated awhile ago that probably 40 per cent of it is used for the purpose to which the gentleman has alluded. In addition to that, it is made the duty of the Attorney General to prosecute all crimes upon the calendar and these special agents are engaged in detecting crime of all kinds.

Mr. VARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VARE. Will my colleague state to the committee how much of this fund was used for the investigation of the election offenses in Michigan?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My recollection is that the sum of $40,000 was so expended, but there were fines amounting to $45,000 assessed in that case.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I think at the time of the hearings the trial of that case had not concluded.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My statement is based on information given me since that time.

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MACCRATE. Can the gentleman inform the committee how many men were arrested as the result of May day activities?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman means——

Mr. MACCRATE. Those of May 1.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I can not; no.

Mr. MACCRATE. Has the gentleman any idea how many persons were taken?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know whether any were arrested or not.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does this amount allowed here include what is necessary to investigate the profiteering in the necessaries of life?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. What per cent will be allowed for that?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Attorney General stated that if allowed $2,600,000, a million of it would be expended in the detection and prosecution of the alien radicals and anarchists; that $1,100,000 of it would be expended for the detection and prosecution of all other crimes against the United States; and that $500,000 of it would be used in the campaign against the high cost of living and the prosecution of profiteers.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think in view of the charges made against the Attorney General that he is not trying to reduce the high cost of living, he ought to have sufficient funds?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I certainly do, and if this money is not appropriated for him and he is not given the money he asks from Congress, and especially since he asks no more for next year than he has had this year, then I think those who vote against it are estopped from making any criticism against the Department of Justice for not reducing the high cost of living or from offering any complaint if all these laws are not fully enforced. The Attorney General has fearlessly done his duty. He has done it in the face of criticism from those who are guilty of violating our laws, and Congress can do no less, it seems to me, than supply him with the necessary funds to carry on this work and thereby serve notice not only on the radicals and anarchists but also upon the profiteers and other law violators that Congress intends to stand behind him and back him up to the limit in his effort to enforce the law. [Applause.]

Mr. MACCRATE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This bill carries an appropriation for books for the Department of Justice. It seems to me among those books there should be the Constitution of the United States, the Federalist, and a copy of the Revised Statutes of the United States, for I do not believe that outside of the Department of Justice there is such ignorance of the limitation of the powers of that department as there exists in the department.

No radical leader in this generation has done more to unsettle the nerves of the American people than has the Attorney General. He has awakened class antagonism to greater pitch than any preacher of class warfare. He borrows the bitterest terms of denunciation and hurls them indiscriminately here and there and elsewhere at portions of our people. Whenever the country seems ready to settle down and the national nerves are about normal, he breaks out, crying, "The Republic is endangered." Other men cry out for the repeal of war-time legislation. His voice utters a demand that we must not let war-time legislation die with the coming of peace. He failed to prosecute a single profiteer from January to June, 1919, under war-time legislation, yet in savage language sought to arouse the American people against Congress to turn their indignation from himself.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACCRATE. Not just yet.

In 1919, at Albany, N. Y., he proclaimed himself the David ready to slay the Goliath who threatened the American table. He declared that the "wrath of the American people will compel a verdict of conviction" of the packers. Yet in 1920 he closets himself with counsel for the packers and permits them to withdraw unharmed from the criminal courts. No man wants innocent men, of large or small means, unjustly convicted, but what did the Attorney General mean to do when he trumpeted to the country his opinion that their wrath would demand conviction of the packers? If the packers committed no crime, why seek to stir the wrath of our people against them? If they did commit crime, why permit them to go free while others must be imprisoned?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking in order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MACCRATE. I submit that this is in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has prepared a set speech on this subject, and he ought to get it out of his system. It hurts.

Mr. MACCRATE. The gentleman from Texas does not think what he is going to say, but the gentleman from New York does think.

Mr. BLANTON. What the gentleman from Texas does think and say is in order and to the point.

Mr. MACCRATE. Surely it is a strange sight to witness an Attorney General crying for convictions on wrath and not on evidence.

Have constitutional guaranties become so obsolete that impartial justice is an impossibility for our citizens? Is suspicion to supplant facts in the conduct of the affairs of government?

We will never get back to normal while the chief law officer of the country proceeds in violation of constitutional and statutory principles and everlastingly arouses the people to suspect each other. There are, as there always have been, bad men among us. If the Attorney General will get them and rightly put them in jail, we will be able to count them with certainty, but we will never know their number as long as their only place of confinement is the mind of the Attorney General.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACCRATE. Shortly.

The American people are tired of talk about the existence of hundreds of thousands of dangerous profiteers and overthrowers of Government while a baker's dozen only find their way to a place of punishment.

Our Attorney General has become a general adviser to the housewives of America. Daily for months he has told the good women of America what to cook, when to cook, what to wear, and when to wear, what to buy and when to buy.

He tells our wives and mothers how to make chuck taste like sirloin and how to be satisfied with old-fashioned ginghams instead of new silks. He warns them to beware of demanding too many styles of clothing in one season. For the top of the head and the sole of the foot, for outer garments and inner needs, our indefatigable Attorney General has a daily suggestion. Surely we who have seen Sunday's noonday meal come on the table in a new dress on Monday, Tuesday, and sometimes on Wednesday know that our women folks need no assistance from a Federal officeholder on the art of making Sunday's delicious roast beef Wednesday's delightful hash. We who have watched feathers and flowers transposed and transplanted to make the old hat look like new, and who have seen a dress of three seasons made modern and fit for the fourth, recommend to the Attorney General that he take from rather than give advice to the American housewife.

Where in the Revised Statutes does our learned Attorney General read that he should advise as to the food, the drink, and the clothing of the American people? By what authority does he join with the packers in recommending "cheap cuts" to the American public? The Revised Statutes lay down the duties and powers of the Department of Justice. They provide for "men learned in the law" to advise the President, the various executive departments, and to prosecute actions in the courts of the country.

If we are going to convert the Department of Justice into a department of household economy, let us put at the head of the department one of the millions of American mothers who has been transforming dad's trousers into son's pants while the Attorney General has been trying mightily to make presidential garments out of the official clothes he now wears.

Now, I am ready to yield.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wondered——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask that the gentleman may be given one more minute, in order that he may answer a pointed question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wonder if the gentleman from New York can tell the House just how many arrests and how many convictions have been made by the Department of Justice under the food-control act?

Mr. MACCRATE. I have been endeavoring to get that. I introduced a resolution in this House myself asking specifically as between January 1 and June 30, 1919, and the Attorney General himself responded that there was not a solitary conviction in the whole United States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not asking the gentleman for any specific period of time.

Mr. MACCRATE. That is the only period for which I have asked.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman has delivered a set speech, in which he has vigorously denounced the Attorney General and accused the Attorney General of not complying with his obligation as an officer of the United States. Now, I want to know whether or not the gentleman has information as to just what the Attorney General has done under the act of which he complains?

Mr. MACCRATE. All I know is that the Attorney General has promised to put every profiteer in jail, and there have been only about two dozen put in jail.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How many arrests under the food-control act, and do you know how many convictions?

Mr. MACCRATE. Assuming that the number of arrests is great, then the Attorney General is more blameworthy if there are so few in jail.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman know that within the last 90 days the Attorney General has apprehended about 6,000 anarchists and that just the other day Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor, testified before the Committee on Rules that he used to be a loyal Republican, yet the country knows he has turned most of these 6,000 anarchists loose on the people of America? Louis F. Post, and not the Attorney General of the United States, is wholly responsible for the law not being applied to the infamous anarchists now menacing the United States.

How is he going to reconcile that state of affairs with his speech?

Mr. MACCRATE. Well, if those 6,000 exist in the same place that the bomb throwers of May 1 existed, there are not any. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, if it had not been for the action taken by the Attorney General there would probably have been some of them throwing bombs in this House from the gallery yonder.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes—5 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON], 5 minutes by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], and 5 minutes by myself.

Mr. McKEOWN. I would like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Then I make it 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes, to be divided as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to know how much of this 20 minutes is to be divided among those defending the good name of one of the Cabinet officers of the land, which has just been brought into disrepute.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the debate will be confined to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Then none of it will be used to offset some of the attacks that have been made upon him on the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You could not divide up time in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] two questions in connection with the appropriation for the office of the Attorney General. Some time ago, as has been mentioned here in the debates, there were a large number of arrests of aliens belonging to the Communist Party. It is contended by the Department of Labor that many of these men were merely nominal members of the party and did not know the obligations that they had subscribed to.

It also appears that the Attorney General's office—the Department of Justice—did not arrest and did not apprehend men who were the leaders in this Communist Party movement, but that the arrests were made merely of the rank and file, many of whom, it is claimed, were entirely ignorant of the details of the principles of the Communist Party. Can the gentleman give the House any information as to that, and the reason for not arresting and apprehending the leaders of this Communist Party movement?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I know that warrants were issued chiefly for leaders and officers and persons in responsible positions in those organizations which were formed for the purpose of promoting the revolutionary movement in the United States in their various meetings and organizations. Now, if it be true that some of them were not apprehended, it was because the officers were unable to locate or find them.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Well, I have been informed that men who are in the country to-day, men who are speaking for the Communist Party to-day, were not arrested or apprehended, and no warrants were ever issued for their arrest.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman name some of those leaders?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Louis C. Fraina was the name of one of the leaders that was given to me. I understand he has not been apprehended, but I have no information other than hearsay.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no information as to any particular individual case, but I do know that the Attorney General and those who apeared before the committee positively stated that these warrants of arrest were directed against the officers and responsible leaders of the revolutionary organizations. The Attorney General went at some length into the organization of the Communist and Communist Labor Parties, and into the platforms or teachings of the two parties, in order to show just how they were fomenting trouble and promoting a movement to injure and, if possible, overturn the Government by force and violence, and he stated that warrants were issued against the officers, those in charge of their various meetings and organizations. Now, if it be that some particular leader was not arrested, I have no information concerning it.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Now, can the gentleman tell me anything about the fair-price committees working under the Department of Justice here in the District of Columbia? I read the other day that under the auspices of the Department of Justice the fair-price committee had fixed as a fair rate of profit for a retailer upon a pair of shoes selling for about $12, 33⅓ or 35 per cent upon the selling price. That would mean at least 50 per cent profit upon the cost of the shoes to the retailer, and that statement, I understand, is true. Now, can it be that, with appropriations going to the Deparment of Justice for the prevention of profiteering, that department is approving a profit of that kind upon a staple article like a pair of shoes—a nonperishable article, which, if not sold to-day can be sold to-morrow or a year from to-day?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that the fair-price committee was simply an organization which was perfected in the various cities of the land for the purpose of assisting the Department of Justice to bear down the high cost of living.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman further knows that a year ago, possibly, the Attorney General requested this Congress to enact certain legislation by way of amendment to the Lever food-control act which would give him the authority to go into the courts and prosecute criminally and put into jail the profiteers who are reaping such enormous profits at the expense of the people of this country, and this Congress for months failed to give him the legislation he asked for——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes; and why should we do that when he O. K's and approves an exorbitant price upon the sale at retail of a pair of shoes such as I have indicated? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, everyone knows that the Attorney General does not approve it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that this matter seems to partake of a political aspect as to this appropriation. This question is really not a political question. It ought not to be dealt with by Congress as a political question. The Attorney General of the United States is a fearless officer, and I want to say to you that a man upon whom the reds have made such a vicious attack in trying to kill him is not one that the Congress of the United States ought now to lie down upon when it comes to providing means for the enforcement of the law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is the duty of the Attorney General to execute the law, and it is the duty of the Congress to pass sufficient laws and give him enough money with which to enforce the law and not to criticize him. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If the Congress would give him more help and less criticism he would make more progress in the reduction of the high cost of living.

The high cost of living has been dragged in as a political issue, and it has been used as a platform upon which to get into office.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman refer to the campaign of 1912?

Mr. McKEOWN. I refer to the campaign of 1918. [Laughter.] It has been used to get into office with. The question of the high cost of living has been made a political issue when every sane man knows that you can not reduce the high cost of living by legislation. The reduction of the high cost of living has got to come by increasing the supply of necessities and the prevention of hoarding.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Does the gentleman think, however, that Congress ought to sit silent with the approval by the Department of Justice of a profit of 50 per cent on the cost of a pair of shoes?

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not know whether the gentleman's statement of it is correct——

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I can assure the gentleman that it is correct.

Mr. McKEOWN. But Congress is not here to approve or disapprove of the particular amounts or percentages allowed in particular cases without all the facts in the case. But there is this much that I do know, and that is that Congress is interested in bringing shoes within the reach of the people, and that the Attorney General ought to have the money with which to enforce the law, and it is the duty of Congress to give it to him.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman tell us what law there is now on the statute books to prevent a profit of 50 per cent on shoes?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. He has the Lever food-control act.

Mr. BLANTON. In what way would that enable the Attorney General to stop profiteering on shoes?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. It provides for the fixing of a reasonable price, and if he would enforce it we would have something like reasonable prices.

Mr. McKEOWN. Here is the attitude you gentlemen on the Republican side have taken: In one breath you condemn the Attorney General because he does not reduce the high cost of living and in the next you oppose an appropriation to enforce the law. We ought to give him sufficient funds to let him try to the full extent to put the red anarchists out of this country and to put the profiteers in jail, and you ought to give him full authority and plenty of money with which to do it, and not go out to the country and say, "If you put me in power, I will immediately reduce the high cost of living," or go out to the country and say, "You have got an Attorney General who does not enforce the law," when you do not give him the money with which to enforce it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, the gentleman understands that, as far as deporting reds is concerned, I contend that the $1,700,000 that the Attorney General proposes to use is as much as can be used with the machinery in the other departments?

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand the gentleman from Washington has been all the time advocating the deportation of those people and criticizing one of the other departments because they have not deported them or passed on them for their deportation. I hold no brief for the Attorney General as to the fair-price committees. I believe in less investigations and more prosecutions.

Give the Attorney General sufficient funds to bring the rich profiteer to the bar of justice and for the apprehension of anarchists in America and if he fails then you can justly criticize him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the Attorney General should have met with some criticism from some sources over the country. Any man who has the duty and responsibility of enforcing penal statutes, or statutes that affect the pocketbooks of the great interests of this country, can expect always to meet with a certain amount of criticism if he does his duty. But I do not think there is anyone who can fairly and justly say that the present Attorney General of the United States has not used his authority and the authority of his department and the appropriations given him by Congress to enforce the laws upon our statute books to the very best of his splendid ability. [Applause.] Gentlemen complain because he has not reduced the price of shoes. I want to ask gentlemen why it is that they have not complied with the request of the President to enact a statute which will give to the Attorney General and to the Department of Justice the power to enforce some of these statutes and to put some of these people in jail and at the same time give publicity to some of these immense profits that are being made, because you will recall that the request has been made of Congress that statutes be enacted providing that the manufacturers' prices of these articles be stamped upon them, so that when the consumer buys them from the retailer he will know exactly what profit is being made. Yet this Congress, in the face of that request of the President, which has been made more than once in the past year, has remained inactive and has failed to take action upon his request. I say it comes with poor grace for us to stand here and undertake to criticize the Attorney General, charged as he is with the duty of enforcing the laws of the United States, and then deny to him the amount of money which he says is necessary to enable him to enforce those laws. On the contrary, it is proposed here to deny him the amount of money that he now has for the enforcement of these laws and to cut down his appropriation for the next year 20 per cent from what was allowed for the current year.

I say that if we do that we are estopped from uttering any criticism of the Attorney General in the future if he should fail in any degree in his efforts to enforce these particular laws.

Gentlemen have asked what the Attorney General has done under the food control act. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MACCRATE] a few moments ago delivered a set speech criticizing the Attorney General for what the gentleman claimed he had failed to do under that act. But in response to a question the gentleman was unable to give the House any information as to the action taken by the Department of Justice.

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Just a moment. I will tell the gentleman what he does not seem to know. As a matter of fact, under that law 1,173 arrests were made, and more than 125 convictions have been secured in various parts of this country. Gentlemen know how difficult it is to secure a conviction in a criminal prosecution when you go before a jury in a man's home town, when you indict some profiteer who stands well in his community, and place him before a jury of 12 men in that particular community. But I submit that the record shows that the Department of Justice, through the district attorneys and agents all over this country, has been vigorous in the prosecution of all those who have been charged with violating that act as well as every criminal statute, and I want to appeal to you now not to cut down the Attorney General's force for next year, but to give him his investigators, give him every special agent he says he needs.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing a statement showing just what the Department of Justice has done in this direction. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

MAY 6, 1920.

In re appropriation for detection and prosecution of crimes, fiscal year commencing July 1, 1920.

I understand the fact to be, although I am not certain about it, that as the sundry civil bill now stands the sum of $2,000,000 has been appropriated for detection and prosecution of crimes.

The expenses of the bureau are now running at a figure of approximately $3,000,000 per year.

On March 9 I furnished you with a memorandum in which I stated that about $2,500,000 would be sufficient for the bureau for the next fiscal year. Since that time, however, several things have come to my attention which indicate that such sum will not be sufficient.

The additional facts, exclusive of those bearing upon the question of the high cost of living, may be summarized under two headings:

(A) THE BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION IS MORE THAN SELF-SUPPORTING.

1. In the Seattle Shipyard case, investigation whereof was commenced at the request of the Shipping Board, 12 men, at an average salary of $7 per day plus $4 per day and traveling expenses, were engaged from October 1 to date, at an estimated total expense of around $30,000. This investigation produced bona fide claims in favor of the Government in civil action amounting to $415,000 and produced facts upon which the Government is stopping payment of claims already allowed in the additional amount of $4,240,000. It is anticipated that most, if not all, of this amount will be saved for the Government. The financial results to the United States Government in this case alone more than pays the operation expenses of the Bureau of Investigation for the entire fiscal year. In addition thereto, indictments have been found against 25 or more defendants as a result of this investigation.

2. In another case, the name whereof must remain confidential, inasmuch as indictments have not yet been presented by the grand jury, bona fide claims in favor of the Government in the amount of $326,000 have been disallowed. It is also expected that a number of indictments will result.

3. In another case of the same nature, and likewise confidential, claims have been disallowed by one of the Government departments in the amount of $42,000 upon evidence produced by the bureau, and two indictments are expected to follow.

4. In another case $25,000 in claims were disallowed by another Government department on evidence produced by the bureau.

5. From and after the first of the year the activities of the antitrust division became revived, although prior to that time they amounted to practically nothing. At present there are 90 antitrust cases proceeding and facts have come to the attention of the department that show that at least 100 more investigations of that nature are awaiting the attention of the bureau. We have 20 special antitrust agents operating from the bureau whose entire time is taken up in such investigations and the time of at least 20 more with their per diems and traveling expenses are constantly being used to further such investigations. Only a small number of these cases have been brought to a final conclusion as yet, but the amount of fines collected, in addition to the good effect of securing indictments in this class of cases, will amount to a very large figure, certainly more than enough to pay the expenses of the investigations themselves, and it is not impossible that such fines in the total will pay considerable, if not all, of the entire expense of the bureau. In one recent case a fine of $25,000 was imposed and collected.

6. Investigations of fraudulent claims against the Bureau of War Risk Insurance are now producing an income of in excess of $1,500 per month. The saving in regards to such frauds by the publicity attending indictments and exposures is probably much greater.

7. Our bank accountants are constantly collecting fines against individuals in addition to the penitentiary sentences they are securing.

8. We have no statistics showing the amount of fines collected in miscellaneous matters upon convictions obtained by the activities of the Bureau of Investigation. One item may be taken as illustrative of the amount recovered. On liquor cases arising under the then existing statutes prior to January 1, 1920, a casual examination of the reports of agents show that $147,000 was collected in fines. These reports were not made for this purpose and are not at all complete. Mr. Keep, who directs this line of investigation, assures me that it does not represent more than one-half of the total amount of fines collected throughout the United States in liquor cases.

(B) UNANTICIPATED BURDENS UPON THE APPROPRIATION.

1. Legislation enforcing national prohibition did not come into effect until January of this year, and it was some time thereafter that the Treasury Department succeeded in organizing its force so as to deal with this matter without our assistance. A more or less heavy burden, though decreasing burden, has been placed upon the bureau by reason of such fact. There are a large number of liquor investigations that the bureau can not escape. They involve cases wherein the district attorney requests additional help from the bureau in cases which are about to be tried; cases of emergency, where no prohibition agent is available; and cases involving the integrity of the prohibition agents. From this it will be seen that the most important of the prohibition cases are still a burden upon the bureau.

2. As hereinabove stated, the antitrust work has grown beyond any possible expectation due to several factors, among them being the natural profiteering tendency arising subsequent to the war, the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the steel case, and the attitude of the Federal Trade Commission in referring more and more of these cases to the Department of Justice for action. As above stated, there are about 190 cases at present demanding the attention of the department which will involve the activities of about 40 agents for the rest of this year and all of the succeeding fiscal year.

3. The election fraud cases, among them being the famous Newberry case, likewise added a heavy burden. It is estimated that the Newberry case cost the Bureau of Investigation about $40,000. In this connection, however, I wish to add that fines to the amount of $45,000 were assessed.

4. The investigation of the Seattle Shipyard produced such good results that the Shipping Board desire like investigations to be made in a number of other cases which it is hoped will produce substantial results, although such investigations will necessarily deplete the bureau's appropriation.

5. The War Department has issued bulletins requesting the public to make report of such violations of the selective-service act as comes to their attention. The regulations authorizing these bulletins are recent in origin and are throwing a heavy burden upon the bureau which could not be anticipated. We have heretofore investigated 200,000 of such cases, 40,000 whereof are shown to have a criminal aspect and indictments are expected. We are obtaining from 15 to 20 convictions a day throughout the United States in this class of cases. I estimate that there will be 100,000 additional of these investigations to be made by the bureau resulting from the action of the War Department.

6. The gradual increase in cost of living has made it necessary for us to meet demands for increased salaries. We have made such increases where possible but our better men are constantly leaving us because of their inability to receive compensation in a Government position commensurate with their ability. It is not uncommon for men to leave our bureau and receive a salary of from two to three times the salary paid by the Government. These increases are, however, an additional burden. The increase in the number of investigations demanding the services of expert accountants and agents well informed on business affairs makes it necessary for us to consider a larger increase in salaries of men engaged in that line of work if we are to keep them in the Government employ. At present rates we are losing our best men. This situation can only be met by giving such men commensurate salaries for such services.

7. The act of Congress making it a crime to transport stolen automobiles across State lines has become to be more of a burden upon the bureau than was anticipated. We have obtained up to date convictions in over 160 of such cases.

8. When the railroads were turned back to private ownership there were a large number of investigations arising out of stolen shipments in interstate commerce. Prior to that time these investigations were made by the railroad police. Since that time, although the investigators of the private lines are of great assistance, there is nevertheless an increased burden upon the bureau of investigation.

9. The appropriations of the War and Navy Departments for investigative purposes having been exhausted, we are under constant pressure to complete investigations they have commenced but are unable to complete or to take up new ones they have been unable to undertake, particularly regarding thefts of Government property in and about camps and shipyards. This was an unanticipated and considerable burden upon the bureau.

10. The expenses of the radical division have continued at their high mark since before the first of the year, and there have been some rather unusual expenses in connection therewith incident to the raids upon the Union of Russian Workers, the Communist Party, and the Communist Labor Party. Upward of 25 per cent of the activities of the bureau are on radical matters. The situation in this regard, however, is not different from what I have anticipated, but is perhaps different from what Congress or the public may understand the facts to be.

11. Congress has recently passed a resolution requesting the investigation of all military camps and cantonments with respect to any fraudulent claims growing out of their construction or otherwise. Several investigations of this nature have been made in the past, including that of the Air Nitrates Corporation at Muscle Shoals. There are 32 such camps and cantonments, and our best estimate, based upon expenses in similar investigations heretofore incurred, would make the cost of the investigation called for by said resolution amount to somewhere around $3,000,000.

If the bureau is to be expected to go into this thing as the resolution calls for, a special appropriation covering such matters ought to be made by Congress; otherwise we can not be expected to do more than a very small part of such work without seriously interfering with the bureau's other activities.

12. The passport-control act, which extended the powers of the State Department upon the granting of passports and permits to leave the United States, has shown an increase in the requests for information upon individuals concerned from a comparatively few up to the present figure in excess of 2,000 a day. Most of these requests, however, do not require field investigation, but each requires an examination of the files of the bureau. Field investigations, however, are frequently made at the request of the State Department.

13. The fact that we have not yet arrived at peace with the Central Powers of Europe has thrown a very heavy unanticipated burden upon the bureau in making the investigations necessary to recommend the exception from the classification of alien enemy for naturalization purposes. The law does not permit us to make such recommendations until an investigation is made. Every German or Austrian who had previously taken out his first papers and who now desires his second papers is applying to the bureau to have an investigation made so that his naturalization may not be delayed any longer. Over 7,000 of such applications have been made since the first of the year, which is larger than the entire number of such applications made prior thereto. About 2,500 of such investigations have been conducted since the first of the year. It will be remembered that a personal investigation and interview of the applicant and his witnesses and a written report is necessary in every case.

The activities in this regard will cease immediately upon the declaration of peace. However, the time when peace will be declared is problematical, and until such time we will be burdened with at least 3,000 to 4,000 such investigations.

14. The Mexican situation has been an increasing burden upon the bureau, and particularly in view of the fact that for lack of appropriation the Immigration Service along the border has been suspended. It has been necessary for us to increase the number of agents along the Mexican border.

15. I have not included any observation on the high cost of living, which I understand Mr. Figg's organization has covered by a special memorandum. For your information, however, the actual number of reports received from our field agents when distributed show that 15 per cent of such reports are upon cost-of-living investigations. When it is considered that such investigations are necessarily laborious and complicated, it will readily be understood that this percentage does not express the true relation of such activities to the other activities of the bureau. No accurate statistics are available, but the cost-of-living investigations are a burden of approximately 25 per cent of the entire appropriation.

Of course, that proportion that may be expended at the seat of government should bear a correct ratio with that which will be expended in the field. It seems to me that it would not be out of the way to be permitted to expend 10 per cent of the appropriation at Washington, although that may be considered a little bit high in case of a large appropriation, but would not be considered high in case of a small appropriation, because of the disproportionate demands made by Government departments upon the bureau officials at Washington regarding the contents of our confidential files and the well-recognized rule that overhead expense is always larger in proportion where the investment is small.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think we should approach this subject with a full realization of what we have done and what it is proposed to do. The last Congress, a Congress in sympathy politically with the Attorney General, reported out this bill, which carried a similar item of $1,000,000 for this very purpose. Later, in the present Congress, the Attorney General made an estimate for a deficiency of a million dollars, and in presenting the matter before the Committee on Appropriations, he said that the money would be expended largely in prosecution of the red element in this country, or running down the reds, and in the prosecution of the profiteers and in reducing the high cost of living. Congress gave him every penny that he asked for—$1,000,000—more than the last Congress gave him.

Now, I am perfectly willing to appropriate, so far as I am individually concerned, all the money necessary for the Attorney General's office. But I want to make this observation, without any tinge of partisanship: To-day the Attorney General is spending $1,600,000 which we appropriated for arresting, for deportation, the alien radical element which has found shelter and protection in this country. Over 6,000 warrants have been issued and the arrests amount to approximately 3,500 persons. The persons arrested last January by the Attorney General's office are being tried by the Department of Labor, and in 99 cases almost out of 100, maybe that is putting it too strong, they are being dismissed, and you gentlemen on that side are just as loud in your denunciation of Mr. Post in this regard as anybody on this side. My position is this—that it is a useless waste of money to appropriate money by millions for the Department of Justice to make arrests if nothing is to come of the arrest except to release the person arrested.

Gentlemen say that some of that was appropriated for the arrest of profiteers. I want the profiteer sent to jail, and so we reported every penny that the Attorney General asked for in the deficiency bill. Since then we have seen the commodities and necessaries of life mount in price, with all the laws necessary to prevent profiteering on the statute books, all the laws that existed at the time he made the estimate—we have seen sugar go from 10 cents a pound up to 30 cents a pound, and, so far as I know, nobody has gone to jail. I do not know whether they have been arrested or not.

What are the facts? In 1915 all that the Attorney General had for this purpose was $485,000 and a deficiency of $25,000. In 1916 he had $600,000. We appropriate by this bill, notwithstanding the fact that the Treasury is depleted, $2,000,000, which is more than has ever been appropriated before during all the time since the foundation of the Government in a single year, except for this year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman said that 99 out of every 100 arrests that were made were dismissed. This record shows that 500 have been taken up.

Mr. GOOD. I said of the last arrests. The gentleman knows that a large number of those were arrested in the first instance, and the Department of Labor did issue the warrants of deportation and, as the gentleman says, about 500 were deported. But I am talking about the arrests that were made on January 1 or thereabouts, and now practically all of the leaders are being released as fast as they come before the Department of Labor.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is not the fault of the Attorney General.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not. I have not intended to give that impression. But why appropriate $500,000 to make arrests of alien anarchists if they are to be released at once. Rather expensive and entirely useless.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is not blaming the Attorney General because we have an anarchist in the Department of Labor, who is protecting his brother anarchists. We are responsible for Post's remaining there. We ought to put him out. You are in the majority and you can put him out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. May we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee) there were 40 ayes and 47 noes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. GOOD and Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported 43 ayes and 57 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries, fees, and expenses of United States marshals and their deputies, including the office expenses of United States marshals in the District of Alaska, services rendered in behalf of the United States or otherwise, services in Alaska and Oklahoma in collecting evidence for the United States when so specially directed by the Attorney General, and maintenance, alteration, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles used in connection with the transaction of the official business of the office of United States marshal for the District of Columbia, $2,061,000. Advances to United States marshals, in accordance with existing law, may be made from the proper appropriations, as herein provided, immediately upon the passage of this act; but no disbursements shall be made prior to July 1, 1920, by said disbursing officers from the funds thus advanced, and no disbursements shall be made therefrom to liquidate expenses for the fiscal year 1920, or prior years: Provided, That there shall be paid hereunder any necessary cost of keeping vessels or other property attached or libeled in admiralty in such amounts as the court, on petition setting forth the facts under oath, may allow: Provided further, That marshals and office deputy marshals (except in the District of Alaska) may be granted a per diem of not to exceed $4 and $3, respectively, in lieu of subsistence, instead of, but under the conditions prescribed for, the present allowance for actual expenses of subsistence.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 21 I move to strike out the words "and $3, respectively."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 123, line 21, strike out the words "and $3, respectively."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. It would not help if he struck out the provision, because the law fixes that and they would not be allowed to pay in excess of the statutory provision. To strike out the words here would avail nothing.

Mr. GANDY. I want to say that my object in offering the amendment is to call attention primarily to the various rates of per diem that are allowed in this and other bills. I think it wrong in practice, not conducive to good business or good administration of affairs to say that one official shall have an allowance for expenses in the field of $3, that another shall have $4, another $5, another $6, and we have some in this bill up to $7.

Mr. BLANTON. That has been stricken out.

Mr. GANDY. I am informed that that is stricken out.

Mr. GOOD. The committee was aware of that fact; but the per diem in no instance is sufficient to pay the expenses of these officials, owing to the increase in hotel bills. But the committee did not have jurisdiction of this matter, and it is doubtful if we could have taken the time to have considered the question in all its aspects and reported out a bill that would have been equitable. So we simply made the appropriation in accordance with existing law.

Mr. GANDY. If the appropriation committee has not jurisdiction, I hope that some committee will bring in a bill that will not require an officer of the Government when he is on his official work to go down into his salary for a part of the expenses of the trip.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries of United States district attorneys and expenses of United States district attorneys and their regular assistants, including the office expenses of United States district attorneys in Alaska, and for salaries of regularly appointed clerks to United States district attorneys for services rendered during vacancy in the office of the United States district attorney, $730,000: Provided, That United States district attorneys and their regular assistants may be granted a per diem of not to exceed $4 in lieu of subsistence, instead of, but under the conditions prescribed for, the present allowance for actual expenses of subsistence.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. In some portions of the country, due to extraordinary conditions, it is practically impossible for the United States district attorney to live on the salary that he is paid. I have been told that there is some legislation in view which will permit the Attorney General to increase the salary. Can the gentleman inform me in respect to that?

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman refer to the salary of the assistants?

Mr. PARRISH. No; of the district attorneys. The salary is fixed by law now.

Mr. GOOD. As the gentleman knows, the salary of the district attorney is fixed by law. I think there is a bill pending before the Committee on the Judiciary with regard to the matter, but I am not advised as to what action has been taken on the bill.

Mr. PARRISH. In so far as the assistants are concerned, will the Attorney General have any power to pay to the first assistant district attorney more than he gets now? I understand he now gets $2,500.

Mr. GOOD. Under the provisions of this paragraph, the Attorney General can pay up to $3,000. He can not pay to exceed that. He can fix the salary at any amount up to $3,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Iowa makes the statement that the Attorney General can fix the salary of the assistant district attorney as he pleases up to $3,000. Of course, that is the language of the law, but there are a great many ways of enforcing and a great many ways of evading laws. A large share of the people in the district attorneys' offices throughout the country are there as special assistants, doing exactly the same work as the regular assistant does.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The regular assistant has a salary limited to $3,000, but the special assistants have no limitation on their salaries, and they receive a much higher compensation, many of them, than $3,000 a year. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in answering the question I had in mind only the regular assistants who are provided for in the appropriation of $500,000, but in the very next paragraph, carrying $450,000, there is one assistant provided for who is employed at $9,000, one at $8,500, one at $7,500, and several at salaries of $5,000 or over.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; and those salaries were intended in the first place to be paid to attorneys doing special work, but the Attorney General's office—and I am not criticizing it in this respect—not only is very bright in knowing how to enforce the law, but it is exceedingly bright in knowing how to evade the law. Having a law providing that the regular assistants shall not be paid more than $3,000, they appoint a regular assistant and call him a special assistant. That is simply an evasion of the law. Perhaps the limitation ought not to be in the law. I do not know.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they have any attorneys called special assistants who are permanently located?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Permanently located in nearly all of the district attorneys' offices.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be in some of the larger offices, like Chicago or New York, but I do not think that applies all over the country.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would apply to an office where they have a large amount of work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They have a great deal of work in all of these offices.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not say that they do not need them; I am not complaining about that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This appropriation is specially limited to assistants to the Attorney General employed in special cases. I do not see how, under that appropriation, if we are talking about the same appropriation, what the gentleman says is possible.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not referring to any special appropriation, but I am telling a fact.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SANFORD having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

On May 3, 1920:

H. R. 13387. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

On May 5, 1920:

H. J. Res. 301. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of War to grant revocable licenses for the removal of sand and gravel from the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for industrial purposes.

On May 6, 1920:

H. R. 9228. An act to authorize the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Lake Superior, in Cook County, Minn.; and

H. R. 9629. An act for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co.

On May 7, 1920:

H. R. 12956. An act extending the time for constructing a bridge across the Bayou Bartholomew, in the State of Arkansas; and

H. R. 13253. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Elmer Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Red River.

On May 8, 1920:

H. R. 13677. An act making appropriations to supply a deficiency in appropriations for the Federal control of transportation systems and to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12869. An act for the construction of a bridge across the Pentwater River or Pentwater Lake, Mich.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries: Warden, $4,000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplains—1 $1,500, 1 $1,200; physician, $1,800; pharmacist and physician's assistant, $1,000; chief clerk, $1,800; record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; clerks—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000, 4 at $900 each; head cook, $1,000; steward and storekeeper, $1,200; superintendent of farm and transportation, $1,200; 3 captains of watch, at $1,500 each; guards, $124,800; 2 teamsters, at $600 each; engineer and electrician, $1,500; 2 assistants, at $1,200 each; in all, $159,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In a recent deficiency appropriation bill the Committee on Appropriations provided for increasing the pay of guards at Federal penitentiaries by inserting a provision that for the first year of service they should receive $70 a month, which is the pay they have been receiving a number of years, that for the second year of service they should receive $80, for the third year $90, and for the fourth and subsequent years $100 a month. This became a law on a deficiency bill a couple of months ago, and was entirely just and proper on the part of the committee. However, at these same institutions there is another class of employees—the clerks. There are six clerks, I think, at Leavenworth Penitentiary and about the same number at Atlanta. These clerks are employees who are receiving much less money than was provided for the guards in a recent amendment, although these clerks take a civil-service examination which is of a higher class than the guards. I think they should be paid as high at least as the guard is paid. I understand that the Department of Justice has strongly recommended to the committee that the same provisions, or even stronger provisions, be made with respect to the clerks that have been made for the guards. I think the committee should make a reasonable increase in the pay of these clerks.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much do the guards receive, as well as the clerks?

Mr. ANTHONY. The guards are now receiving, practically all of them, $100 a month, though of course there are some new ones who do not receive that.

Mr. BLANTON. Ought they to receive more than the school-teachers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the school-teachers should receive more money.

Mr. BLANTON. But we just turned them down this morning.

Mr. ANTHONY. And I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that the Department of Justice has asked that this provision be made for the clerks. It was my understanding that some provision would be made for them on a deficiency bill. This seems to be the last opportunity you will have to take care of them. Under the law I think they are authorized at $900 a year. One of them, I think, is getting $1,200 a year, one of them $1,000, and four $900 a year.

Mr. GOOD. They get the bonus.

Mr. ANTHONY. They get the bonus.

Mr. GOOD. One clerk gets $1,440 and the other $1,240 and the other four $1,140 each.

Mr. ANTHONY. I submit that the base of $3 for a stenographer and clerk is not the amount of pay that is commensurate with the work done by these men and is entirely out of line with the rate of payment that is accorded practically to every occupation in the immediate neighborhood of these institutions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They get the bonus; have they been in the service over a year——

Mr. ANTHONY. I understand the chairman of the committee says they are receiving a bonus, but that is a temporary matter.

Mr. GOOD. They receive it for next year on the legislative bill; that has already been appropriated.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is for one year, and we do not know——

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield.

Mr. CALDWELL. If these men are Republicans, I will vote for it. Are they Republicans or Democrats?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think these gentlemen are perhaps divided——

Mr. CALDWELL. Was the gentleman in here the other day when we had up the matter of the cemeterial appropriation, where a member of the Republican steering committee opposed it on the ground that they were Democrats?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I did not hear anything of the kind.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman did not vote on that proposition?

Mr. ANTHONY. I was not here.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will tell the gentleman, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman, a member of the steering committee, that 40 out of 41 were registered Republicans.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Page 129, line 25, after the last semicolon, insert:

"Provided, That from and including July 1, 1920, the salaries of clerks and stenographers shall be as follows:

"For the first year of service, $75 per month.

"For the second year of service, $80 per month.

"For the third year of service, $90 per month.

"For the fourth and subsequent years of service, $100 per month."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will have to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order against it; it is exactly the same provision he himself included in the deficiency bill for this other class of employees.

Mr. GOOD. We put the other item in for the other class of employees to meet a condition that was very serious. Here were guards whom we understood were scarcely men of families, at least that is the character of men that they wanted at a penitentiary for guards. We wanted guards who were good, strong, law-abiding citizens. Now, because they were only paying $70 a month they could not get that kind of men and were obliged to go out on the street corners and get men to put in there in charge of the penitentiary whom they know nothing about at all, and the situation was so serious the department came and asked for this legislation, and the subcommittee on the deficiency was impressed with the serious condition that confronted these institutions, and we granted that amount. Now, it is true that bill was passed providing for a new scale for guards after the estimates for the sundry civil bill for next year were made up, therefore there was no estimate for guards or for clerks. Since that time the department has made an estimate, just as the gentleman has stated, as I recall, increasing the pay somewhat, I have forgotten what it is, but I will say to the gentleman that when the officials came before the committee they never referred to it. The item not being carried on the work sheet before me, I knew nothing about it and did not know then that they had asked for it, and they never suggested these clerks were of the same character at all.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman, of course, remembers there were hearings before the committee, and will remember at one of the hearings I appeared, and from the hearing it is evident that the gentleman from Georgia also appeared——

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. And made some presentation to the committee.

Mr. GOOD. That was a month after we had heard the Department of Justice.

Mr. ANTHONY. And I find upon inquiry of the Department of Justice to-day they say that they have for some months recommended that to take care of these people.

Mr. GOOD. They forwarded an estimate for that purpose. It is true the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] appeared for these clerks. The gentleman spoke very forcefully for these clerks and the committee was impressed with the situation; but, after all, the same serious situation does not confront us concerning these clerks that confronted the penitentiary in regard to guards.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will yield right there. The only reason he was not confronted with the same situation is because these clerks are nearly all old employees of the Government. They are men who have been with the Government some 10, 12, and 16 years, and most of them were former guards and for the reason they are fixed in their places, and otherwise they probably would leave the Government service and——

Mr. GOOD. The lower paid clerks will get $1,140.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the bonus?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is their pay.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is Congress going to continue that?

Mr. GOOD. It is for the next year; it has already been voted upon. I hope the gentleman will not press this. I knew nothing about it except the gentleman's statement, and I do not believe the gentleman believes these clerks are on the same level with the work of the guards. Besides, we must remember that we are not granting other increases to clerks of this class anywhere.

Mr. ANTHONY. Certainly, just exactly; and these clerks were formerly——

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not like to interrupt the gentleman over there, but I must ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. It seems to me the amendment offered is along the line of simply increasing the pay of the clerks and is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. It changes existing law, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment seeks to establish the salaries of clerks and stenographers at the Leavenworth Penitentiary permanently, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clothing, transportation, and traveling expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., $90,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I want to ask him if the committee went thoroughly into these general appropriations for the support of these penitentiaries with the idea of determining whether the appropriations for subsistence and maintenance were sufficient or not, or has the committee arbitrarily cut the appropriations down to a figure they deem proper?

Mr. GOOD. The committee has made some cuts. For instance, for the subsistence at Atlanta we cut only $10,000. The department asked for $175,000 and we gave them $165,000, and they are getting along this year with $150,000. We went into the matter somewhat. It is costing a little more——

Mr. ANTHONY. The reason I ask the question is that for the last two years large deficiencies have been brought in under these heads, and I understand under the appropriations which were made last year that many of the firms who furnished supplies under the contracts which were let in accordance with these appropriations have had to wait nine months for their pay from the Government after the delivery of goods and supplies, and some of them have not been paid yet, because of the large deficiencies which were created, and which the Congress has failed to appropriate for and take care of. And it struck me that was not a proper businesslike basis for conducting the affairs of these big institutions.

Mr. GOOD. Of course it was not. We are confronted with this situation, namely, that at Leavenworth they are building a new wing for the penitentiary and will have it ready for occupancy before the end of the year. They have enlarged the penitentiary at Atlanta, and at McNeils Island they have also enlarged the building. We carry in the provision $870,000 for support of prisoners that are mostly confined in State and county jails, and if that policy is reversed and the penitentiaries are filled to their limit, necessarily there will have to be larger appropriations for their subsistence. If, on the other hand, they do not add materially to the number, I think the appropriation will be sufficient.

Mr. ANTHONY. The point I make is this: If business firms who contract to furnish supplies to these institutions have to wait for nine months or a year, it is going to cost more money.

Mr. GOOD. We have had deficiency bills every four or five months in the last five years, and there never has been a time when one of these deficiency bills failed to provide the money to take care of any legitimate claim against the Government.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it possible, then, that the Department of Justice is hiding the real expenditure for these institutions in asking for the correct appropriations?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. ANTHONY. I know that these deficiencies exist, because officials have told me they do.

Mr. GOOD. At Atlanta, as I recall now, they might need a little more by the end of the year. They had $150,000, and certainly everybody up to date who has furnished anything for that penitentiary has had his money or the money is available. I think the same thing is true at Leavenworth. They have plenty of money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Training School for Boys, $67,536.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa how many boys are in this institution at this time? Does he know?

Mr. GOOD. It is my recollection that there are 406 boys there.

Mr. BEE. Is ample provision being made for taking care of industry for them, so that when they come out of the institution they are worth while?

Mr. GOOD. They are given a course in manual training.

Mr. BEE. The reason I asked was that a young man from my city was sent to this institution, and when he came back I was surprised—the Federal judge having stated that he would come out with a trade—that he did not have the training that enabled him to go into anything definite at that time.

Mr. GOOD. They teach brick making and carpentry, and especially farming. The institution is located about 3 or 4 miles out of Washington. They have 230 or 240 acres of land, and to the extent that the institution is equipped to give manual training, they do give it to the boys there.

Mr. BEE. I consider it one of the best institutions in the country, and I hoped they were making ample provision.

Mr. GOOD. It is a very good institution.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

General expenses: For supplies, repairs, maintenance, and incidental expenses of lighthouses and other lights, beacons, buoyage, fog signals, lighting of rivers heretofore authorized to be lighted, light vessels, other aids to navigation, and lighthouse tenders, including the establishment, repair, and improvement of beacons and day marks and purchase of land for same; establishment of post lights, buoys, submarine signals, and fog signals; establishment of oil or carbide houses, not to exceed $10,000: Provided, That any oil or carbide house erected hereunder shall not exceed $550 in cost; construction of necessary outbuildings at a cost not exceeding $500 at any one light station in any fiscal year; improvement of grounds and buildings connected with light stations and depots; restoring light stations and depots and buildings connected therewith: Provided, That such restoration shall be limited to the original purpose of the structures; wages of persons attending post lights; temporary employees, and field force while engaged on works of general repair and maintenance, and laborers and mechanics at lighthouse depots; rations and provisions or commutation thereof for keepers of lighthouses, working parties in the field, officers and crews of light vessels and tenders, and officials and other authorized persons of the Lighthouse Service on duty on board of such tenders or vessels, and money accruing from commutation for rations and provisions for the above-named persons on board of tenders and light vessels or in working parties in the field may be paid on proper vouchers to the person having charge of the mess of such vessel or party; reimbursement under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce of keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them, not exceeding in all $5,000 in any fiscal year; fuel and rent of quarters where necessary for keepers of lighthouses; purchase of land sites for fog signals; rent of necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or to mark changeable channels and which in consequence can not be made permanent; rent of offices, depots, and wharves; traveling expenses; mileage; library books for light stations and vessels, and technical books and periodicals not exceeding $1,000; traveling and subsistence expenses of teachers while actually employed by States or private persons to instruct the children of keepers of lighthouses; all other contingent expenses of district offices and depots; and not exceeding $8,500 for contingent expenses of the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses in the District of Columbia, $4,200,000.

Hereafter post-lantern lights and other aids to navigation may be established and maintained, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Lighthouses, on the Yukon River and its tributaries, Alaska. The cost thereof shall be paid out of the annual appropriations for the Lighthouse Service.

Keepers of lighthouses: For salaries of not exceeding 1,800 lighthouse and fog-signal keepers and persons attending lights exclusive of post lights, $1,300,000.

Lighthouse vessels: For salaries and wages of officers and crews of light vessels and lighthouse tenders, including temporary employment when necessary, $1,800,000.

Superintendents, clerks, etc.: For salaries of 17 superintendents of lighthouses, and of clerks and other authorized permanent employees in the district offices and depots of the Lighthouse Service, exclusive of those regularly employed in the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses, District of Columbia, $400,000.

For retired pay of officers and employees engaged in the field service or on vessels of the Lighthouse Service, except persons continuously employed in district offices and shops, $70,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice in this section of the bill that the appropriation is a lump-sum appropriation for a number of purposes in connection with the Lighthouse Bureau of the Department of Commerce, and I notice among those items one for fog signals. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if in the appropriation which is allowed for this bureau there is a sufficient amount to take care of the emergency needs or recommendations with respect to those signals, which are now particularly important when we are developing such an enormous merchant marine, and when it is highly essential that in the ports of this country adequate safeguards should be given to shipping to protect it in times of fog as well as on other occasions?

Mr. GOOD. I think so.

Mr. BRIGGS. I have in mind the recommendation of the Department of Commerce for the establishment of a fog signal at the port of Galveston. Through that harbor passes the commerce which not only goes through the port of Galveston but Texas City, Port Bolivar, and Houston as well.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Do they not have a fog signal there?

Mr. BRIGGS. They do not; and they have made recommendations for a fog signal at $6,500.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This will not provide fog signals.

Mr. GOOD. They can purchase one.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; they can not. Fog signals are provided for by special legislation. All this is is an appropriation for aids to navigation. I think there is a bill coming up shortly—I do not think it ought to come up—providing for additional aids to navigation.

I served for many years on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and as chairman of a subcommittee dealing with new aids to navigation. If there is any really important place in the United States that has not got some aid to navigation, or any important place that has not got a light or fog signal, I do not know where it is.

Mr. BRIGGS. They have lights, and this is probably the greatest cotton port in the world. They ship more cotton from there than from any other port in the world.

Mr. GOOD. I think they have authority to place a fog signal there.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I do not think so. We pass special bills in reference to this matter—general acts, of course—providing for new aids to navigation in various places, and providing what they shall be; but in nearly every place where they have a light and can use a fog signal they have a fog signal in connection with it.

Mr. BRIGGS. They have some provision whereby they erected a light on the end of this south jetty, for instance, which projects out into the ocean about six and a half miles from the port of Galveston. It is one of the revetments there that assists in making the harbor and deepening the channel.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Lighthouse Board recommends in its annual report every year the establishment of new aids to navigation. Those recommendations go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] is a leading light. They have reported a bill taking in, I suppose, the cases that are most needed. I do not remember what they are. I think that bill is still pending. It is likely to be called up when that committee is reached on a Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does that bill carry an appropriation as well as just an authorization?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Just the authorization.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understood the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to state that, in any event, this appropriation carries sufficient money to meet the needs of that department with respect to these aids to navigation. Is that correct, I will ask the chairman?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that an estimate was made by the department, and my answer is based upon that. When the department estimated that it needed $6,500 for improving Galveston Jetty Light Station, I assumed, of course, that there was a light station there and that that light station has been established by law. If not, how could they improve one not established and built?

Mr. BRIGGS. They have a light station there.

Mr. GOOD. And when they asked for $6,500, without saying just what it was for, of course I assumed that they would spend it for the purposes for which they were making the estimate.

Mr. BRIGGS. There is a light station there.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and there being a light station there, I will say to the gentleman that they could buy a fog signal out of this appropriation just as quickly as they could out of an appropriation of $6,500 that did not describe a fog signal.

Mr. BRIGGS. So that this does carry that item in this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know what they will do. When these aids are established they are established as light stations, or light and fog-signal stations, specifically naming what they are to be; and if the department spends money in a way not authorized, it is violating the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, I do not know that the department will do this work. What we have done is to give $4,200,000 as against the regular appropriation of $3,500,000 last year, and then $500,000 to take care of considerable damage that was done to the Lighthouse Service during the year. Now, we have carried $200,000 more than the total appropriation for this year, an amount ample to take care of the very needy projects; and if this is one of the very needy projects in the opinion of the Lighthouse Service, and if it is authorized, then the service will have the money to do the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BRAND: Page 135, line 7, after the word "Columbia," strike out "$4,200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,300,000."

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this amendment is introduced by me at the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DRANE], who is interested in this paragraph of the bill. I am informed at his office that this proposed increase of $100,000, making the appropriation $4,300,000, is in accordance with the estimate furnished by the department to the committee, which reduced the estimate from $4,300,000 to $4,200,000.

The gentleman from Florida is interested in this increase, as is the whole State of Florida, on account of the imperfections of its water front. He is absent unavoidably, and at his request I have introduced this amendment and submit it to the committee with the hope that it will be given proper consideration and passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRAND].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BRAND. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to transfer, under such rules and regulations as he may deem advisable, to educational institutions and to museums such instrument of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey as, in his judgment, are of historical value, but of no further use in the work of that survey, except such historical instruments as may be needed by the Smithsonian Institution for exhibit at the National Museum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, on page 142, line 21, I move to strike out the word "instrument" and insert the word "instruments."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yes Bay (Alaska) Hatchery: Superintendent, $1,500; foreman, $1,200; two fish-culturists, at $900 each; three apprentice fish-culturists, at $900 each; cook, $900; in all, $8,220.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLER. I do so, Mr. Chairman, in order to ask a question in regard to Yes Bay hatchery. I believe there were some items eliminated from that Yes Bay estimate for the scientific propagation of fish.

Mr. GOOD. They have for the current year $8,220. We gave them just exactly what they have this year.

Mr. MILLER. Was not their appropriation asked for some special purpose?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they asked that the salary of the superintendent be increased from $1,500 to $2,000, that of the foreman from $1,200 to $1,500, and the salaries of the two fish culturists from $900 to $1,200 each. The committee did just what it did in all the other cases, left those salaries just as they are at present. They asked the same increases in all the other stations practically, and the committee denied the increases.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of fish-cultural stations, general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, temporary labor, and not to exceed $10,000 for propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels and the necessary expenses connected therewith, $400,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is there any provision, and if so where, for the maintenance of what they call rescue stations? I know they have them on the Mississippi River. The river overflows and a great many fish come out of the river and get into the low places, and then the water recedes and they are left there, and in the course of a month or so the water dries up and the fish are destroyed. The department have what they call rescue stations, and they get tens of thousands, and, I suppose, millions of fish out of the borrow pits and other holes where the water remains for a while. That is a very important activity. I could not locate the appropriation for it in this bill.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose that is paid for out of the appropriation carried on page 151, commencing with line 18, if the work is not done at some of the permanent stations. At Hotner, Minn., there is one of these rescue stations, and I am familiar with the work that is being done, as most of the Members are, because streams are being supplied with fish now from these rescue stations. I think some of that rescue work is done by launches and other vessels that are maintained by the bureau.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I know they have these rescue stations in my district, and they do a great deal of good. They save many thousands of fish. I was wondering if those rescue stations were being taken care of. They ought to be.

Mr. GOOD. Yes. They have the same money for next year as they have for this year. We have not eliminated any appropriation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman feels confident that they are being provided for in some of these appropriations?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. If the work is not done at stations for which specific appropriations are made, it is paid for out of one of the lump sums provided for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inquiry respecting food fishes: For inquiry into the causes of the decrease of food fishes in the waters of the United States, the study of the methods and relations of the fisheries, and for investigation and experiments in respect to the aquatic animals, plants, and waters, in the interests of fish culture and the fishery industries, including expenses of travel and preparation of reports, $45,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, on page 152, line 7, I move to strike out the words "the study of the methods and relations of the fisheries."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 152, line 7, after the word "States," strike out "the study of the methods and relations of the fisheries."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am doing this at the request of the bureau. The committee in framing the bill felt that this sentence should appear in this paragraph instead of the paragraph that follows. The paragraph that follows is a paragraph dealing with statistical inquiries only, to provide for statistics with regard to fisheries, and it seemed to us that the scientific work ought to be performed in the division appropriated for in this paragraph, and the statistical division confined to pure statistics; but for some reason or other for a number of years this statistical bureau has had saddled upon it some scientific work, and the department claims that it will be seriously hampered if we change the mode. So if this amendment is agreed to I propose to offer an amendment to insert in the next paragraph the language stricken out of this paragraph. We can try it another year, but sooner or later some one will make an adjustment in the interest of economy along this line.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statistical inquiry: For collections and compilation of statistics of the fisheries, including travel and preparation of reports, and all other necessary expenses in connection therewith, $5,500.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "fisheries," the words "the study of the methods and relations of the fisheries," and I also move to strike out the figures "$5,500," in line 15, and insert the figures "$7,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOOD: Page 152, line 13, after the word "fisheries," insert the words "the study of the methods and relations of the fisheries," and in line 15 strike out "$5,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,500."

Mr. LAYTON. Is the gentleman increasing the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. Two thousand dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman if there is any provision in the bill for the repair of fish hatcheries?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; on page 151, beginning with line 4, is an appropriation for maintenance and equipment.

Mr. MILLER. That would include repairs of fish hatcheries?

Mr. GOOD. The ordinary repairs as far as maintenance is concerned.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to ask the gentleman another question. Referring back to page 150, line 1, in reference to Yes Bay, was not there an appropriation asked for by the Department of Commerce of $15,000 and one for $60,000?

Mr. GOOD. I have a letter from the head of the bureau, but it does not ask for any special appropriation for repairs of that station, but states that they could make the needed repairs out of the regular appropriation.

Mr. MILLER. What is the regular appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. Four hundred thousand dollars; that is used in all the fisheries. Of course, if we carried an independent item for each station, this lump sum of $400,000 would be unnecessary.

Mr. MILLER. My casual reading of the item would not carry with it the right to make repairs.

Mr. GOOD. The commissioner wrote me, under date of April 9, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, April 9, 1920.

HON. JAMES W. GOOD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The governor of Alaska has sent to this office your letter to him, dated April 7, regarding an appropriation for repairs at the salmon hatchery at Yes Bay, Alaska.

Permit me to state that no special estimate for this purpose is before your committee. The hatchery is important, and the repairs are urgently needed, but we expect to be able to make them out of our general appropriation.

Respectfully, yours, H. M. SMITH, Commissioner.

Mr. MILLER. I have a number of telegrams from the Association of Pacific Fisheries regarding Yes Bay, in which they urgently ask that the appropriation be continued.

Mr. GOOD. It is continued.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska, general service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, including the furnishing of food, fuel, clothing, and other necessities of life to the natives of the Pribilof Islands of Alaska, transportation of supplies to and from the islands, expenses of travel of agents and other employees and subsistence while on said islands, hire and maintenance of vessels, and for all expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved April 21, 1910, entitled "An act to protect the seal fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes," and for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, including travel, hire of boats, employment of temporary labor, and all other necessary expenses therewith, $140,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert after the word "expenses," page 153, line 9, the word "connected."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 153, line 9, after the word "expenses," insert "connected."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman how many natives on the Pribilof Islands the Government supplies with food and clothing?

Mr. GOOD. Not very many. Since the flu epidemic a number of native children were left orphans in Alaska. It is necessary to provide food and clothing for them. There are not very many. My collection is about 200.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, with permission of the gentleman I will say that most of that expenditure is repaid. In the main these are sums paid for supplies furnished the natives who have to do with the killing and skinning of the seals and the care of the whole herd.

Mr. GOOD. That is correct. I was thinking of another item regarding care of the natives.

Mr. WATSON. Has the chairman an estimate of the value of the furs?

Mr. GOOD. The receipts on account of furs during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, amounted to $1,282,000.

Mr. WATSON. That is for all Alaska?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. And $150,000 protects over a million dollars, which is the value of the annual sale of seal furs?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; much more than that. That is about the annual crop. Of course, the seal herd belongs to the United States.

Mr. WATSON. But I wanted to know the value of the furs protected by this appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. The skins that year amounted to $1,182,000, and we are only killing a limited amount.

Mr. WATSON. Is there a closed season?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they are allowed to kill only a certain number of seals. The law specifically fixes that.

Mr. WATSON. Are the natives employed by the Government?

Mr. GOOD. They are.

Mr. WATSON. And, of course, paid by the Government?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Testing of large scales: For investigation and testing of railroad track scales, elevator scales, and other scales used in weighing commodities for interstate shipments and to secure equipment and assistance for testing the scales used by the Government in its transactions with the public, such as post-office, navy-yard, and customhouse scales, and for the purpose of cooperating with the States in securing uniformity in the weights and measures laws and in the methods of inspection, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $40,000.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

For enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; cost of reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto; expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expenses of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation; refunding of head tax and maintenance bills upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $2,600,000: Provided, That the purchase, use, maintenance, and operation of horse and motor vehicles required in the enforcement of the immigration and Chinese exclusion laws outside of the District of Columbia may be contracted for and the cost thereof paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of those laws, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe: Provided further, That not more than $12,000 of the sum appropriated herein may be expended in the purchase and maintenance of such motor vehicles: Provided further, That the appropriation herein made for the enforcement of the immigration laws shall be available for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: Page 157, line 8, after the figures "$2,600,000," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the Secretary of Labor in the expenditure of said sum shall allot to the Commissioner General of Immigration for maintaining a border patrol guard, to guard the border between the United States and Mexico, against the unlawful entry of aliens and undesirable persons into the United States, such amounts as will enable the Commissioner General of Immigration to perform adequately the duties authorized by law as to the exclusion of such aliens and undesirable persons."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the chairman of the committee that I am not endeavoring to add to the appropriation, but merely ask that an adequate sum out of $2,600,000 be allotted to the Director General of Immigration for the purpose of enforcing the law now in existence. I will state to the Members of the House that a hearing was had and my resolution was reported, and I want to read a part of the testimony of the supervising inspector, Mr. Berkshire, who was on the witness stand for two days, I believe, before the Committee on Immigration. This gentleman is now stationed and has been for 14 years in my home city of El Paso as supervising inspector, and he testified as to the need for reenforcing the border patrol, which was established by law two years ago. President Wilson, out of the fund voted to him by this Congress of $100,000,000 for the enforcement of law, granted $500,000 for this border patrol. Mr. Berkshire testified as follows:

Mr. BAKER. Well, with the ease with which they can cross and with no guards to prevent them, it has been known that there has been a very fair sum paid for the landing of each Japanese or Chinese that crosses; has that not been a fact within the last few years?

Mr. BERKSHIRE. Yes; that is one of the big problems of the border.

Mr. RAKER. Then, as a matter of fact, the Government of the United States, for the want of an appropriation, has practically left down, and now leaves down, the bars between the United States and Mexico to permit undesirables—Mexicans, Chinese, and Japanese—to enter the United States.

Mr. BERKSHIRE. That is the situation, in a few words.

Mr. RAKER. Diseased or otherwise; containing infectious diseases as well as being otherwise undesirable.

Mr. BERKSHIRE. There is practically nothing to prevent them from coming in if they so desire.

Mr. SIEGEL. At the place where you are stationed, how many physicians have you for the purpose of examining immigrants?

Mr. BERKSHIRE. Well, we have one or more physicians at every station; we have a sufficient number of physicians to examine——

Mr. SIEGEL (interposing). How many to examine each immigrant?

Mr. BERKSHIRE. Only one.

Mr. SIEGEL. And that is done under special order?

Mr. BERKSHIRE. The Public Health Service supplies the medical officer for any station we may have; it depends on how many we require.

That is a part of the testimony of this gentleman who was the supervising inspector on the border for a distance of 2,000 miles. Since this border patrol was taken off, his testimony goes on to state, hundreds and thousands of Japanese, undesirable Mexicans, and Chinese have crossed the border at will. I was interested in a discussion which took place a few moments ago relative to raising the appropriation for the Attorney General's Department. I want to state that unless the border patrol is put back to its original strength, you will have to still further increase the appropriation for the Attorney General's Department to enforce the law and keep out these undesirable Chinese, Japanese, and Mexicans who are coming across in that rough country, where, as Mr. Berkshire states, they have only a sufficient amount of men at the regular immigration stations. It is just a question of whether or not the Members of this House want the law enforced against undesirable aliens. I would say to you that if the conditions described by Mr. Berkshire and other immigration officials continues on that border we will be overrun in two years with undesirable aliens—Japanese, Chinese, and Mexicans.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the Secretary of Labor at will can lift the provisions in regard to the literacy test and the head tax and let Mexicans come in, why have a border patrol?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Simply to keep out the undesirables.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And also, if as the testimony shows, when they had this border patrol wet backs came in by swimming the river by the hundreds?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to state to the gentleman that the testimony does not show that condition. It shows a condition after the border patrol was taken off, and that then the wet backs, the graybacks, and the bluebacks came across the river. That was after the border patrol was taken off. If you want the immigration law enforced, then vote for this amendment so that the border patrol can be reinstated.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. When was this border patrol reduced in number?

Mr. HUDSPETH. About a year ago, as I recall now. I will state to the gentleman from Kansas that these men in the border patrol are men who were inured to the hardships of the border, men who understood the conditions there, who could ride those trails and who knew the trails where these people were likely to come across. To-day we have men enough only at the regular stations, and that is the reason we are flooded with Japanese and Chinese.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I do not care to raise any question of order if this is the regular patrol that is authorized by law.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Then I do not quite understand the purport of the gentleman's amendment. The department has all of the money necessary. What the gentleman is asking, then, is practically that the Secretary of Labor shall perform the duties prescribed by law in this respect.

Mr. HUDSPETH. What I am asking is that upon the request of the Director General of Immigration he is allowed a sufficient fund to reestablish the border patrol. He wants the authority of Congress.

Mr. GOOD. But we have a law now to that effect.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is true.

Mr. GOOD. We appropriate money in a lump sum, and it is the duty of the Secretary of Labor to allot a sufficient amount of money to make effective that patrol.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is to simply emphasize the matter. He could do it without this amendment if he had this money, but it is simply emphasizing the fact that Congress desires the immigration laws of the country enforced and that men who are capable and efficient be placed down on that border of 2,000 miles.

Mr. GOOD. I assume the Secretary of Labor——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Now, suppose the Commissioner of Immigration should ask the Secretary of Labor to allot him $100,000 for this purpose, or any sum, and suppose the Secretary of Labor should say that it is not necessary to allot over $25,000. Now, the expenditure of the funds being within the control of the Secretary of Labor, after all it does not seem to me that we are getting very far by the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It does to me.

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of Labor can then allot the amount which, in his judgment, is sufficient to bring about an effective control, and he has that right now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. We had the same law relative to custom officials, and yet my colleague from Texas a few days ago introduced a similar amendment providing sufficient funds to emphasize the fact that it is needed.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and the gentleman's colleague virtually admitted that that did not get anywhere except to tell an official of the Government to do what the law required him to do.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am candid to say that that is all we are telling him by this amendment—that is all—emphasizing the fact that a border patrol is needed and that he should allot sufficient funds out of the $2,600,000 to reestablish the board of patrol to its former strength to prevent these undesirables from coming across.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I renew it. May we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Now, I would like to state to the gentleman from Illinois that this is not increasing this appropriation. It is simply establishing a border patrol that is authorized by law, and the testimony, as I have just read—the gentleman was not in the Chamber—by the supervising inspector is that the border there, 2,000 miles in length, is now left unprotected, so that Japanese, Chinese, and undesirable aliens are coming in at their will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How much will this take of this $2,600,000?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How much does the gentleman estimate that it will take of this?

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman heard the testimony of Mr. Berkshire, who stated it would take about $250,000. The gentleman remembers that testimony as well as I do.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Would this keep Texas and Arizona from bringing over people to work on the farms?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Not at all. They bring them through the regular immigration stations. This keeps, I will say to the gentleman, these people from entering surreptitiously through these passes, through that rough country, and I do not think any gentleman here would object to it after it has been explained.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that where we make a lump-sum appropriation of this sort we should by an amendment direct a Secretary how it shall be expended. It has to be taken from somewhere else if it is to be expended here.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The same amendment was offered by my colleague, the dean of the Texas delegation, with reference to customs officials a few days ago, and the gentleman withdrew the point of order. It was just identical——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That shows that I erred the other day and one error is not sufficient reason for two. I ought to have insisted on the point of order the other day so it would not be a precedent.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman should not be partial to an older Member as against a new Member who comes here and tries to have the laws enforced.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, it is not our duty to enforce the laws, it is our duty to enact the laws. I do not think it is in order to——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, the Secretary now has the jurisdiction. This is directing the Secretary how he shall allot the money. That is legislation, not an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment in the form in which it is now is an affirmative direction to the Secretary of Labor in respect to the use of the money appropriated by the section, that in the form in which it is now offered it is not a limitation and therefore sustains the point of order.

[Mr. JOHNSON of Washington addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's discussion ought to be made while a fuller membership is here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman objects, I withdraw my request.

Mr. CALDWELL. I would like to hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a House full here or we ought to quit. I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-nine Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 13590. An act granting the consent of Congress to Sid Smith, of Bonham, Tex., for the construction of a bridge across the Red River between the counties of Fannin, Tex., and Bryan, Okla.;

H. R. 13724. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at or near Orange, Tex.; and

H. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the participation of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Provincetown and Plymouth, Mass.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Tuesday, May 11, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 11, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, with every mention of Thy name we come to the point of the supreme choice of life. Thou dost bring us to the issue of life by the revelations of Thyself to men. We pray that as we begin the duties of this day, lifting our hearts to Thy throne, our choice may be the choice of God's will and of God's way. May we surrender ourselves fully into Thy keeping, that we may to-day guard the honor of God and advance the interests of Thy kingdom through our work. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Reading Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when on request of Mr. CURTIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, one of its clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented a memorial of the Sunday School of the Church of the Brethren, of Waterloo, Iowa, remonstrating against compulsory military training and praying for the enactment of legislation providing for physical education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Me., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of Mason County Pomona Grange, No. 52, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ludington, Mich., and a petition of Hamlin Resort Grange, No. 1354, Patrons of Husbandry, of Ludington, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to farmers the right of collective bargaining, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of Phillip Elliott Hodges Post, No. 22, American Legion, of Saginaw, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing adjusted compensation to ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. NEWBERRY) presented a petition of the Federation of Women's Clubs, of Oakland County, Mich., and a petition of sundry citizens of Port Huron, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the public protection of maternity and infancy, which were referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2279) to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Humboldt National Forest, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 585) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10072) to provide for the punishment of officers of United States courts wrongfully converting moneys coming into their possession, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 584) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13416) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 583) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12530) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 582) thereon.

REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA.

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 357):

Whereas the testimony adduced at the hearings conducted by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations have clearly established the truth of the reported massacres and other atrocities from which the Armenian people have suffered; and

Whereas the people of the United States are deeply impressed by the deplorable conditions of insecurity, starvation, and misery now prevalent in Armenia; and

Whereas the independence of the Republic of Armenia has been duly recognized by the supreme council of the peace conference and by the Government of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the sincere congratulations of the Senate of the United States are hereby extended to the people of Armenia on the recognition of the independence of the Republic of Armenia, without prejudice respecting the territorial boundaries involved; and be it

Further resolved, That the Senate of the United States hereby expresses the hope that stable government, proper protection of individual liberties and rights, and the full realization of nationalistic aspirations may soon be attained by the Armenian people; and be it

Further resolved, That in order to afford necessary protection for the lives and property of citizens of the United States at the port of Batum and along the line of the railroad leading to Baku, the President is hereby requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to cause a United States warship and a force of marines to be dispatched to such port with instructions to such marines to disembark and to protect American lives and property.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4361) to provide for the relief of certain officers of the Naval Reserve Force, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 4362) to authorize the purchase of Federal farm-loan bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4363) repealing war-time legislation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4364) granting a pension to Oscar Miller (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4365) for the relief of the Great Lakes Engineering Works; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4366) for the relief of Charles G. Griffa; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROMOTION OF ARMY OFFICERS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The report was read and agreed to, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 10.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, 9, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the House insert the following: "the sum of $10,000"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Col. William A. Simpson: That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, Col. William A. Simpson, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of brigadier general on the retired list.

"SEC. 2½. Col. Robert H. Peck: That Col. Robert H. Peck, Eleventh Infantry, Regular Army, who, under the authority of the act approved July 12, 1912, was, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed a captain of Infantry, United States Army, to take rank at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry, be, and he hereby is, restored to the position on the lineal list of majors of Infantry of the Regular Army which he would have held had he not been out of the service; that is to say, to a place on the lineal list of majors of Infantry just above that occupied by Maj. H. E. Yates. But nothing in this act contained shall entitle the said Robert H. Peck to back pay or allowances."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Credit in the accounts of Col. Jesse McI. Carter: The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Col. Jesse McI. Carter, Cavalry, United States Army, the sum of $352.23, disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

"SEC. 6½. Omer Germain Paquet: That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the reenlistment in the United States Army, at the grade held by him at the time of his dishonorable discharge from the service, of Omer Germain Paquet, formerly a quartermaster sergeant; and the said Omer Germain Paquet shall, for the purposes of computing continuous service, for ascertaining the rate at which he shall be paid, and for retirement, be considered to have served continuously from the date of his last enlistment."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 8. William Shelby Barriger: That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, William Shelby Barriger, who enlisted in the Regular Army on September 15, 1900, and who rose to be a first lieutenant of Cavalry, at present temporary major of Quartermaster Department, a captain of Cavalry, to take rank at the foot of the regular list of captains of Cavalry: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act: Provided further, That the total number of captains of Cavalry is increased by one for the purpose of this act."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 9. Capt. J. C. Garrett: That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, J. C. Garrett, formerly a captain of Cavalry, to rank as if he had remained continuously in the service."

And the House agree to the same.

J. S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS S. CRAGO,
ROLLIN B. SANFORD,
J. W. WISE,
Managers on the part of the House.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GRONNA. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 12272) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes. I wish to state for the information of the Senate that there are three provisions of the bill which are still in disagreement. The provision for free seeds, likewise the provision authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to ascertain whether or not the fees paid upon the western ranges are sufficient, and also what is known as the Comer amendment, affecting the standards of cotton. I ask that the report lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The report will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1699) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 1699, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 8, 9, 15.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 5, 6, 10, 11, 13, 14, 16, 19, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "sixty-two" and "sixty" where they occur and insert in lieu thereof the words "sixty-five" and "sixty-two," respectively, so that the amendment shall read: "Provided, That mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, and post-office clerks shall be eligible for retirement at 65 years of age, and railway postal clerks at 62 years of age, if said mechanics, city and rural letter carriers, post-office clerks, and railway postal clerks shall have rendered at least 15 years of service computed as prescribed in section 3 of this act"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the original language stricken out, adding thereto the words "or by other competent authority," so that the amendment shall read: "appointed directly by the commissioners or by other competent authority"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed by the House insert the following: "Provided, That no person employed in the executive departments within the District of Columbia, retired under the provisions of this act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, shall be replaced by additional employees, but if the exigencies of the service so require, places made vacant by such retirement may be filled by promotion or transfer of eligible employees already in the service"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "redeposited" insert the words "with interest," so that the amendment shall read: "Provided, That all money so returned to an employee must be redeposited with interest before such employee may derive any benefit under the provisions of this act, upon reinstatement or retransfer to a classified position"; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Between the words "be" and "entitled," in line 8 of the amendment, insert the word "legally," so that the amendment shall read: "Provided, That if in case of death the amount of deductions to be paid under the provisions of this section does not exceed $300, and if there has been no demand upon the Commissioner of Pensions by a duly appointed executor or administrator, the payment may be made, after the expiration of three months from date of death, to such person or persons as may appear in the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions to be legally entitled to the proceeds of the estate, and such payment shall be a bar to recovery by any other person"; and the House agree to the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there is one feature of this conference report which, in my judgment, is unfortunate. I refer to that which reduces the age of retirement. Under the report many officials and employees who are beneficiaries of the bill are authorized to retire from the public service at the ages of 62 and 65, respectively. We had considerable discussion on that subject when the bill was before the Senate. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] at that time offered an amendment, which the Senate adopted, fixing the age of retirement at 70, and the reasons which he assigned for his amendment were, I think, conclusive. So believing, I want to urge upon the Senate the importance of recommitting the bill to the committee of conference with instruction to insist upon the Senate provision regarding the subject of age retirement.

Employees at the ages of 62 and 65 should be the most useful and valuable of all those in the civil service. Presumably they represent the experience and capacity which ripe years bring to any vocation, and therefore make them presumably more useful than at any previous time of their employment. We propose under the conference report to encourage the retirement from the public service of that valuable class of men, the most of them in the full possession of their mental and physical vigor, and pay them $700 or $800 a year, and at the same time enable them in private life to obtain compensation for service which should belong to the Government under every principle of equity as applied to a pension system.

I am informed that a number of men now in the service having reached that time of life intend to take immediate advantage of this liberality and enter private employment at prevailing rates of compensation and at the same time draw $700 and $750 a year out of the Treasury. Mr. President, that is indefensible; it is inexcusable; and I protest against it.

If the Government has become an eleemosynary institution whose principal mission in the world is to shower its financial favors upon its citizens, both those in and those outside of its employment, let us unhesitatingly say so and act accordingly. But if the Government is to be regarded and is to be administered according to the principles upon which and in obedience to the purposes and objects for which it has been founded, then the sooner we go back to first principles the better.

The civil service is organized. Thanks to the liberality and encouragement of the present administration, its rank and file act as a unit and are verifying the apprehensions of those who opposed the civil-service system some 20 or 30 years ago. They possess political power and are on the job all the time. They hold the rod of an implied menace over the head of every Member of Congress and do not hesitate to exercise it in connection with all proposed measures of legislation intended for their benefit, and they also see to it that those measures are as frequent as they desire, and that they shall receive the active consideration of the committees at every session. The boon which we now give them, and which I favor, of an old-age retirement pension, under this conference report is supplemented by a privilege which is of enormous value and at the expense of the Government which these people serve.

What would be thought, Mr. President, of a great business institution pensioning its old employees which would not only permit but would encourage the retirement of men and women in the very prime of their powers and in the possession of expert acquirements that they have obtained through long years of service in that particular institution? It might be regarded as an act of unusual and praiseworthy philanthrophy, but it would operate to the demoralization of the force by the encouragement of the retirement of the best element of the working force, whose availability in all departments of enterprise and industry is at present too obvious to require comment.

I do not know how many of the vast army of Federal employees have reached or are approaching the ages of 62 and 65 years. I do know, however, that every bill designed to increase pay which is pending at present upon our calendars or before committees is sustained, among other things, by the argument that such increased pay is absolutely necessary to hold the force in Government employ; that scores upon scores of useful civil-service employees have left and are daily leaving the service because of the small emolument provided for their compensation and because of the attractions of better pay in private life. We are warned that unless these increases are made the service will suffer very seriously because of continued depletion, the only way to prevent which is increased compensation; and there is a great deal of truth in the contention; yet in the very presence of it we are encouraging others to leave, we are paying them to leave at a crisis in the administration of the civil service consequent upon so many defections independent of this bill. Of course, it is done because it is demanded by the combinations of employees, against which the virtue and moral courage of the average Member of either House of Congress can not stand, and especially in this year of the presidential election.

Mr. President, I shall submit a motion if it is necessary that the Senate do not concur in this conference report; that they stand by their bill and ask for a further conference. I know of no point of order that can be made against the report. I do not want to make one even if there were, because my objection is concentrated upon this one recession of the Senate members of the conference committee in their negotiation with the House members.

Mr. President, I do not care to detain the Senate in further discussion. I have expressed my objections to this report as clearly as I am able, and if they do not address themselves to the wisdom of the majority of the Senate, well and good. I feel, however, that those who vote to concur in the conference committee's report and accept it will, within the next year, regret their action, because of the enormous defection which will occur in the public service by those who desire to take advantage of the demand everywhere for labor, particularly skilled labor, and the Government in giving this largess to its employees will have deprived itself of the much-needed services of skilled or experienced employees.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I inquire of the chairman of the committee what was the age limit in the original House bill?

Mr. STERLING. The age limit in the original House as well as in the original Senate bill was 65 years. That pertained to employees generally. The age limit of 62 years was fixed for mail carriers, both rural and city carriers, post-office clerks, and mechanics, and 60 years for railway postal clerks. That was according to the original Senate and House bills.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What was the provision of the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. As the bill passed the Senate, the age of retirement was fixed at 70 years for all classes of employees.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. And the compromise now is 62 and 65 years, respectively?

Mr. STERLING. It is 70 years for employees generally, 65 years for rural and city letter carriers and post-office clerks, and mechanics, and 62 years for railway postal clerks. That is the compromise.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The compromise makes three distinctions as against a like number in the original House bill and one in the Senate bill?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Now, Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to occupy the time of the Senate for about 5 or 10 minutes, not on the pending matter, but upon another matter. I will not delay the consideration of the conference report for more than 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from South Dakota desire to address the Senate?

Mr. STERLING. I was going to address the Senate on the pending proposition.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, very well.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Idaho will defer his remarks until a little later, I do not think it will take very long to dispose of the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. I am only going to call attention to a matter which properly belongs to the morning hour, and it will not take over 5 or 10 minutes for me to do so; but I will wait until the Senator from South Dakota shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. STERLING. Very well. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to the remarks made by the Senator from Colorado and his criticism of the conference report. I do not share the views of the Senator from Colorado with regard to the injustice it will work upon the people if we adopt the ages provided for in the conference report.

I never saw much objection to 70 years as the limit for employees generally as we find them in the various executive departments of the Government; and hence, just before this bill passed the Senate I accepted the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] providing that 70 years shall be the retiring age. The bill went to conference, the House having passed the bill in its original form so far as the age limit was concerned by a vote, as I recall, of 237 to 53. On entering the conference it was manifest that the House conferees would not agree to the general 70-year limit, but that they would insist upon a distinction between the classes of employees and that for the rural and city carriers and post-office clerks and mechanics under the limitation of age should be 65 years, and that they would further insist on at least 62 years as the limit for railway postal clerks.

Mr. President, I think there is strong reason in the contention of the House conferees. In the case of the rural carrier, for example, exposed as he is to the extremes of heat and cold on his standard route of 24 miles or more than 24 miles, running up to 36 miles, shall it be a requirement of the Government of the United States that a man of 65 years of age and over shall keep on with that kind of work, exposed as he is, until he reaches the age of 70 years?

The Senator from Colorado would have a rural carrier serve until he is 70 years of age, but I can not insist that the rural carrier in South Dakota traveling his 24 or his 36 mile route, with the diminished vitality due to that age, shall continue in the service; nor am I ready to insist that the city carrier, carrying from 40 to 100 pounds of burden, with the diminished vitality necessarily arising from his age, shall continue in the service after he has reached 65 years of age.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I know of a great many farmers in my State who now have to cultivate their own farms and look after their own chores who have passed the age of 70, and who are doing this work and getting along without retirement pensions. If there is any difference between the man who serves the Government and the man who has to earn his own living in this country, then my selection goes to the man who has to earn his own living.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the objection of the Senator from Colorado goes to any retirement bill at all, and not to the principles of the retirement bill as presented in the conference report, nor to the ages provided for in the bill. It seems to be almost universally conceded—it was conceded by the opponents of the bill themselves when it was under discussion in the Senate—that we should have a retirement bill, and that it was to the reproach of this great Government that it, among the great nations of the world, had never provided any system of retirement for its civil-service employees. I think it is the general consensus of opinion, in fact almost the universal opinion, that the Government should have a civil-service retirement system. Mr. President, what further is there about the age provision? The employees of the Post Office Department, the rural and city carriers and the post-office clerks, are not obliged to retire at the age of 65 years. If they are competent and efficient and the head of the department shall so certify, they may remain in the service for a period of 10 years after the passage of this act.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I think I may reply to that argument as the Senator replied to mine. If that privilege is given, does it not argue that the early retirement fixed by the conference report is unnecessary and unwise? If it is merely a matter of selection or choice, then does it not indicate that the physical disability which this bill proposes arbitrarily to fix at those ages may not exist?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I think not, Mr. President. The principle of the bill is that if a man at 65 is exceptional and desires to serve, and he is certified to as competent, he may remain in the service. The bill is designed all along the line to give the exceptional man the privilege of serving. Taking the case of the railway postal clerks, 62 is fixed as the age of retirement, and I think justly and reasonably so. The work is arduous and is to a certain extent nerve-racking, and such employees at the age of 62 years, as a rule, I think, because of disability in that strenuous service are ready to retire. On the other hand, the man who is exceptionally strong may remain in the service of the Government for a period of 10 years after this law goes into effect, if he is qualified. It is provided in the bill, however, that after 10 years from the time the bill goes into effect the extension shall be limited to two periods of two years each, so that after the lapse of 10 years the man who is a rural carrier or a city carrier or a post-office clerk may remain in the service until he is 69 years of age, if he is qualified for the service.

So I say, Mr. President, that the exceptions to the 70-year-age limit for retirement are founded upon humane principles, to say nothing of efficiency in the service; and for that reason I am convinced that though the Senate passed the bill with 70 years as the age of retirement for all classes of employees the conference report in making these distinctions is just and reasonable and ought to be adopted.

There is a further thing to consider, Mr. President. This bill provides for a board of actuaries, one of whom shall be the present Government actuary, who will take into consideration the workings of the bill, how the service is affected thereby, what the cost to the Government will be, and whether it is founded on proper and just principles. There will be ample time, within the 10 years during which these men may serve this longer period of time, in which to test the principles upon which the bill is founded, and I sincerely hope there will be no question about the adoption of the report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when this bill went to conference, I took it for granted that the conferees of the Senate would try to stand for the action of the Senate; but the speech that has just been delivered by the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the Senate demonstrates to me beyond a question of a doubt that there was no chance for the Senate amendment. I think that if it had been left entirely with the Senate conferees the conference report would have embodied the ages as reported. They would have agreed to the ages as the House amendment provided and as the bill was originally introduced if the House conferees had strenuously insisted. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] I am confident is the only conferee that prevented such action. This conference report would have come back to the Senate with the years 60, 62, and 65, as originally introduced, had it not been for the Senator from Iowa.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate this morning to go over the ground again and give the reasons why the 70-year age limit agreed to by the Senate ought to have stood and ought to be the law.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I just want to correct the Senator from Utah in one respect. He says that had it not been for the Senator from Iowa the conferees would have reached an agreement upon the ages provided in the bill originally. The Senator is hardly warranted in making that statement. The conferees would not with my vote have reached that agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. I judged from the speech the Senator made——

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no; I made no remark whatever to justify that inference. I said in the course of my remarks that I had never had much objection to 70 years as the limit for employees generally, and I have insisted on a higher age than 65 for those in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the position of the Senator as it was stated when the bill was under consideration, and I judged from his remarks this morning that it had not changed an iota. I am glad, however, that the Senator made the statement he did.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am bound to say, I must say, that the Senate conferees were entirely loyal to the action of the Senate, no matter what their individual opinions may have been with regard to the propriety of the change made in the Senate upon the motion of the Senator from Utah. I feel that so much is due to my associates upon the conference committee.

So far as I am individually concerned, everybody knows that I am opposed to this bill. I am opposed to the principle upon which the bill is based. I do not believe that the Government ought to contribute anything to a pension fund except that sum necessary to put it into execution and cover the period of a few years after the enactment of the bill. I want no one to misunderstand my position in regard to that matter.

When it comes to the question of the age of retirement, however, I believe that there are some employees in the civil service of the United States who ought to be retired at an earlier age than 70 years; notably, the railway postal clerks. It would be, as I view it, very inconsiderate to pass a retirement bill which did not permit such employees to retire before they became 70 years of age.

I am entirely in accord with the report of the conference committee so far as railway postal clerks are concerned, and I think letter carriers in cities ought to be retired at an age below 70 years. If I could have had my own way, however, I would have preferred that the other employees should have been governed by the 70-year retirement age.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Iowa in his statement in relation to the age limit, if there were not a relief provision in the bill taking care of the cases of persons who are disabled, mentally or physically, where they have served the Government 15 years, I would insist upon having difference ages. My mail has been full of letters from employees of the Government complaining most bitterly of the limit of ages to 62 and 65. We will have mechanics retiring, under this conference report, at the age of 65 years. Let us see what one of the mechanics at the Government Printing Office says, and it is true. You can not deny what he says:

> The word "mechanic," as we understand it, includes the employees of the Government Printing Office. We work under conditions much more favorable than outside mechanics, not being subject to outside weather conditions, and are well housed.

Mr. President, that is true with all of the mechanics of the Government. That is true with all the post-office clerks of the Government. Why let a post-office clerk be retired at 65 years of age and a clerk in any other department of our Government at the age of 70? It can not be defended, Mr. President.

As I have stated, there is some reason for a railway postal clerk being retired at an earlier age, because of the very character of the service. It is hard on him physically to ride on railroads day in and day out, and night in and night out. No one doubts that. There is a provision in the bill, however, that will take care of that class of employees; and I fully agree with the Senator from Iowa that there is no reason whatever for having the mechanics and the post-office clerks retired at a different age than the other clerks in the Government service.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me just a moment, I may suggest a reason why I think post-office clerks should have a retirement age of 65 generally, rather than a higher age. The work is arduous. It requires the man to be on his feet all the time. Much of his work is night work. He must be of strong constitution and he must be alert of mind in order that he may distribute the mails and do the task assigned him. It is altogether different from the work of the clerk in the ordinary executive department, and it is for that reason that the age is fixed at 65 for that class of employees.

Further, Mr. President, I will warrant that the letter which the Senator from Utah has in his hand takes no account of the additional time which that mechanic may serve. He may serve for 10 years after he has reached the age of 65, if he is competent and desires to serve——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. STERLING. And after 10 years from the time the bill goes into effect he may serve 4 years, until reaching the age of 69. So that there is no cause of complaint on the part of any clerk who is nearing the age of 65 now, because he can continue in service.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no post-office clerk who can serve beyond 69 years of age. If he is granted two 2-year extensions, that is the limit.

Mr. STERLING. That is after the first 10 years.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, they are not going to put in men who are 59 years old to begin with. That will never happen, and particularly after this bill becomes a law.

Mr. President, I think it is proper for the RECORD to show just what this change is going to cost the Government of the United States, and at the same time I want to show what a saving there would have been to the Government of the United States if the age had remained at 70 years.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, the Senator is aware, from his experience in such matters, that the question of cost is of no consequence.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is true. I begin to think that the Senator from Colorado is absolutely right, and the only way to be popular in the United States is to grant every dollar that it is possible to get out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. As soon as possible.

Mr. SMOOT. If you do that, you are a very popular man, very popular indeed; but if you undertake to save a dollar of the people's money, if you undertake to reduce taxes in any way, you are a very unpopular man, and you are threatened with defeat whenever you come up for election. Such threats will have no effect upon me. I do not care whether I am defeated or whether I am elected, but as long as I am in public life I am going to try to save what I can of the people's money; and I do not mean to be niggardly in appropriations when I say that. I want to have appropriations made which will cover every requirement of the Government. I want the Government of the United States to be a better employer than any other Government on earth, and all the men laboring for the Government I want to work under the very best conditions that can be found in all the world, and all I ask of them is that for those favorable conditions they give a day's service to their Government. I am ready to have the Government take care of them in their old age, or in case unavoidable sickness comes to them; I want to see the Government do at least what the private employers of labor in this country will do. But in doing that, Mr. President, we need not go crazy; we need not lose our heads. We ought to be just to both the Government and the employees.

Mr. President, it will take me just a few moments now to put these figures in the RECORD, and then I shall say no more, because the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] tells me that he desires to proceed with the speech which he gave notice the other day he would deliver to-day. I shall take first railway postal clerks, and I am going to give the cost and the differences for only the first year.

Under the provisions of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill the Government would pay $536,324. Under the provisions of the Sterling bill as it passed the Senate it would pay $130,926, or a saving of $405,398.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what class of employees that covers?

Mr. SMOOT. That is just the railway postal clerks. The cost of pensions the first year under the provisions of the conference report will be $404,192, or a saving of $132,132. The difference in saving between the bill as it passed the Senate and the conference report is $273,266.

Take the rural and city letter carriers, post-office clerks, and mechanics: Under the provisions of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill the cost of the first year is $1,656,639. Under the provisions of the Sterling bill as it passed the Senate it is $509,492, a saving of $1,147,147. The cost of pensions the first year under the provisions of the conference report would be $1,082,495, a saving of $574,144.

For general employees the cost under the provisions of the Sterling-Lehlbach bill would be $2,391,908. Under the provisions of the Sterling bill as it passed the Senate it would be $1,410,971, or a saving of $980,937.

Mr. President, I am not going to present any more of the figures, but I ask that this table complete may go into the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Table showing the saving in cost of pensions the first year under the provisions of the Sterling bill as it passed the Senate compared with the Sterling-Lehlbach bill and per cent of saving, by class of employees, the saving in cost of pensions first year under provisions of the conference report compared with the Sterling-Lehlbach bill and per cent of saving, by class of employees, and the difference in saving between the bill as it passed the Senate and the conference report.

[In this table it is assumed that employees will retire as soon as they become eligible.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, owing to an accident, I was not here when the morning business closed. I gave notice that I should then move to take up the peace resolution. I do not want to interrupt the completion of the conference report, but if there is to be any more debate I shall have to move now to take up the peace resolution

Mr. STERLING. I sincerely hope that we may have a vote on this conference report now. I do not know of anyone else who desires to speak upon it.

Mr. KING. I think there will be further debate.

Mr. LODGE. Then I move to take up House joint resolution 327.

TERMINATION OF WAR WITH GERMANY.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 327, the peace resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire, before the vote is taken, whether that will displace the present order of business?

Mr. LODGE. It will.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does displace it.

On a division, the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 327) terminating the state of war declared to exist April 6, 1917, between the Imperial German Government and the United States, permitting on conditions the resumption of reciprocal trade with Germany, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the joint resolution of Congress passed April 6, 1917, declaring a state of war to exist between the Imperial German Government and the Government and people of the United States, and making provisions to prosecute the same, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and said state of war is hereby declared at an end: Provided, however, That all property of the Imperial German Government, or its successor or successors, and of all German nationals which was, on April 6, 1917, in or has since that date come into the possession or under control of the Government of the United States or of any of its officers, agents, or employees, from any source or by any agency whatsoever, shall be retained by the United States and no disposition thereof made, except as shall specifically be hereafter provided by Congress, until such time as the German Government has, by treaty with the United States, ratification whereof is to be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, made suitable provisions for the satisfaction of all claims against the German Government of all persons, wheresoever domiciled, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States, whether such persons have suffered, through the acts of the German Government or its agents since July 31, 1914, loss, damage, or injury to their persons or property, directly or indirectly, through the ownership of shares of stock in German, American, or other corporations, or otherwise, and until the German Government has given further undertakings and made provisions by treaty, to be ratified by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for granting to persons owing permanent allegiance to the United States, most favored nation treatment, whether the same be national or otherwise, in all matters affecting residence, business, profession, trade, navigation, commerce, and industrial property rights, and confirming to the United States all fines, forfeitures, penalties, and seizures imposed or made by the United States during the war, whether in respect to the property of the German Government or German nationals, and waiving any pecuniary claim based on events which occurred at any time before the coming into force of such treaty, any existing treaty between the United States and Germany to the contrary notwithstanding. To these ends, and for the purpose of establishing fully friendly relations and commercial intercourse between the United States and Germany, the President is hereby requested immediately to open negotiations with the Government of Germany.

SEC. 2. That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provision in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency.

SEC. 3. That until by treaty or act or joint resolution of Congress it shall be determined otherwise, the United States, although it has not ratified the treaty of Versailles, does not waive any of the rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages to which it and its nationals have become entitled under the terms of the armistice signed November 11, 1918, or any extensions or modifications thereof or which under the treaty of Versailles have been stipulated for its benefit as one of the principal allied and associated powers and to which it is entitled.

SEC. 4. That the joint resolution of Congress approved December 7, 1917, declaring that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provisions to prosecute the same, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and said state of war is hereby declared at an end, and the President is hereby requested immediately to open negotiations with the successor or successors of said Government for the purpose of establishing fully friendly relations and commercial intercourse between the United States and the Governments and peoples of Austria and Hungary.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to ask the senior Senator from Massachusetts, the leader on the other side, as to what debate he expects there will be on this resolution.

Mr. LODGE. It is my intention to keep the joint resolution before the Senate until it is disposed of. I think we ought to dispose of it one way or the other. I have not supposed from what I have heard that there will be very much debate. I know of only two or three speeches to be made on this side, and I gathered from what the Senator from Alabama told me that on the other side there would not be very many.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, most of the Senators on this side of the Chamber expect to resist the passage of the joint resolution on the final vote.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know of no disposition on this side to prevent its early consideration, but there are gentlemen here who desire to adjust their own time to meet the vote and to be prepared to make speeches. I was going to ask the Senator if he would be willing to make it the order of business until disposed of and take a recess instead of having a morning hour.

Mr. LODGE. That is my intention.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then it will be continuously before the Senate until disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. It is my intention to keep it continuously before the Senate, and, if necessary, to sit rather longer hours. I hope that we shall be able to finish it in a few days.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that will be satisfactory.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I stated to the Senator from Massachusetts yesterday, I am obliged to be away to-morrow and possibly Thursday. I think I can arrange to be back here on Thursday. I am compelled to be absent, and I prefer that there shall not be a final disposition of the joint resolution until Friday or after that day.

Mr. LODGE. I can not make any promises. The Senator understands that it is a matter out of my control; but I should not think that we would reach a vote before Thursday, from what I know of the intentions of Senators to speak.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish but a few minutes' time to record the reasons which guide me in casting my vote against both the original House resolution and the Knox substitute and incidentally to present reasons for a substitute which, if enacted, would immediately reinstate commercial relations between this country and all other countries with which we were lately at war, leaving the settlement of all war problems—all the important as well as the delicate questions involved in the causes of the war or growing out of it—to be dealt with by a treaty of peace, either independently on our part and the enemy nations or in conjunction with our allies.

Mr. President, section 1 of the House resolution reads:

> That a state of war declared to exist between the Imperial German Government and the United States by joint resolution of Congress approved April 6, 1917, is hereby declared at an end.

The Knox substitute, reciting our resolution declaring war, provides that the said resolution "be, and the same is hereby, repealed, to take effect upon the ratification of a treaty of peace between Germany and three of the principal allied and associated powers."

Under the House resolution the repeal takes effect as of the date of the approval of the resolution. Under the Knox substitute, inasmuch as three of the principal allied and associated powers have already ratified the treaty, the peace status with this country will have retroactively been in existence since the date of the ratification by the third power.

This peace status, Mr. President, created by this resolution is not dependent on any act or consent of Germany. I want Senators to keep this in mind. When we pass this resolution we become subject to all the rules of international comity which govern a nation in times of peace. Germany is not so limited. She can base every demand she may have stored against us on our peace status declaration.

While I am opposed to the enactment of this resolution prior to the adoption of the treaty of peace between this country and our late enemies, I am unable to agree with the reasoning of those Senators who hold to the theory that Congress, which has the sole power to create a state of war, has no right or authority to discontinue that state. In enumerating the powers of Congress the Constitution reads:

> Congress shall have the power to declare war, * * * to raise and support armies.

While the President approved and signed this war declaration, my opinion is that it would have been just as effective without his approval. As I construe this provision of the Constitution, a declaration of war by Congress, even if disapproved by the President, would still be effective in creating a war status. Of course, under the Constitution he is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and he might so command or so fail in his duty that the will of Congress might be defeated. The only remedy in such case would lie in impeachment proceedings.

So, too, while one Congress may declare a state of war, either the same or a subsequent Congress may, by refusal to make appropriations for its prosecution, nullify the purposes and effect of such declaration. I therefore can not doubt that the authority which has the sole power to create a war status, which has the unquestioned power to nullify its own acts by refusal to appropriate for its prosecution, has also the power to repeal and remove by direct action the status which it thus created.

But this is met by the contention that a state of war having been brought into existence can only be terminated by an agreement between the warring nations, and that an agreement between nations can only be consummated by treaty.

I agree that this is the only proper and expedient way of terminating war, certainly so when the enemy nation still retains its complete sovereignty and independence. But it is apparent to anyone that it is not the only means of bringing war to an end. The vanquished nation may be annexed and its contractual capacity thereby destroyed. Both parties may become exhausted and tired of the conflict, may withdraw their forces from the field of contest without any decisive action, and resume diplomatic and commercial relations without ever entering into any agreement for the settlement of either the causes of the war or the injuries which resulted from it.

On the technical question of whether, under our Constitution, we can by a law tantamount to a treaty enter into contractual relations with another Government, I shall not spend much time. I can not doubt that Congress, having the right to declare a war, having the right to refuse to vote for its continuance, can also end it by a straight declaration that a state of war which it declared to exist has ceased to exist.

Such a declaration is not a treaty. It is not a contract. In neither form does it require the consent of the other party. It is not even legislation and needs no act of approval of the President. It needs no consent on the part of the enemy Government. However, the House resolution and the Knox substitute, while not treaties, nevertheless require the signature of the President. They both enact legislation. In neither the House resolution nor the Knox substitute do we stop at the mere declaration of a status of peace. By section 3 of the House resolution Germany is commanded within 45 days to assure to the United States every right which would inure to this Government had we adopted the peace treaty. And if the German Government fails to do so it is made the duty of the President to inhibit all intercourse between this Government and its nationals and the Government or nationals of Germany, and provision is made for punishment of anyone who fails to comply with this inhibition. That is legislation pure and simple, and requires the concurrence of the Executive.

The same power and penalty are provided in the first paragraph of the Knox substitute. In both it is put up to the German Government to take positive action or suffer a positive penalty. If the German Government takes action, acquiescing in our demands, we have effectuated an international agreement without bringing into operation the methods adopted by this country and by all countries for the settlement of international questions and agreements by treaties. If we can do this, we can, of course, dispense with the treaty-making power entirely by enacting a law looking to an international agreement, which is to become effective upon the consent of the nation or nations to which the law is addressed. I am inclined to think that there is nothing in the Constitution which prevents this. I am positive, however, that from its very nature it is an inexpedient and improper method of entering into international agreements and that it is just as improper, and even more so, as a method of settling war questions.

Nor can it be urged, Mr. President, upon the ground of necessity. The only real necessity for this action is that it will permit the resumption of commercial relations between this country and Germany. But that can be accomplished by a mere repeal of the law prohibiting commercial relations and authorizing their resumption, a mere declaration that, inasmuch as there are actually no hostilities between the countries, as their armies have been withdrawn from the field of contest, all commercial relations between the two countries and their people may be resumed upon the basis of our prewar status and that all laws in conflict are repealed. Naturally I should prefer that before we resume even those relations every matter of difference should be settled by a treaty, but as that seems to be beyond our most ardent hopes, due to a spirit of political and partisan obduracy, and as the interests of both countries demand the immediate resumption of commercial relations, I would favor at this time a law repealing any statute which now exists which interferes with the free exchange of commercial commodities.

Why this roundabout method of repealing war laws? If we wish to repeal any act which we now believe should be abrogated why not do so directly? Or if we wish to repeal them all at one time, why not enumerate them and declare that they are hereby repealed? I know of no serious injury that would result from repealing all of them. On the other hand I do know that most serious complications might and probably would ensue by declaring a status of peace before we have settled the thousands of questions, the rights and liabilities that have grown out of this war.

I have introduced a substitute resolution which would meet the only disadvantage that results from the prolongation of this hiatus between war and peace. This resolution reads:

Resolved, etc., That commercial relations between the United States and Germany be, and the same are hereby, resumed to the same extent and under the same limitations as though no war had existed between the said Governments, and all laws prohibiting trade and commerce between the nationals of said Governments enacted since the 6th day of April, 1917, are hereby repealed in so far as they are in conflict with this resolution.

This resolution throws wide open the gateway of commercial relations between this country and Germany and leaves the settlement of the many delicate questions of difference between the two great countries growing out of the war or out of previously existing treaties to be settled by a new treaty of peace which will safeguard our every interest. That is all the American people can hope to accomplish to-day. That would relieve the uncertainty of which the Senator from Pennsylvania complains.

I, however, realize how useless it would be to press this compromise resolution where the lines of division between the two factions in this body have been cemented by partisanship and set and hardened by time. The majority on this side of the Chamber purpose to force the acceptance of the reservations adopted by the Senate without the change of a single word or letter.

The majority on the other side, in obedience to the will of the President, have resolved to make the League of Nations a political issue.

Mr. President, I think this administration has made many mistakes, but all will become insignificant compared with the colossal blunder of making the President's individual and autocratic stand on the League of Nation's a political issue. And, partisan as I am, I confess even now a deep sense of sympathy for the humiliation that awaits a great party, which, with all its weaknesses, has subserved a great purpose in our national history.

While the people of this country by a vast majority do desire that we should, in conjunction with the other great nations of the world, take some decisive forward step to prevent a recurrence of another such useless and unprovoked calamity as this World War, and while many feel that we have been somewhat selfish, somewhat unfair to our associates in our reservations, no one believes that these reservations are inimical to American interests. On the other hand, many—very many—believe them to be necessary for our protection. And still another element of our population by no means small in number—and it matters little whether governed by prejudice against any one of our would-be associates or misled by error—is bitterly opposed to any League of Nations.

So, Mr. President, if this were the only issue, the President would stand almost alone in his determination to subvert the will of the Nation to his individual conviction on this important national question, and his party support would be confined to those few States where reverence for Democratic doctrines declared by the head of that party becomes a religious tenet.

But, Mr. President, you can not make the League of Nations the real issue in this campaign.

If the real and only issue were a league or no league, I would be greatly concerned for the success of my own party. But you can not talk world politics to a man while his house is on fire; he will be concerned only with the fire department.

The thought of the people of this country is engrossed with the perplexities that surround us now. We are this moment threatened by a thousand imminent dangers demanding our immediate attention and solution. We know that another such World War can only come to a generation as yet unborn. We reason naturally that there is abundant time to prepare against this remote danger. But to-day we are in the midst of a situation that can not be described by the simple word "unrest." We stand almost helpless while debts, national, State, municipal, and industrial, are piling mountain high. We behold the hours of idleness of our people ever increasing, production dangerously decreasing, currency becoming more and more inflated, the yoke of taxation ever growing greater and more galling, the prices of all necessities of life ever advancing. We are living in the midst of strikes and threats of strikes. We are living in imminent danger of having our industries paralyzed and the distribution of commodities on which our very lives depend stopped at any moment by lawless hands.

The very atmosphere is poisoned with socialism's infectious breath, while anarchy, fevered by hate and envy, awaits only the opportunity to work a reign of hell such as to-day is consuming agonized Russia.

Study as you may, search as you will for excuses, the American people, the thinking people, know where to lay the blame for this dire condition. The war is not the cause of this threatening situation. The American people, like the people of the greater part of Europe, to-day are the victims of the new system of purchasing political support by enacting purely class legislation. The American people are the victims of a policy of surrendering the interests of the unorganized and ineffective many to subserve the demands of the organized and effective few. The American people are the victims of a policy of utilizing the Federal Treasury to meet the demands of organized classes, no matter how exorbitant or inequitable such demands.

The whole policy of the present administration has been one of surrender to these demands. That course has been followed from the day the Executive forced the Adamson bill down the throats of a reluctant Congress to the present time. That course, followed during the war, entailed upon us a cost at least five times what the war should have cost us. A few months of the application of that policy to the operation of railways under Government control bankrupted every railroad in the United States. That policy manifested itself in the vast number of socialists and theorists with whom nearly every official place has been filled during the past four unhappy years. That policy is manifest to-day in nearly every appointment that comes to the Senate for confirmation.

The American people, I repeat, are not blind as to the source of our troubles. They are looking forward for relief. They want to get back, as nearly as possible, to normal conditions, and their attempt will be evidenced by an overwhelming vote in the next election for a change of policies, and this will be the result, treaty or no treaty, peace resolution or no peace resolution, League of Nations or no League of Nations.

The regrettable thing is that a great measure designed for the good of the people of the whole world, and emanating, as I am sure it does, from the very best of impulses, must suffer a seeming rebuff because forced into association with most dangerous isms which must and will receive the condemnation of the American people in the coming campaign.

But it is further contended that our present status is, in fact, a peace status, and the enactment of this resolution will but confirm and make certain to the country and the world that our status is one of peace. I think the advocates of this resolution have grave doubt of their own position, because they fix the date of termination of the war in the original resolution itself. How can you terminate on a fixed date that which does not exist?

While it may be said that active war does not exist, which, of course, must be admitted, still I think that it must be admitted that a war status does still exist between this country and Germany. Let us not forget that the agreement entered into on the 11th day of November, 1918, was an armistice only; that it was limited in time in the first instance and has from time to time been extended.

Let us not forget also that the very terms of this armistice contemplated and provided for a settlement of all the war issues with each and every one of the allied powers before peaceful relations should be reestablished. That instrument speaks for itself. And while we all understood it to be the prelude to a coming peace, none of us understood it to be the actual end of the war status. Germany might breach the terms of the armistice agreement. She might refuse to accept the terms of peace which would be imposed by the Allies and thereby necessitate the immediate resumption of hostilities.

The first armistice agreement was to continue for 36 days, with option to extend. On December 13 this option was exercised and it was continued until January 17, 1919. On January 15, 1919, it was further extended until February 17, 1919. On February 16, 1919, it was further extended, but not definitely. This extension reads:

> This armistice is further prolonged for a short period, the date of expiration not being given, the allied powers and those associated with them reserving to themselves the right to terminate the period on three days' notice.

How can there be a continued armistice without a war status, and what would be the result of terminating an armistice if there was no war status? How can it be terminated on three days' notice if it has been merged into a peace status?

It is evident, then, that by the terms of the armistice agreement and the further agreements—and remember the United States was a party to these further agreements—the status of war was not discontinued on November 11, 1918. It has not been discontinued since, except by those powers which have entered into final treaties of peace with Germany, and the right reserved to declare the termination of the armistice has never been surrendered by any act of this country.

Whatever rights are now exercised by our associates in Germany are exercised by virtue of the treaty of peace stipulations and not by virtue of the armistice. Whatever authority we are exercising there must be by virtue of the armistice stipulations, which continue only by virtue of a war status.

Now, Mr. President, if the armistice agreement did not ipso facto conclude the war, then any expression made by the President in the exuberance of his joy that, through his influence and pressure, the German armies were saved from utter annihilation or unconditional surrender, and this country and its associates thereby deprived of the sacred right which by rivers of blood and oceans of treasure they had earned—the right to behold the abject and unconditional surrender of militarism—any expression made by him that the war was at an end could not and did not change a word or syllable of that armistice agreement or the war status expressly continued in existence by it.

And, Mr. President, I can hardly understand the position of those who agree with me that Congress alone can declare war and also declare peace and yet predicate their conclusion that we are at peace on the bald declaration of the President to Congress that war is at an end; that the purposes for which we battled have been accomplished. The two positions are at absolute variance and are irreconcilable.

Mr. President, no one of us, as we listened to this message, understood the President's declaration that the war had come to an end as in any sense a peace proclamation.

In the face of the armistice and its terms he could not have so intended, and we could not have so understood.

I have no doubt but that we could say to Germany to-day, "Keep your armies out of the Ruhr district and comply with all the terms of the armistice, and if you fail to do so forthwith, we will continue the advance of our armies, which we stayed only on your solemn promise to keep the terms of that armistice."

Do Senators claim that we could not do this without a new declaration of war? If we proceeded, would it be a second war with Germany, or would it be the same old war?

If the President, as Commander in Chief, should represent to Congress that the German Government had broken the terms of the armistice and refused to carry them out, and should ask Congress to vote the necessary sums to enable him to continue the advance and force the enemy to keep his word, would this be a new war, or would it be the continuation of the same old war?

The Senator from Pennsylvania in his speech declares over and over again that we are actually and constructively at peace with Germany. Using his own language, he says:

> First. The war is at an end by virtue of the armistice of November 11, 1918, and of the amendments and renewals thereof, such armistice being in fact a capitulation ending hostilities by the virtual surrender of the enemy.
>
> Second. The war is at an end by the silent ceasing of hostilities, which concluded the war, in fact.
> Third. The war is at an end because the Government against which we specifically declared war has ceased to exist, and the President avowed we had no quarrel with the people behind it. Since our declared enemy is nonexistent we have no one with whom to fight, hence no war.

Mr. President, if the Senator's conclusion as to the nonexistence of our enemy is correct, is he not somewhat reckless in seeking by his resolution to secure a new treaty, a new agreement with a nonexistent enemy? Again, he says:

> Fourth. The war is at an end, because we, together with our associates in the hostilities, negotiated with the people whom we had been fighting, now living under a new form of government, a treaty of peace which provided in terms that the war should terminate and diplomatic relations be resumed when the treaty came into force; and because the treaty, pursuant to its provisions, did come into force in January last when it was ratified by Germany on the one hand and three of the allied and associated powers on the other hand. By virtue of the treaty and these provisions of it the whole world, including the United States, is at peace in fact and in law.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. According to the same logic, if we are at peace because the treaty has been ratified by Germany and three other powers, then it has absolutely destroyed the power of the United States Senate to join in the ratification of the treaty of peace. In other words, they have destroyed the constitutional authority of the Senate in treaty making.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was about to proceed along that line of thought.

Mr. POMERENE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Without agreeing with any of these conclusions, and I am frank to say that I can not agree with them, I have a right to ask: If we are at peace with Germany, by reason both of the nonexistence of the enemy and by the solemn provisions of a treaty which ended the war, both as to the nations signing the treaty and as to the United States, then why on earth is this solemn farce being enacted in the Senate of the United States? And why is the Senator from Pennsylvania such an earnest advocate of such a useless resolution? If we are at peace both in fact and by legal contract, then why all the fear as expressed by the Senator when he declares:

> The safety and welfare of the Nation imperatively demand that we know we have peace. The whole world seethes with revolution. Our own Nation is in a ferment of turmoil. Force and strife are rampant and threaten the destruction not only of our property but of our free institutions and even of our lives.

We all admit the seriousness of the situation. But to me it is simply wonderful if all this can be cured by a simple resolution of Congress informing the people of a fact which has been in existence for 18 months, that we are not engaged in actual war. The theory of hypnotism, and even that of Christian Science itself, pales into insignificance compared with this alleged panacea for all the evils that threaten our civilization.

I think, Mr. President, I am justified in doubting both the accuracy of the diagnosis and the efficacy of this resolution as a cure for it. Our distemper is not due to a lack of knowledge as to whether or not we are in a state of war with Germany. And this resolution is not an antidote.

No one will question for a single moment that peace exists between Russia and Germany. Their peace treaty was signed in 1917. But as I gather the situation from horror-stricken Russia, in the throes of anarchy, crime, and bestiality, the mere knowledge of this peace has not in the slightest degree abated her malady. Great Britain, France, and Italy are in law, as well as in fact, at peace with Germany. Has the knowledge of this peace purged those countries of their seething unrest?

And, Mr. President, with all due respect, I do not believe that any uncertainty as to the exact status of our relation with Germany has the slightest effect on the unrest of the American people. The people of this country know that Germany can not resume hostilities. They know that there is nothing left to-day except to settle the war score with Germany diplomatically or through legislative enactment. And whatever we do, and whether we do anything or not, Germany can not continue actual war against the United States. I would think that I reflected upon the intelligence of the American people if I believed that their unrest had anything to do with a fear or anticipation of a possible resumption of hostilities. It is true that the lack of a negotiated peace or agreement with Germany necessarily must and does hamper our trade with that country. We are entitled to resume commercial relations at the earliest practicable moment. But that can be done by a simple joint resolution repealing the trading-with-the-enemy act and thereby reinstating our commercial relations. We do not need to wait until we secure a final treaty with Germany before resuming those relations. There must be other and ulterior motives and reasons for the enactment of this resolution at this time.

So far as the Senator from Pennsylvania is concerned, we recognize the fact that from the very beginning he has advocated the separation of the treaty of peace proper from the League of Nations provisions. This resolution if enacted into law would, of course, effectuate that purpose, and, from his viewpoint, is most appropriate. There are others who see a political advantage in passing a resolution which they all know will be vetoed by the President. They say it will put him in a hole. Without passing judgment on the propriety of using a great world cause for such a purpose, one may be justified in asking the question, from their standpoint, at least, Why waste all this time and energy in attempting to deepen an already bottomless hole?

If Germany is absolutely down and out, if she can not resume hostilities, then what is it that incites the fear of Senators and necessitates the immediate passage of this joint resolution? What is the danger that so darkens our skies? You say it is uncertainty; but uncertainty as to what? There can be no uncertainty as to the fact that Germany can not resume hostilities. There are no war storms brewing from the German way. I fail to see any necessity to declare a peace status until we have declared a war settlement.

The Senator says that the treaty when signed by the three associated powers and by Germany came into force as to all powers engaged in the war. To arrive at this meaning he separates one section entirely from another. Taking the last paragraph of the preamble, which reads:

> From the coming into force of the present treaty the state of war will terminate. From that moment, and subject to provisions of this treaty, official relations with Germany and any of the German States will be resumed by the allied and associated powers.

The Senator therefore assumes that if the treaty comes into force between any number of the belligerents and Germany it creates a peace status between Germany and those who may refuse to subscribe to the treaty. I can not give the treaty that construction. To so hold would be tantamount, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, to declaring that the United States, because she had associated herself with these other powers, had lost her sovereign power as a Nation and that these powers could declare a state of peace between Germany and the United States even though the United States should declare she would continue the war. But we must consider the whole treaty together, and we can not omit from it the provision—

> From the date of the first procès verbal the treaty will come into force between the high contracting parties who have ratified it. For the determination of all periods of time provided for in the present treaty this date will be the date of the coming into force of the treaty. In all other respects the treaty will enter into force for each power at the date of the deposit of its ratification.

I can not imagine anything more clear and definite, and I certainly fail to grasp the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The treaty can not come into force as between us and Germany until we declare ourselves that it shall come into force. We are not a party to the Versailles treaty. We are not bound by it in any respect whatever. And yet, according to the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and Germany, by agreeing upon the terms of the war settlement, created a status of peace for us without our consent and without our being made a party to the agreement.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Does it not occur to the Senator that the vote against ratification cast by the Senator from Pennsylvania is wholly inconsistent with that attitude?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is inconsistent with all of our attitudes. It is inconsistent with the theory of entering into any kind of an agreement with Germany or with our allies. If his statement is correct, if his conclusion is right, we are actually and unquestionably at peace with Germany; and all we can do is to settle our troubles upon a peace basis, without those rights which come from a war status.

I can not but conclude that the war status is still in existence, and that the laws which terminate only with the termination of the war are still effective, though most, if not all, wholly unnecessary.

That does not mean that the President may with impunity exercise every power granted by those laws, powers which by their very nature were intended to apply only in case of an actual state of hostilities. For illustration: The President, as commander in chief of the armies and navies of the United States is vested with the power to surrender such armies and navies. But does any one contend that he could not be impeached for abuse of his power in thus doing? Would he be less subject to impeachment for maladministration if he should proceed to-day to raise another 4,000,000 men? Why, the very attempt would demand either his impeachment or his incarceration in a madhouse.

Now, this becomes important only in one aspect of the case, namely, in its effect on the laws which we have passed and whose provisions limit their effect to the duration of the war. There are a great many of these laws whose force and effect terminate with the termination of the war. But there is nothing in the world to prevent our terminating them even though the mere status of war continues. On the other hand, there are serious reasons why the status of war should not at this time be discontinued; and that is the important part of the subject that I now appeal to Senators to consider.

While the state of war continues we may impose any conditions and any settlement the situation demands. The moment we concede that a state of war no longer exists, that moment we have irrevocably surrendered such right. As the world is now constituted there is but one external power that can govern or control the action of an independent nation, and its authority but temporary, and that power is the sword. And, Mr. President, that authority is abrogated the moment that sword is sheathed.

The questions growing out of this war are too numerous, too important, and too far-reaching, to be swept aside by a mere formal declaration of peace. We need but one illustration to demonstrate the vast field of complicated questions that will arise between this country and Germany the moment we declare that a state of peace exists between the two nations, and that our power, war coercion, has ended. We entered into a treaty with Prussia in 1785—and the German Empire is but Prussia enlarged by accretions—which provided:

> If war should arise between the two contracting parties (the United States and Prussia), the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs, and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance.

This same language was repeated in the treaty made between the United States and Prussia in 1799. Those treaties have never been revoked. It is no answer to say that these treaties were abrogated by war, because by their very terms they were to govern in the event of war. Nor is it any answer to say that through our violation of their terms they became abrogated. The violation of a contract by one of the parties thereto does not destroy its binding force. The party against whom it is violated may still elect to stand upon its provisions. Germany, throughout the war, has contended that they are still in effect and it seems to me that the contention of Germany is well founded. To be sure if Germany agrees to the demands set out in these resolutions she may waive her rights under these treaties, but her refusal to do so would not affect the first declaration of both these resolutions, that war does not exist between the countries.

Those two clauses stand absolutely independent of the other clauses and are not in any way modified by them. Germany may say it is more important to her people to decline to release us from those old treaty obligations. If she knows the American people, and knows the situation as well as we do here, I am inclined to think that she will not be very greatly coerced by the mere power granted to the President for the severance of commercial relations. The American people will never stand for the severance of commercial relations with Germany, while every other country is free to trade with her, and Germany understands that as well as we do.

We seized nearly a billion dollars' worth of alien enemy property in the United States during this war, belonging in most part to German nationals. These nationals claim that it is worth several billions of dollars. The moment a state of peace is declared to exist, these nationals will claim that the old treaties protect them in their rights of property, and they will demand the property or damages for its retention. What defense can we make to that demand? None that will not be stamped with national discredit, the breaching of our own treaty.

So, too, a question arises as to the title to the German ships which we siezed during the war. There has been no prize-court judgment whereby they have become confiscated.

Mr. President, the time to settle every one of these questions is before we declare that a status of peace exists between us and the German Empire. To-day we can say to Germany, "You can not have peace until you have released us from all claims under these treaties." With a war status extinguished that right is destroyed, and Germany can stand upon her contractual relations.

There is another reason, Mr. President, more weighty with me than these I have mentioned, why we should not adopt this singular method of effecting a peace treaty with Germany.

The question whether it is a fair and honorable method is one that addresses itself to the particular viewpoint of each individual Senator. From my view of the case it is neither honorable nor fair.

A number of Senators have taken the position throughout this discussion of the treaty that we entered this war for the accommodation of France, Great Britain, and Italy, and, having fulfilled this purpose, our duty is to at once withdraw and free ourselves from any and all responsibility in the settlement of the many complicated questions which a shattered and dismembered Europe has thrust upon the world.

If their premises are true, their conclusions are most proper. And, Mr. President, if their premises are true, then we never ought to have been in this war. But they are not true.

Dodge the question as much as you like, the highest ideals and the grandest achievements of civilization were at stake in this war. The issue was a military autocracy the world over with consequent enslavement of every weaker nation, or world democracy with human liberty.

Is there a Senator on this floor who will deny that this was the issue? Is there a Senator who will deny that a German victory would have meant European enslavement of the weaker nations? Is there a Senator who will deny that the menace of a victorious Germany would have forced every country to add enormously to its military and naval strength or be prepared to suffer the penalty of losing its independence and bearing the burden of exacting tribute?

If this be true, then this war was our war as well as the war of our allies. If this be true, then we did not enter this war for the accommodation of Great Britain, France, and Italy, and we have no more right than any of the others to shirk the responsibility for its final settlement. If this be true, then our allies fought our war just as much as we fought their war.

But, Mr. President, has the war been won? You say it has been won and we should now withdraw. I say it has not been won. If winning the war means the defeat of the things against which it was waged, then the war has not been won to-day. If it means the establishment of the thing for which it was waged, then the war has not yet been won. The German armies have been defeated on the field of battle, but German militarism has not been defeated. The spirit of militarism survives, awaiting only a stable body for its reincarnation. With an effrontery that no vanquished nation would dare venture, Germany has violated every important feature of the armistice agreement and of the Versailles treaty. Those allies upon whose shoulders we have allowed to fall the sole responsibility of enforcement of the treaty only a few days ago published to the world this declaration:

> Germany has not fulfilled its engagements, neither concerning the destruction of war material, nor the decrease of its effectives, nor for the supplying of coal, nor for reparations or the cost of the armies of occupation. It has given neither satisfaction nor made excuses for criminal attacks, which several times members of the allied missions in Germany have been made the victims of.

Under the terms of the treaty Germany agreed to a reduction of her army by March 1 to 100,000. On that date she had 450,000 soldiers under arms. She agreed to a destruction of war materials. She has not complied with that agreement in any material respect. We made the armistice agreement. We, the United States, were a party to it. Germany flouts it in our face and defies us. And what are we doing about it? We are saying to France and Great Britain and Italy, "You make her comply with our agreement." That we have deserted our allies is bad enough. That we have deserted our cause, and thereby condemned it, is a thousandfold worse. The position we are placing the country in is a shameful one, and I can never support it by my vote.

Mr. President, we entered the war as coequals, and we ought to conclude the war as coequals. It can not be denied that we have assumed an entirely different rôle. I have never liked, I am free to say, the attitude of superiority which we have assumed in our relations with our allies. I have never liked the attitude of the President in using the great position he held as President of the United States to force his personal convictions upon other countries as the price of American cooperation and support. Nor have I been in harmony with the majority of the Senate in treating our allies as though they alone had been the recipients of our generous, condescending favor. This war was our war or it was not. If it was not our war, then let us apologize to Germany and get out of it just as quickly and with as little added responsibility as possible. If it was our war then we ought to treat our allies, who fought most of our war before we got into it, with decent consideration. I know that, weakened far more than we were by war, weaker in man power, in wealth, and in resources, they are in no position to do other than to accept as complacently as possible whatever we may see fit to do in the premises. Their situation, in my opinion, should appeal to our naturally chivalrous courtesy rather than to a spirit of overbearing aloofness.

For nearly four years before we got into the war our allies suffered and bled for a cause which you all claim to-day was equally our cause. Their suffering was in many instances a hundredfold greater than ours. France and Belgium met alone the first onslaught of the mighty German armies. Unprepared, Britain sent all of her first contingent of about 130,000 down to death to stem the tide. Few indeed of this first little army ever recrossed the channel. Ten or twelve thousand of her sons strew the ocean bed all the way from New York to Liverpool—sent there while protecting our ships as well as her own, guarding our contingent of soldiers as well as her own, from the ruthless U-boat.

My position is that it is dishonorable on our part to desert these faithful allies and refuse to make a treaty in common with them. I recognize that the President of the United States is more responsible than any one man for the failure to enter into a common treaty. He knew, as everyone knew, that the Senate had a right to make reservations, and, whether those reservations accorded with his views or not, no treaty could be put through the Senate without them. He should have accepted them, submitted them to our allies, and in my opinion our allies would have adopted them. I admit that the reservations adopted by the majority of the Senate bear the stamp in some instances of national selfishness. But the other powers, our allies and associates, were willing to accord to us those special rights and exemptions, confident that this Government would act justly and honorably on every matter that should come before a League of Nations. The President should have recognized the constitutional right of the Senate to differ from him in respect to the terms of the treaty, ceased his efforts to defeat this right, and sent the treaty with the Senate reservations to the other powers. By his refusal to do this he defeated the very cause for which he had battled so valiantly during all this time, and has wronged a generous and expectant world.

Again, our allies in the treaty they made with Germany insisted that Germany should concede to the United States every right conceded to them. We refused to join with our allies in consummating this agreement. We now turn squarely around and by these resolutions say that we shall insist upon every right which we would have received had we been a party to the Versailles treaty. We ask for all the benefits of this treaty, but we will not join with our allies in the treaty. To my mind that is most discourteous treatment. Our attitude is like that of a pampered, spoiled child. Not only this, but while we seek to compel Germany, by these resolutions, to assure us all of the benefits and all of the rights which would accrue to us were we a party to the Versailles treaty, we decline to accept any of the responsibilities of that treaty. To my mind that is a piece of selfishness that does not accord with a high sense of international justice and fairness.

Again, our allies by the treaty which they consummated required Germany to comply with her obligations toward the United States. By this agreement we seek to compel Germany to perform the obligations of that treaty with Germany so far as they pertain to us, but relieve her, so far as we are concerned, from performing any of her obligations to our allies. No argument, Mr. President, no matter how cunningly devised or eloquently presented, can hide the deformity of national selfishness and discourtesy involved in this course. For this reason I shall be compelled to vote against both the House resolution and the Knox substitute.

During the delivery of Mr. McCUMBER's speech,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 8078) to regulate the importation of coal-tar products, to promote the establishment of the manufacture thereof in the United States, and, as incident thereto, to amend the act of September 8, 1916, entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes."

Mr. LODGE. I move to lay aside the unfinished business and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House joint resolution 327.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution 327.

The motion was agreed to.

After the conclusion of Mr. McCUMBER's speech,

Mr. CURTIS. I understand there are several Senators who intend to speak upon the joint resolution, but they are not ready to do so at this time. Several of them have asked that the joint resolution may go over until to-morrow. I have just sent for the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. As he is not here, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be temporarily laid aside, with the understanding that the shipping bill will be taken up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to see the pending joint resolution disposed of at as early a day as possible, but as it has just come up to-day and several Senators who desire to address the Senate on the subject will not be prepared to do so before to-morrow, I think it is entirely proper to lay it aside until to-morrow, with the understanding that this evening we shall take a recess, so that it may come up at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. CURTIS. It is the understanding that there shall be a recess taken this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is temporarily laid aside.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10378.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10378) to provide for the promotion and maintenance of the American merchant marine, to repeal certain emergency legislation, and provide for the disposition, regulation, and use of property acquired thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yesterday we had reached page 19, section 17. I think there are several Senators who would like to have that section passed over until to-morrow. So I will ask that it may be passed over until that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that section 17 shall be passed over until to-morrow. Without objection, it will be passed over until to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am compelled to attend a meeting of the Postal Commission and I ask unanimous consent to turn back to page 9, line 14, for the purpose of offering an amendment at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to recur to page 9, line 14, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. In section 6, page 9, line 14, after the word "do" insert:

and if the board, by an affirmative vote of not less than five of its members, spread upon the minutes of the board, so determines.

So as to read:

That the board is authorized and empowered, if unable to sell to American citizens after diligent effort so to do, and if the board, by an affirmative vote of not less than five of its members, spread upon the minutes of the board, so determines, to sell to aliens at such prices and on such terms and conditions as it may determine, except that payment therefor shall be completed within 10 years, such vessels having a dead-weight tonnage of not exceeding 6,000 tons, unless such vessels are over 10 years of age, as it shall, after careful investigation, deem unnecessary to the promotion and maintenance of an efficient American merchant marine, and it shall make as a part of its records a full statement of its reasons for making such sale.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 19, after line 18, to insert:

SEC. 18. That section 9 of the "shipping act, 1916," is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board, by persons who are citizens of the United States, may be registered or enrolled and licensed, or both registered and enrolled and licensed, as a vessel of the United States and entitled to the benefits and privileges appertaining thereto: Provided, That foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry or enrollment and license under this act, and vessels owned by any corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, and vessels sold, leased, or chartered to any person a citizen of the United States, as provided in this act, may engage in the coastwise trade of the United States while owned, leased, or chartered by such a person.

"Every vessel purchased, chartered, or leased from the board shall, unless otherwise authorized by the board, be operated only under such registry or enrollment and license. Such vessels while employed solely as merchant vessels shall be subject to all laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels, whether the United States be interested therein as owner, in whole or in part, or hold any mortgage, lien, or other interest therein.

"It shall be unlawful to charter, sell, transfer, or mortgage any vessel purchased from the board or documented under the laws of the United States to any person not a citizen of the United States, or to put the same under a foreign registry or flag, without first obtaining the board's approval, and in giving its consent to the sale of privately owned vessels documented under the laws of the United States to aliens, the board shall, so far as it deems wise, require the proceeds of such sales to be invested and used in the construction in shipyards in the United States of other vessels of a superior type to be operated under the flag of the United States: Provided, That the board may make provision for trip charters to aliens.

"Any vessel chartered, sold, transferred, or mortgaged to an alien or placed under a foreign registry or flag, or operated, in violation of any provision of this section shall be forfeited to the United States, and whoever violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of not more than $5,000, or to imprisonment for not more than five years, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 21, after line 11, to insert:

SEC. 19. That the board, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and from time to time thereafter, is authorized and directed to determine what apprentices should be carried upon vessels documented under the laws of the United States and to prescribe the duties, compensation, and conditions of employment of such apprentices and to make rules and regulations requiring such apprentices to be carried on the vessels of the board, on vessels sold by it, and on vessels having contracts for the carrying of the mails, and the board is directed to submit to Congress from time to time its recommendations for additional legislation to make available a sufficient number of officers and able seamen who are citizens of the United States to officer and man the merchant marine of the United States to such an extent as it may deem desirable: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair any existing power or authority of the board to organize or maintain its recruiting service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, directing attention to the section just read, I inquire for information of the Senator from Washington whether it is the purpose of this section to permit the Shipping Board to determine the number of apprentices that private owners of vessels may employ in and about their boats or whether it is only directed to those boats that are under the control of the board?

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will notice the language, he will see that the first provision is merely advisory as to what apprentices should be carried by ships which are owned by private parties; it is merely a recommendation. We hardly felt that we ought to go so far as to determine the matter as to private owners; but with reference to ships of the board or ships with which contracts are made for carrying the mails, they may require apprentices to be carried.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator whether or not the interpretation which he places upon the words which are found in lines 13 and 14 is quite accurate. The language is:

SEC. 19. That the board, as soon as practicable after the enactment of this act and from time to time thereafter, is authorized and directed to determine what apprentices should be carried upon vessels documented under the laws of the United States and to prescribe the duties, compensation, and conditions of employment of such apprentices and to make rules and regulations—

And so on.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is nothing, I think, that gives the board the power to require shipowners to carry apprentices, but the board may simply determine what apprentices, in their judgment, should be carried; and if they are carried the board may also prescribe the duties and compensation and conditions under which they shall be carried. The Senator will notice the following language:

And to make rules and regulations requiring such apprentices to be carried on the vessels of the board.

If the Senator has any doubt in reference to the matter, I will say to him that it was not the intention of the committee to give the Shipping Board the power to require private owners of ships to carry apprentices.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator whether or not he thinks it would be wise to authorize a Federal agency to go as far as the bill indicates with respect to private concerns? Might not Congress with as much propriety provide that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine the number of apprentices that shall actually be employed by the various workshops and engine shops and boiler shops of the various private corporations of the United States, particularly those engaged in transportation? It seems to me that if we authorize and direct the Shipping Board to make this investigation and this determination, we are projecting them into the private activities of individuals who are engaged in the operation of boats, and are laying the foundation for a demand, which I believe will persistently be made if we enact this legislation in this form, that some board of the Federal Government shall be authorized and directed to prescribe how many employees the farmers shall have, how many apprentices there shall be in the mills and in the factories, and how many employees shall be in the various private concerns of the people of the United States. I am not sure that this is legislation which the Senate or the committee desire.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah will probably find several provisions in the bill that look to going further than he would like to see us go, and we do go further in many matters in this bill than I should like to see us go and further than I would favor in general lines of industry; but we are confronted in connection with the merchant marine with a peculiar situation and a peculiar problem. It is different from any other problem that we have.

When the war broke out we did not have a merchant marine; apparently we were unable to develop one. We now have a great many ships, but we have not our merchant marine established on a proper basis; we have not the routes established and the business developed and the business facilities developed. We had during the war to develop the seamen and to develop the officers for the ships. We had to open training schools and to have intensive training along that line in order to secure the officers and seamen to man our ships. We are lamentably short of American material for this purpose now. Some time ago an order was issued suspending the law prohibiting the employment of foreign officers in connection with our ships. We had to do that in order to get officers to man the ships during the war. That order has now been rescinded, but with our large number of ships we are taxed very greatly to get proper American officers and American seamen for them. The purpose of this provision is to develop along that line. I believe it is necessary.

With reference to requiring present private owners of ships to have apprentices, who would begin at the bottom and grow up and develop a capacity for performing the duties of able seamen or the duties of officers on ships, we felt that we should not go so far as to give the power to the Shipping Board to require the present shipowners to take apprentices on board; but we did think it wise that the Shipping Board, which is invested with the peculiar responsibility of developing an American merchant marine in competition, not among ourselves but in competition with foreign owners and foreign shipping and foreign agencies and foreign countries, with all the aid that they give to their shipping, should be given the right to suggest at any rate and recommend to private owners the apprentices it was deemed wise they should carry in order to develop proper seamen and proper officers.

I want to say to the Senator that in the hearings many of the shipping operafors were heartily in favor of a policy of this kind. There has not come a single objection to the committee with reference to that provision, and I doubt if there would have been any objection on the part of our ship operators to positive authority being conferred on the Shipping Board to require them to carry a certain number of apprentices.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator from Washington discuss what he deems the basis of our authority for imposing any such requirement?

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have not imposed the requirement. We doubted whether we had the authority to impose such a limitation upon private operators now.

Mr. LENROOT. We can not delegate to a subordinate body the power to require unless we ourselves have the power to require.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. But this provision does delegate to a subordinate body the power to require.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does not delegate to the board the power to require except with reference to ships which are under the control of the Shipping Board.

Mr. LENROOT. The language reads:

To make rules and regulations requiring such apprentices to be carried on the vessels of the board, on vessels sold by it, and on vessels having contracts for the carrying of the mails.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; under this bill we provide that the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General shall agree as to the compensation for carrying the mails. As a part of such contract and as a part of the contract for the sale of ships the Shipping Board could impose such a requirement.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly; but that is not this language. If a ship were sold last month by the Shipping Board or one should be sold next month without any provision in the contract concerning apprentices, nevertheless, under this language, the board would have the power to require the owner of that ship to carry so many apprentices. I do not see on what basis such an authority can rest. It seems to me the only basis upon which it could rest would be a contractual relation in the case of ships other than those owned by the board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the power of Congress to make provision for the building up of a merchant marine, I believe, is very broad. In my opinion, we can take practically any step that we deem to be wise and necessary in connection with the building up of an American merchant marine, and in carrying out that policy I think we can delegate the necessary authority to an administrative agency, laying down the lines which we would like to have followed and the purpose we would like to have subserved. The purpose the committee had in recommending this section was to assist in the development, as I have said, of seamen and men competent to become officers on American ships. If we have not the authority to act along the line specified in this section, then we are greatly hampered in trying to build up an American merchant marine in competition with foreign countries.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. KING. Would the Senator have any objection to passing over this section until to-morrow? I shall offer an amendment to the section, and, indeed, may redraft the lines to which I have referred in conformity with the views which I have indirectly expressed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; if the Senator would like to have the section passed over, I will make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the pending amendment be passed over. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 22, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 20. That the board is authorized and directed in aid of the accomplishment of the purposes of this act to make rules and regulations to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and to make and to change at will such rules and regulations relating to vessels and foreign and coastwise shipping, not in conflict with existing law, as will adjust or meet general or special conditions unfavorable to such shipping, whether in any particular trade or upon any particular route or in commerce generally and arising out of or resulting from foreign laws, regulations, or rules or from competitive methods or practices employed by owners, operators, agents, or masters of vessels under a foreign flag, and existing rules or regulations affecting foreign or coastwise shipping or trade, other than those relating to the Public Health and the Steamboat-Inspection Service, heretofore issued by any Government department, bureau, or agency may be suspended, modified, or annulled upon request of the board; and no rule or regulation affecting foreign or coastwise shipping or trade, except those affecting the Public Health and the Steamboat-Inspection Service, shall hereafter be issued or promulgated by any department, bureau, or agency of the United States unless and until the same shall be approved by the board; and no rule or regulation shall be issued by the board favoring in any way vessels owned by the United States over vessels privately owned and documented under the laws of the United States: Provided, That in case of a disagreement between the board and the head of any department, bureau, or agency over the suspension, modification, or annulment of rules and regulations heretofore issued by such department, bureau, or agency, or over the issuance or promulgation of rules and regulations hereafter made, such disagreement shall be submitted to the President and action taken in accord with his decision thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 11, to insert:

SEC. 21. That whenever the board shall have satisfactory reason to believe that any person owning or operating a vessel under a foreign flag has violated any of the provisions of sections 14 or 16 of the "shipping act, 1916," it is hereby authorized to issue an order to that effect and notify the Secretary of Commerce thereof, and thereafter no vessel in which such person, or in case such person is a firm, association, or corporation, any member or director thereof, has any interest, and no vessel operated by or belonging to any affiliated person shall be permitted to enter any of the ports of the United States until the board is convinced that such practices have been abandoned and issues an order declaring such to be the case and notifies the Secretary of Commerce thereof.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I have had some objection raised to this section of the bill on the theory that it constitutes the board the judge and the jury, the complainant and everything else, and that under the language of the section the board might act in a way that would be injurious not only to the offending shipowner but to the merchants who carry freight on the particular line offending. What is the view of the chairman of the committee about that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not conceive that the Senator has had any complaints from Americans or American shippers. This is aimed solely at foreign shippers, and it is in line with the provision of the present shipping act. Section 36 of the present shipping act, which has been in force since 1916, reads as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to refuse a clearance to any vessel or other vehicle laden with merchandise destined for a foreign or domestic port whenever he shall have satisfactory reason to believe that the master, owner, or other officer of such vessel or other vehicle refuses or declines to accept or receive freight or cargo in good condition tendered for such port of destination or for some intermediate port of call, together with the proper freight or transportation charges therefor, by any citizen of the United States, unless the same is fully laden and has no space accommodations for the freight or cargo so tendered, due regard being had for the proper loading of such vessel or vehicle, or unless such freight or cargo consists of merchandise for which such vessel or vehicle is not adaptable.

In other words, it gives to the Secretary the power to judge as to whether or not the shipowner has complied with the law and is doing the fair thing.

Under the shipping act of 1916 we have certain provisions—section 15 and section 16—covering common carriers, and prohibiting them from giving rebates or preferences, or practicing unjust discriminations against shippers, and so forth. It punishes them for it, but we have no jurisdiction over them; we can not get at them except in this method. The Secretary of Commerce had a case like this just a short time ago. He found a case where, in one country, the foreign ship operators were threatening shippers that if they shipped their goods by American vessels they would refuse them accommodations. He was trying to find whether we had any way by which we could prevent anything of that sort, and, so far as I am advised, he has not been able to find it.

This is to meet situations like that. It is a drastic provision, but I think it is one of the most important provisions of this bill for the proper consideration to be given by foreign shipowners and ship operators who want to enter our ports in their dealings with our people and with those who want to trade with us.

I have been cited to several cases where, for instance, in South America, shippers wanted to send goods up to this country by American ships, and they were threatened by foreign operators who had been carrying products to them that if they did that they need expect no further consideration from them. We can afford to take rather drastic measures to meet a situation like that.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I was anxious to have the chairman's explanation appear in the RECORD. I have had several communications on this subject from people interested in shipping, and I venture the statement that in the main they are from those interested, perhaps, in foreign lines that go to and from our ports. They insist that in the past people have been entitled to a trial in a United States court when they were accused of violating regulations concerning our ocean traffic. Of course, this section is aimed at foreign shipping, but the only thing in the section that concerns me as far as our owners are concerned is whether or not other countries might retaliate against us for this. Does the chairman know whether there is anything of the same character in the English law, or in the French law, or in the Italian law, or in the laws of other great shipping powers?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether there is or not; but what ground would any foreign country have for retaliating against us for trying to prevent unfair practices against our people? They would confess by that very act that their people were guilty of these very practices; and I take it they would not put themselves in that position. All they have to do is to show that they have been acting fairly and not doing these things that our law prohibits for the protection of our people.

Mr. CALDER. The contention of those who complain is that under this section the board may be the complainant and the judge and the jury, and that they are put in an unfair position as against American shipping, and they think that is unjust.

I am not going to move to amend the section, because it is in the interest of American shipping, pure and simple; but I felt disposed to call the attention of the Senate to this section, so that Senators would understand how drastic it was, and how perhaps it might involve us in some difficulty with our British friends, or with some other country.

Mr. KING. I invite the attention of the Senator having this bill in charge to section 21, which reads:

That whenever the board shall have satisfactory reason to believe that any person owning or operating a vessel under a foreign flag has violated any of the provisions of sections 14 or 16 of the "shipping act, 1916," it is hereby authorized to issue an order to that effect and notify the Secretary of Commerce thereof, and thereafter no vessel in which such person, or in case such person is a firm, association, or corporation, any member or director thereof, has any interest, and no vessel operated by or belonging to any affiliated person shall be permitted to enter any of the ports of the United States until the board is convinced that such practices have been abandoned and issues an order declaring such to be the case and notifies the Secretary of Commerce thereof.

Does not the Senator think that perhaps an injustice may be done if the provision to which I have called attention is literally adhered to? It would seem to be purely ex parte. It would seem to deny to the person owning or operating a vessel under a foreign flag a chance to be heard, to have his day in court. It would occur to me that the policy is entirely proper providing the section is violated, but some reasonable opportunity to be heard ought to be given to the person so charged.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have not any doubt but that the Shipping Board will make rules and regulations under which they will prescribe their procedure in a case of this kind. I do not think we ought to assume that they are apt to act arbitrarily in these matters. We give them authority to make rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this act. I assume that they will do that, and that they will provide a way by which, upon a complaint being made, either on their own motion or otherwise, the party will have an opportunity to be heard.

I want to say, however, that I am assuming that our administrative agencies will act judiciously, fairly, and wisely. It may be a violent assumption, but we can not pass legislation upon any other assumption and expect good results. We can not pass legislation of this character, and to accomplish the purposes sought to be accomplished by this bill, if we are going to assume that our agents are not going to act properly; nor can we accomplish the purposes of this bill if we are very solicitous about our competitors.

I want to say that I am working for this bill, and have tried to get it framed in such a way that it will give us every possible advantage that we can get, without, of course, acting unjustly or unfairly. We will not have any consideration from our competitors. They are not going to be punctilious about treating our shippers and our ship operators fairly and justly, and giving them every possible chance to maintain themselves. On the contrary, they are going to do just what I stated a while ago: They are going to coerce people who want to trade with us to ship with them, and the purpose of this section is to prevent it.

As I said, I believe the Shipping Board will give these people an opportunity to be heard; but I followed the same principle in this matter that we followed in the act of 1916, where we gave the Secretary of the Treasury broad power, and we did not require him to give anybody hearings.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the fact that we have legislation now that denies a person the right to be heard would not influence me in supporting similar legislation in this or any other bill. A bad precedent ought never to be followed, and ought not to be cited as justification for further legislation.

I am in entire sympathy with the purposes of the Senator. It is important that we should have a broad and comprehensive act dealing with this very important subject, one so vital to American interests and to the commercial prosperity and development of our country; but no matter how important a measure may be, we can not afford to incorporate within it provisions that may do an injustice, even to aliens, or those who may be carrying commerce under an alien flag.

I think I would be as punctilious in preserving the rights of a foreigner where there are dealings between nations, as there must be, as I would be in preserving the rights of Americans. That is to say, I would afford a full and fair opportunity for a foreigner to have his rights determined, and I would not act in a summary way in dealing with foreigners any more than I would act in a summary way in dealing with the rights of American citizens.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator if it would meet his idea to insert, after the word "authorized," in line 16, the words "after due hearing"?

Mr. KING. Yes; that is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. That will be entirely satisfactory to me, and I offer that amendment, so that it will read "is hereby authorized, after due opportunity to be heard."

Mr. KING. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 23, line 16, after the word "authorized," insert the words "after due opportunity to be heard," so that the clause will read:

It is hereby authorized after due opportunity to be heard to issue an order to that effect and notify the Secretary of Commerce thereof, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendments were, beginning with line 1, on page 24, to insert the following as additional sections:

SEC. 22. That the board shall ascertain and determine the need for vessels between the ocean terminal of the Government railroad in Alaska and Pacific and other ports, and if suitable and satisfactory arrangements can not be perfected to meet such need through vessels privately owned and operated the board is directed to furnish suitable service until it can be taken over and supplied by private capital and enterprise;

SEC. 23. That from and after one year from the enactment of this act the coastwise laws of the United States shall extend to the island Territories and possessions of the United States not now covered thereby, and the board is directed prior to the expiration of such year to have established adequate steamship service at reasonable rates to accommodate the commerce and the passenger travel of said islands and to maintain and operate such service until it can be taken over and operated and maintained upon satisfactory terms by private capital and enterprise: Provided, That if adequate shipping service is not established within a year the President shall extend the period herein allowed for the establishment of such service in the case of any island Territory or possession for such time as may be necessary for the establishment of adequate shipping facilities therefor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is interested in section 22, and he has an amendment which he desires to offer to it. I think he is also interested in section 23. I ask that those two sections go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, sections 22 and 23 will be passed over for the present. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, section 23 was the subject of a most interesting discussion yesterday afternoon, participated in by the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and the Senator having charge of the bill. The proposition covered by that section is, in my opinion, one of the most important features of the bill, if not the most important. It provides:

That from and after one year from the enactment of this act the coastwise laws of the United States shall extend to the island Territories and possessions of the United States not now covered thereby, and the board is directed prior to the expiration of such year to have established adequate steamship service at reasonable rates to accommodate the commerce and the passenger travel of said islands and to maintain and operate such service until it can be taken over and operated and maintained upon satisfactory terms by private capital and enterprise—

And so forth.

By that section the coastwise laws will be extended so as to embrace the Philippines and such other outlying dependencies or possessions of the United States as may be hereafter included in the lines of sea traffic. It not only establishes a complete monopoly for American lines between the Philippines and other American dependencies and a continental United States but in its operation it will preclude the possibility of travel and freight transportation between those countries and the continental United States in other than American bottoms.

The argument offered by the Senator in charge of the bill in support of this measure was a most powerful one, and, in my opinion, exhausted everything to be said in favor of it. From his standpoint, assuming the correctness of his premises, it is unanswerable; but I am unable to accept the proposition that the extension of the coastwise laws of the United States to the seagoing traffic of the world, whether confined to points within the jurisdiction of the United States or otherwise, will lead to those things which are essential to the permanent reestablishment of the American flag upon the seagoing lanes of international commerce. I have never been satisfied with the arguments so many times presented to support the monopoly which our coastwise laws have constructed, which has delivered the coastwise seagoing traffic into the hands of a few great concerns.

I know the old argument—and it is almost as old as navigation—that unless the commerce of a country is confined to the bottoms sailing under the ensign of that country it can not hope to establish itself among the carrier nations of the world, and that in the enactment of our coastwise laws and in their present proposed extension we are merely availing ourselves of the experiences of other countries through centuries of time, and we are doing the only thing that is possible to retain the traffic and prevent its falling into foreign hands.

Even if that were so, Mr. President, I should doubt the wisdom of the policy. But it is not so, if I read the history of navigation aright. It is true, as the Senator said yesterday, that throughout the eighteenth century and later the British Government prohibited all carriage between its colonies and England except by English bottoms, and carried that restriction so far as to virtually exclude the marine of its dependencies.

Some say, as the Senator from Washington intimated yesterday, that it is due to such a policy that Great Britain obtained the carrying of the world. But England abandoned that policy years ago, because it discovered that the restrictions imposed upon other nations and upon the commerce of the other nations necessarily provoked retaliation and resentment and, in one instance, successful revolution; and, following the course of a wisdom ripened by experience, she not only abandoned that policy but threw her home ports wide open to the ships of the world, in consequence of which her coastwise traffic increased, the home vessels engaged in it prospered, and the general position of Great Britain among the carrying nations was greatly strengthened.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That was after she had established her trade.

Mr. THOMAS. No; it was done while her trade was being established.

Mr. KING. She had but little trade at that time measured by what she had later.

Mr. THOMAS. Her colonial policy, unless I am grossly misinformed, was changed because of the conviction of her statesmen that it was not only unwise and impolitic, but injurious as well. One of the grievances of the American colonies against Great Britain was based upon her exclusion of American bottoms from the West Indian trade, and from the carrying trade with Great Britain herself. One of the complaints outlined in the Declaration of Independence as a justification for the cause of which that immortal document is the exponent, was the destruction of our trade, and that destruction was due to the discriminations placed by acts of Parliament upon the carrying resources of the American colonies.

But independently of the question whether or not the policy was an unwise one—and I think if it ever was justified by any conditions those conditions have disappeared—and assuming that the coastwise laws of the United States will remain in force, as I have no doubt they will for many years, I am unable to perceive how the adoption of that policy even tends to promote the American carrying trade between the different countries of the world.

An illustration given by the Senator from Washington for the need of such legislation is the practice of a Canadian ship company, plying between Seattle and Vancouver, and between Vancouver and Alaskan ports. The complaint is that the coastwise laws are evaded by the practice of selling tickets by way of Vancouver between Seattle and Alaskan ports, the practice being to sell a ticket to Vancouver, followed by a transfer to another vessel, which carries the passenger to his ultimate destination. That is an evasion of the spirit of the coastwise law.

But, Mr. President, I do not see how evasions will be prevented by legislation of the most drastic character. If I want to go from Seattle to Alaska by way of Vancouver, I know of no power that can prevent me from doing so, and I know of no power that can prevent the operation of the economic laws governing business transactions which can prevent it. If it can be done more cheaply than to patronize an American vessel which will give a straight voyage between the two points, advantage will be taken of that fact, and all the legislation in Christendom can not prevent it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I recognize the truth of what the Senator says on that point. If I am going from Seattle to Skagway, and want to go to Vancouver and then take a British ship from there on, there is not a thing to prevent it. We recognize that in the bill. It is not this coastwise provision which covers that situation. We have another provision in the bill, aside from this coastwise proposition relating to the Philippines, which makes it an offense to sell a ticket for carriage in that way in this country. Of course, the Canadians can have their agencies at Vancouver. I can buy a ticket at Seattle to Vancouver, and then at Vancouver they can sell me a ticket on to Skagway; and we do not attempt to prevent that. By another provision in the bill I think we would prevent an evasion of the law. That is really the purpose. It is not with the hope that we may change that trade entirely, although I am inclined to think it will have considerable to do with that; but it will prevent a palpable evasion of our law.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be, Mr. President, and I have no doubt at all but it will increase the practice by methods which will evade the law, just as British restrictions in days past upon its carrying trade with its own colonies were the subject of constant and perpetual evasion, the governing motive always being one of gain.

Personally I would much prefer, if I had to make a trip to Skagway, to patronize a vessel of my own country, and that independent of my opinion of the tyranny and injustice of the coastwise laws. But in legislation of this kind, as the Senator from Washington very well said, we must always bear in mind the main object to be accomplished, and that is the reinstatement of lines of transportation sailing under the American flag and tending to revive our supremacy upon the sea.

If we are to include the Philippines in this system of laws, it must follow that the statutes providing penalties for palpable evasions of the law will necessarily apply to that branch of the so-called coastwise traffic covering a straight voyage of 10,000 miles in length, and subject, of course, to that element of competition to which I have already referred and which will be brought into activity if the dimensions of the Philippine carrying trade are sufficiently great to arouse it.

Under the provision of the bill to which the Senator refers I imagine that a Filipino desiring to come to the United States would be prevented from buying a ticket upon a line that would first touch at Shanghai or Nagasaki or at any other point between the point of embarkation and the point of destination.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; Mr. President, if I understand the Senator correctly, that would not be done. There is nothing in the bill which would prevent a person from buying a ticket from Manila to Yokohama or Hongkong or any of those places and then buying a ticket from there to any port in the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that, but one can not, under the operation of the law, buy a ticket from Manila to San Francisco by way of those places.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In a foreign ship?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; in a foreign ship.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. THOMAS. Exactly. Then I am right in my contention that the same restrictions will necessarily be placed upon oriental travel to the Philippines and from the Philippines which will be placed upon coastwise travel between Seattle and Skagway. I do not believe that such a provision, which, disguise it as we may, bears upon overseas traffic, will tend to inspire confidence in or give popularity to these newly established American lines.

Something was said about encouraging the relations between the Filipinos and this country, that it would serve to bind us more closely together; that it would be a recognition of the importance of their trade, and would go a great way toward continuing the present cordial relations which exist between the two peoples. But if I wanted to accomplish that my first step would be to abolish the tariff restrictions which we have imposed upon practically all the goods and articles of merchandise which the Filipinos are capable of sending to us.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] referred to the statement which he said he heard in committee that such a line would give us the benefit of the annual output of Philippine sugar; but in the act of 1913, and before that, in the Payne-Aldrich Act, that was precisely what we did not want, and, as a consequence, the amount of Philippine sugar permitted to come to this country was limited to a certain tonnage. If my memory does not betray me, that is the law at present. How, then, with the existence of such restrictive trade regulations, can the question of transportation in any manner serve to increase the cordial relations between the two countries?

It is true that in many instances ships now sailing under the American flag are unable to obtain return cargoes, but that situation will neither be helped nor hurt by establishing a coastwise American traffic between the Philippines and the United States. That indicates very clearly the basic difficulty which Americans must recognize and overcome before they can establish a new merchant marine. They must provide, as other nations have provided, for return cargoes, and they can be secured by offering the necessary inducements by working up foreign trade, by copying the example of Germany and having American agents in every port where business is to be obtained, by beating Great Britain, Japan, and Norway at their own game.

The superiority of our merchandise, advantages in manufacturing cheaper goods, excellence in packing and transportation, plus furnishing an American market for the goods to be imported into this country, will alone give us our share of ocean-bound traffic. All the legislation which the ingenuity of man can devise will, in the absence of arrangements to overcome these difficulties, prove utterly powerless in diverting ocean-bound traffic from the present established lines to American bottoms.

We can have the best and fastest ships in the world, we can have the most experienced crews that training and experience can give, we can surpass Great Britain and Japan in every particular, so far as our ships and facilities go, and our purpose will fail inevitably unless we pay attention to these homelier but all-essential requirements and overcome these existing obstructions by a campaign of business, intelligently constructed and ably conducted, in Australia, in South America, in Africa, in Asia—aye, and in Great Britain, France, and Germany.

When Germany entered the race for commercial supremacy she began a system of shipbuilding. Coincident with that plan she educated many of her merchants in the languages of various countries, trained them as business men and turned them loose in ports and amid populations theretofore paying almost exclusive tribute to Great Britain. At the end of 20 or 25 years she had not only made an impression upon that commerce, but she had received, relative to tonnage, more than her share of it.

We can do the same thing, and unless we do the same thing all our present rosy dreams of a merchant marine worthy of this great Nation and devoted to the transportation of all articles, or nearly all of them, entering into international traffic, will prove in the end nothing but dreams. Hence I question very seriously the wisdom, to say nothing of the justice, of throwing our coastwise laws at one stroke of the legislative pen 10,000 miles across the Pacific Ocean, and I am just as sure that it will provoke retaliation and disappoint the hopes of all its advocates in its practical operation if it is permitted to stay in the bill.

International trade consists of an exchange of goods, disguise it as we may. There is not gold enough in the world, and never will be, to satisfy trade balances between the nations, and if they could be so satisfied it would be unwise, since it would consist of a constant disturbance of the financial balance which gold, as the basis of all value, can alone sustain if its situs is to be shifted with the changing balance of trade between the great manufacturing nations of the world and their customers.

No; it is only that which remains after imports and exports shall have been determined and their relation to each other that any other than goods or merchandise are or should be called upon to meet the demands of nations against each other.

Unless we prosecute the establishment of these lines with the coestablishment of commercial agencies equipped with power and capacity to secure an exchange of commodities, many instances like that cited by the Senator from Washington as occurring in Australia a few days ago will not only appear but will be multiplied to such a degree as to discourage the investment of private American capital in these newly established lines.

I had occasion the other day to refer to the inability of two American ships at Marseille to secure return cargoes, for which my very genial friend, the Senator from Washington, is in some degree responsible, because the only cargoes that were available were French wines, and, of course, under the provisions of the Volstead law and the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States that sort of merchandise has become contraband.

I read also of an American vessel taking a cargo to one of the ports in Portuguese South Africa which could not obtain a return cargo, owing to the fact that the British line and those behind it had long before them secured a practical monopoly of the trade of that port. That is not surprising.

The Senator said yesterday, and it is eternally true, that Great Britain does not propose to surrender a jot or tittle of the hold which she has over the transportation affairs of the world; neither did she propose to surrender anything to Germany nor to Japan nor to Norway, those nations before the war being her great competitors for ocean-bound traffic; but she could not resist, with all her power and influence, the application of those commercial principles which lie behind business success, both private and national.

I do not mean to say, Mr. President, that the Shipping Board will not establish these agencies or take due note of these conditions; I do not mean for a moment to imply that they have not long ago occurred to the Senator from Washington, who, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, has attended to the discharge of his duties with an industry and ability that should commend him to the entire Nation; but I do object to magnifying a physical condition into the proportions which seem to be assumed as the basis for the existence of certain provisions in this bill.

As regards the Philippines, Mr. President, it is perhaps pertinent to question whether they should still be considered as an American possession. We are trying to give them self-government; they expect to enjoy complete independence of the United States in the course of a comparatively few years, and we are constantly justifying that anticipation. I should like to see them emancipated to-morrow, if it were possible; I hope their emancipation will not be delayed one instant beyond that period of time when it seems safe to make the experiment. No greater mistake in statesmanship was ever made in the United States than was made when, in a moment of misguided judgment, we acquired possession of the Philippine Islands, thereby changing our entire policy and dealing a blow to the operation of the Monroe doctrine, from which it has never recovered.

A great many Senators and quite a considerable proportion of the American people are apprehensive, and perhaps justly so, of the constantly increasing power and ambition of the Japanese Empire. I am not one of those, Mr. President, who for a moment entertain the possibility of conflict between that great people and our own, but we can not avoid the conviction that that general, indefinable feeling of apprehension which the nations of the world, including ourselves, entertained toward Germany prior to August, 1914, still exists with a shifting merely of the object which has aroused it and toward which it is directed. If, in the providence of God, there is stored away in the events of the future a collision between the United States and Japan, it is unfortunate to think that the outposts of this great Republic have been extended 10,000 miles across the sea and have planted themselves in the Philippine Islands, only about two days' sail from Japan, where, in the event of difficulty, they, our most defenseless and most exposed portion of territory, would lie at the mercy of that great Asiatic power. Hence my feeling of security without the Philippines, to say nothing of the justice of giving them their independence just as soon as their condition makes it feasible. So I shrink from the idea of including the Philippine Islands as an American possession in a great scheme of ocean transportation, which is the object of this bill, or of extending to them those restrictive laws which can only serve to irritate and discourage instead of producing that continued feeling of amity and satisfaction which the legislation of the Democratic Congress established in 1915. Therefore, I hope that the Senate, in its wisdom, will very carefully consider section 23 of this bill and very earnestly discuss its possibilities, to say nothing of what seems to me to be the injustice of extending a local monopoly across the sea so as to embrace a large and necessarily extensive line of ocean traffic before they vote to include this proposition in the bill now pending.

I have taken this occasion, Mr. President, to express my views upon the subject, although I understand that the section has gone over and will not be fully considered until the return of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Colorado, with his permission, before he resumes his seat, a question for information?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I did not have the opportunity of hearing the address of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and I ask the Senator from Colorado if he knows whether the evidence before the committee or the facts with which he is conversant establish that the carrying bottoms of our country now engaged in the coastwise trade have been charging extortionate or, at least, unfair rates—rates that were more than ample to compensate them for their work in carrying the commerce between the various ports of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Commerce; I have been too busy with other committees with which I am identified to read the evidence and statements which were made before it; and, of course, as a consequence, I am unable to answer any question which is based upon the details of the examination made by that committee. Neither am I prepared to make the statement unequivocally that the coastwise charges are extortionate; but the Senator from Utah knows that in the operation of every enterprise which is controlled by itself and which is protected by ironclad legislation it will not be particularly modest nor particularly conscientious in the fixing of its charges. I know that the coastwise trade of the United States is now and practically always has been extremely prosperous, and not only so but extremely alert to secure every possible advantage that congressional legislation can give it; and I am satisfied, in my own mind, that great reductions could be made to those who are compelled to patronize the coastwise lines without in the slightest degree imperiling their solvency or to a very great extent diminishing their profits.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to refer for just a moment to the question asked by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. Under the shipping act, as it now is, it is provided that:

> The term "common carrier by water in interstate commerce" means a common carrier engaged in the transportation by water of passengers or property on the high seas or the Great Lakes on regular routes from port to port between one State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States and any other State, Territory, district, or possession of the United States, or between places in the same Territory, district, or possession.

So that whatever coastwise trade we have on the high seas or on the Great Lakes is under the control of the Shipping Board to practically the same extent as the railroads are under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Referring especially to the Philippine Islands, if the coastwise laws were to be extended to the Philippines, the shipping lines and the ships engaging in that trade would be under the control of the Shipping Board with reference to rates, preferences, service, and all that sort of thing. There was, however, no complaint and no showing before the committee in any way of excessive charges or unfair practices or anything of that kind.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I will propound two questions, and then the Senator can answer them both.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. KING. Was there any evidence before the committee which indicated that there had been or was a monopoly in the coastwise trade; and that, in the past if not at present, the charges made by those engaged in coastwise carrying were extortionate or, at least, unfair?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There were no suggestions of that kind by anybody before the committee, and I am sure if there was anything of that kind complaint would have been made to the Shipping Board, because the Shipping Board is specifically authorized to look into matters of that sort with reference to this character of coastwise trade.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if there is not evidence before his committee or if there has not been evidence before the Commerce Committee that, in the past, at least, the coastwise traffic had drifted into the hands of a few large corporations and that they had crowded out or destroyed all competition and fixed rates such as their cupidity and their conscience allowed?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There has been no suggestion of that kind before the Committee on Commerce since I have been a member of it.

Mr. KING. One other question. In view of the privileges and advantages given to the coastwise carrying trade, amounting to a virtual monopoly, does this bill impose any obligation upon those engaged in the coastwise carrying trade to develop new ocean routes and to carry our flag to foreign ports? In other words, does this bill put into the hands of a few individuals a monopoly, give them the advantage of the coastwise trade, where the liabilities and dangers and hazards are not so great, and not require of them any activity or effort to engage in ocean traffic to foreign ports?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, there is nothing in this bill that deals with the coastwise laws or coastwise shipping except the provision extending the application of the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands, or to the island possessions of the United States, and the provision to prevent the evasion of the coastwise laws to which I referred yesterday, having in view especially the situation between Seattle and Skagway, Alaska. We do not deal in general in this bill with the coastwise laws. They are left just as they are; we have not attempted to interfere with them. One reason why we have placed a provision in this bill to prevent the evasion of the coastwise laws in Seattle is that we do not believe that we ought to favor or wink at or tolerate the evasion of our coastwise laws by foreign shipping. If our coastwise laws should be abolished, that subject should be taken up and should be taken up in a separate measure; but so long as the coastwise laws remain on the statute books as they are we ought to see that they are observed. That is what we do in connection with the coastwise laws in this bill. The bill deals primarily with our foreign ocean-going shipping in the foreign trade.

Now, Mr. President, just a word or two with reference to one of the suggestions of the Senator from Colorado, for whose opinion and judgment I have very high regard, knowing that he is actuated in whatever he does and whatever position he takes by the highest and most patriotic motives. I agree absolutely with him that one great necessity for the development and in the development of our foreign trade is the establishment of American agencies—American business facilities—in foreign countries, more care upon the part of our manufacturers in packing their products, more care in catering to the needs and wishes and demands of their customers in foreign countries. These are among some of the most important things that our people must learn and accomplish in order to develop our foreign trade; and, Mr. President, one of the greatest agencies—in fact, one of the essential agencies—in the development of foreign business facilities upon the part of our people, the establishment of banking facilities, the establishment of American agents and business representatives in foreign countries, is to have an assurance that they will have regular, certain, and definite transportation facilities. I may be wrong about it, but my belief is that if we will assure the business men of this country that they will have regular, definite, and certain water transportation for a certain period of time they will establish the business agents and banking houses and banking facilities.

We hear lots of complaint about our not having banking facilities in South America, or commercial agencies there. If we will say to our people that for a period of five years we will maintain regular and certain and definite sailings between certain ports in this country and certain ports in South America our business people and our banking people will establish their commercial agencies and their banking facilities in those localities. That is a sine qua non of doing that; and one of the great purposes of this bill is to establish these regular routes and furnish these regular services.

The Senator suggests that there will be retaliation. I can see no excuse for any country retaliating against us for establishing and insisting upon transportation facilities to do the business between the main country and its possessions. All countries have done that in the past until they saw fit to abandon it, and no other country could complain. I am not going to discuss whether the Philippines should have their independence or not. That is a question, I think, that is foreign to this bill. We have the Philippines. They are ours now. How long they will stay so, I am not prepared to say. Whether it was wise for us to take them over, I am not going to discuss. Whether we should give them their independence hereafter, I am not going to consider. I am facing the situation as it is now. They are ours. There is some trade that we can get, and if we do not get it there will be nobody to blame except ourselves. It furnishes an opportunity for the construction of the character of ships that we need, not only in our ocean commerce, but for national defense in time of stress. It will furnish the very kind of ships that we ought to have had when this war broke out, and if we had had them probably the war would have been shortened by some months.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The subject that the Senator from Colorado discussed is one to which I have not given very much attention, and I have not any settled views in regard to it; but I invite the Senator's attention to this fact:

Assume that we are anxious to obtain Pacific trade, and desire our boats to go to the Philippine Islands and to other oriental ports: Does the Senator think that this legislation would have a tendency to provoke upon the part of Australia and New Zealand, either directly or through the British authorities at London, retaliatory legislation, or retaliatory legislation upon the part of the Dutch with respect to Java, or similar legislation, retaliatory in kind, by the Chinese Republic, or by Japan, so that our vessels that might cross the wide Pacific could trade only with the Philippine Islands, that they could not carry a pound of freight from China or from Japan or from Java or from New Zealand or from any other of those countries in the Orient?

The Senator will see that if we enact legislation of this kind it may result in our vessels being denied the ports of other nations for the purpose of loading cargoes from those nations which might be carried to other nations or to our own land.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not think so. I really have not any fear of that; but if we are going to talk about retaliation, if there is any country that is in a position to carry on a war of retaliation, it seems to me that it is the United States.

Suppose Japan tried to retaliate against us. What is her best market? What is she paying hundreds of thousands of dollars a year subsidy to her shipping to do except to carry products to the United States? Does she want to be shut out of our ports? Will she invite a conflict of that sort? Not a bit of it.

Does Great Britain need us? Does Great Britain need our products? How long could she live without the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of products that she gets from the United States? I do not think she would contemplate for a moment entering into a contest of retaliation with us. I do not want to enter into a contest of retaliation with these other countries, but, Mr. President, I do not fear it; and if we are going to frame our legislation on the basis of our fears, we will never get anywhere, especially in the shipping world. If we are going to be deterred from doing what we think we ought to do for the building up of our shipping because of something we are afraid other countries may do to try to get even with us, we will get nowhere.

Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, there is not any country on the face of the earth that is as favorably situated as this country to enter into a war of retaliation, if there is any country on the face of the earth that wants to enter into it with us; but what excuse can any country have for retaliating against us because we deal as we see fit between ourselves and our own territory? Is there any country that thinks about retaliating against us because we confine the passenger and freight traffic between the city of New York and the city of New Orleans to our own ships? Not at all. They recognize our right to do it as a domestic problem; and so, while the Philippines are a good way off, they are a part of this country at this time, and the trade between us and them, so far as we see fit to treat it as such, is a domestic proposition; and no country would be justified in complaining of any attitude that we may take with reference to it.

There is not any question but that our friends in other countries will do everything in the world they can to prevent us from taking this transportation that we can take if we will. I note in the paper this morning that considerable interest is being manifested in the British Parliament over this shipping bill that is now pending.

What are they doing? Why, they are taking steps to look after their interests, and they have asked their ambassador to send them a copy of it. That is all right. That shows the right sort of spirit. That shows the right sort of way to deal with these matters. They are not going to leave anything undone to prevent us from getting on the sea and establishing ourselves upon the sea. They are going to do everything in the world they can to prevent it, and we have no ground for complaint. We have not any right to complain against it. The only basis of complaint that we can have is against ourselves for not taking advantage of the opportunities that present themselves to us to do what we would like to do.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, this cry of retaliation has no terrors for me. It is always raised, it always has been raised, when we have attempted to do anything with reference to our merchant marine. I do not want any trouble with Japan. We are not going to have any trouble with Japan over shipping, over transportation, or things like that. I trust we never will have any trouble with her over any matter, but we need not worry about that in connection with this legislation.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will give section 23 very careful consideration. I believe that when they do, and when they see the possibilities of it and see the opportunity that it presents to us, absolutely certain, with reference to our merchant marine, it will be adopted by a large vote.

Let me say here that there may be a great deal of doubt as to what the results of this legislation will be as a general proposition; there may be very much uncertainty as to whether or not our merchant marine will be built up under the policies laid down in this bill; but, Mr. President, there can be absolutely no doubt as to what will result with reference to our shipping from the adoption of section 23. It will mean more ships for our merchant marine. It will mean finer ships for our merchant marine. It will mean greater transportation facilities on the Pacific, and, in my judgment, it will mean making Manila the great distributing center for the Orient, controlled and dominated by us, for the distribution of the products of this country, both manufactured and otherwise, and it will insure cargoes home. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] yesterday said that one great thing was for us to get cargoes home. That is true. There is not any doubt about our getting cargoes for home if we embrace the Philippines within the coastwise laws. We will bring their products to this country.

As I said yesterday, so far as my opinion goes, I believe that we could not do better in bringing about friendly and close relations between that Territory and this than to do what we propose to do in this bill, because the fact must not be overlooked that under the provisions of this bill we pledge ourselves to furnish ample transportation facilities, at fair and reasonable rates, for passenger and freight traffic.

Mr. President, that is all I am going to say about this section at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sections 22 and 23 have already been passed over.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, as this section has been debated, I just wanted to add a word to what has been said.

Under the terms of section 23 it is proposed that the Shipping Board shall establish adequate steamship service, if necessary, to the several outlying possessions of the United States. Already Porto Rico, Alaska, and Hawaii are within the coastwise laws of the United States. This section extends these laws to the Philippines.

Mr. President, the people of the Philippines spring from a race different from most of us who live in continental United States. They were not accustomed to do business with this country and did not understand our methods until we took over the islands some 20 years ago. But since that date, despite the fact that they are a part of this Nation, except for the traffic in the United States Transport Service, practically all of their overseas trade to and from this country has been carried in foreign vessels.

From my observation of the shipping question, it has seemed to me that if we hope to establish and maintain definitely a trade with other parts of the world, and particularly with the Philippines, it must in the main be done in American bottoms. So, as a member of the Committee on Commerce, when this proposition was advanced in the committee I strongly urged its adoption.

I have been opposed, except where it could be clearly shown in the country's interest, to the Shipping Board establishing routes from American ports to other parts of the world; but I have insisted that we should give Government aid to those who are willing to establish such routes. But if there is one place, Mr. President, where the maintaining of an ocean going route is justified that place is to the Philippine Islands. I do not know how long these islands may be in our possession, but whether it be for 5 years or 50 years our commerce to them should be carried in American ships. There is nothing in this section to prevent vessels flying the Japanese flag from trading between Philippine ports and all the rest of the Orient, or to prevent English vessels, or vessels of any other nation, plying between the Philippine Islands and all the rest of the world, excepting direct trade with the United States.

The other day it was my privilege to attend a little gathering in New York City on the steamship Huron, a former German vessel taken over by our own Government during the war. This vessel has been reconditioned and with four other former German passenger steamers has been allocated to the Munson Steamship Co., who will operate a passenger service sailing weekly between New York and South American ports. I sat next to the ambassador from Uruguay, who told me that until the introduction of this service perhaps once or twice a year a tramp freighter flying the American flag would come into the port of Montevideo, the capital of Uruguay, loaded with some special cargo for Buenos Aires or Montevideo, but that no regular service had ever been maintained between the United States and South America by American merchant vessels, as against this condition regular routes were operated, with weekly sailings of modern passenger and freight liners, between ports in Italy, Spain, England, and Germany. This neglect on the part of the United States was responsible for the fact that practically all of South America's business had gone to Europe. It was not convenient for them to trade with us; we had no direct lines which could accommodate their business. The trade with Europe led to the establishment in South America—and this gentleman referred particularly to Uruguay and Argentina—of banking facilities, transportation agencies, and other handy and agreeable methods for doing business.

All of the gentlemen at this gathering on the Huron believed that the opening of this new line was the beginning of trade, both in passengers and freight, with the east coast of South America that would mean much to both countries. Speeches were made by ambassadors and ministers from South America. They welcomed this opportunity to trade with the United States. One could draw but a single conclusion from the statements made, and that was that we had neglected them and that naturally their trade had gone where their business was appreciated.

If all this is true, Mr. President, how much more important even than this South American trade is it that we should have a direct line of overseas traffic with the Philippine Islands, one of our dependencies.

So I am strongly for this provision in this section, and I am hopeful that when we come to the final consideration of it, it will meet with general approval. If it is a fact that we have not sufficient shipping facilities to carry our trade the proviso at the end of the section extending the time when our coastwise laws shall be effective in the Philippine trade will take care of the situation. Section 23 is a splendid thing for our merchant marine, and I am very strongly for it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has been called out of the Chamber, but I have a very significant statement here which I want to read into the RECORD, and I hope that he and the Senator from Colorado will notice it, if they fear retaliation. I have not heard any suggestion in this country about our retaliating against other countries for giving preferences to their colonies, and yet I have here a statement quoting from Capt. C. B. Foster, of the Melbourne. This is a quotation from a pamphlet gotten out by the Continental Insurance Co. I think they get out regular issues of it. This pamphlet discusses England's policy, and I find in it the following:

> All along the Gold Coast of Africa an American boat does not get a show at any desirable cargo, Capt. C. B. Foster, of the Melbourne, said.
> "This is not unexpected, because British shipping gets preference among British colonies, but I don't know a single place where the United States shipping has an edge. We consider ourselves lucky if we can get an even break."

That, Mr. President, is in line with what I read yesterday from an official document from Canada, wherein they direct that their shippers and their merchants shall be given a preference over all others. Yet we are not talking about retaliation on account of that. They are doing what they have a perfect right to do, and what I think we ought to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 23, to insert:

> SEC. 24. That the act entitled "An act giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska," approved October 6, 1917, is hereby repealed: Provided, That all foreign-built vessels admitted to the coastwise trade under such act for the full period covered by the act and which are wholly owned by persons who are citizens of the United States, and foreign-built vessels owned by the United States at the time of the enactment of this act, if sold to such persons, may operate in the coastwise trade so long as they are owned by such persons.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under that proviso it appears that only a few vessels would be, we might say, favored; and apparently those vessels are owned by a particular company. There is considerable complaint about it, and there is a feeling that it really results in unfair and unjust treatment. That was not intended by the committee, and I desire to offer an amendment to take the place of the proviso. In lieu of the proviso I move to insert what I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, after line 6, in lieu of the proviso insert:

> Provided, That all foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry, wholly owned on February 1, 1920, by persons citizens of the United States, and all foreign-built vessels owned by the United States at the time of the enactment of this act, when sold and wholly owned by persons citizens of the United States, may engage in the coastwise trade so long as they continue wholly in American ownership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand there are not a great many of those ships, and we believe that where the ships are wholly owned by American citizens, built by American capital, there can be no injury done to the coastwise trade by allowing them to be admitted to American registry, so long as they continue in that ownership. Then, the Navy Department owns several small ships, some of which it has owned since the Spanish War. They are foreign built. They are very small. If they are given the privileges of the coastwise trade of the United States, they will be able to sell them at very much greater advantage to the United States, and they will be covered by this proviso.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 13, to insert:

SEC. 25. That the owner of a vessel documented under the laws of the United States and operated in foreign trade shall, for each of the 10 taxable years beginning with the first taxable year ending after the enactment of this act, be allowed as a deduction for the purpose of ascertaining his net income subject to the war-profits and excess-profits taxes imposed by Title III of the revenue act of 1918 an amount equivalent to the net earnings of such vessel during such taxable year, determined in accordance with rules and regulations to be made by the board: Provided, That such owner shall not be entitled to such deduction unless during such taxable year he invested, or set aside under rules and regulations to be made by the board in a trust fund for investment, in the building in shipyards in the United States of new vessels of a type and kind approved by the board, an amount, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury and certified by him to the board, equivalent to the war-profits and excess-profits taxes that would have been payable by such owner on account of the net earnings of such vessels, but for the deduction allowed under the provisions of this section, or unless such owner, with the approval of the board (to be given only if because of the smallness of the amount involved the board deems it best for the interests of the United States), applies such amount on any mortgage indebtedness due to the United States for the purchase of ships.

That during the period of 10 years from the enactment of this act any person a citizen of the United States who may sell a vessel built prior to January 1, 1914, shall be exempt from all income taxes that would be payable upon any of the proceeds of such sale if the entire proceeds thereof shall be invested in the building of new ships in American shipyards, such ships to be documented under the laws of the United States and to be of a type approved by the board.

The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, and the chairman of the board are hereby authorized and directed to determine from time to time what shall be allowed for annual depreciation of vessels purchased from the United States, or vessels completed in the United States, since November 11, 1918, in order that the owners of such vessels shall, with respect to the capital cost thereof, be put as nearly as may be on a parity with the owners of ships under the flag of our foreign competitors in the world's carrying trade, and such allowances shall be embraced in the deductions allowed by law in determining the net income subject to income taxes and war-profits and excess-profits taxes; and if said Secretaries and the chairman of the board are unable to reach a unanimous decision in such matter, it shall be referred to the President and his decision shall govern therein.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Some Senators have asked that section 25 may be passed over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, on request of the Senator from Washington, section 25 will be passed over. The Chair hears no objection.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 26. That all mails of the United States shipped or carried on vessels shall, if practicable, be shipped or carried on American-built vessels documented under the laws of the United States. No contract with the Postmaster General for carrying mails on vessels so built and documented shall be assigned or sublet, and no mails covered by such contract shall be carried on any vessel not so built and documented. No money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States on or in relation to any contract for carrying mails on vessels so built and documented when such contract has been assigned or sublet or when mails covered by such contract are in violation of the terms thereof carried on any vessel not so built and documented. The board and the Postmaster General, in aid of the development of a merchant marine adequate to provide for the maintenance and expansion of the foreign or coastwise trade of the United States and of a satisfactory postal service in connection therewith, shall from time to time determine the proper rate of compensation to be paid for such service, and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts to pay for the carrying of such mails in such vessels at such rate.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee with relation to lines 21 and 22, on page 27. Does the present law prohibit the assigning of such contracts?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think so; I will state the reason for the provision: It was called to my attention that, for instance, a contract might be let to an American citizen for carrying the mails and then he might turn it over to a foreign ship line. He was the agent of the foreign ship line; he took a contract in his own name and then turned the business over to the foreign line.

Mr. LENROOT. I am fully in sympathy with the provision.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The object is to prevent that practice.

Mr. LENROOT. My query concerned the case where a contract heretofore made had been sublet, when it was lawful to do so. This provides that no money shall be paid out of the Treasury on such a contract.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The intention was to have it apply to contracts hereafter made. It is not intended to affect previously made contracts.

Mr. LENROOT. Would it not be better to put in a clause that it shall apply to no contracts heretofore made?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. In line 16, after the word "contract," I move to insert the words "hereafter made."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 27, line 16, after the word "contract," insert the words "hereafter made," so that it will read:

No contract hereafter made with the Postmaster General for carrying mails, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In line 21 I think we should put in the word "such" before the word "contract."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On line 21, before the word "contract," insert the word "such," so that it will read:

No money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States on or in relation to any such contract for carrying mails, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Washington to one fact. This section leaves it absolutely in the control of the Postmaster General to fix the compensation to be paid. There is no limitation. Beginning in line 4, on page 28, it reads that the board and the Postmaster General "shall from time to time determine the proper rate of compensation to be paid for such service, and the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts to pay for the carrying of such mails in such vessels at such rate." There is no limitation; they can fix any amount.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The language is "proper rate of compensation." I know there is no limit except the words "proper rate of compensation."

Mr. LENROOT. It clearly, it seems to me, authorizes the payment of a subsidy out of the Treasury for the building up of our merchant marine under the guise of a mail contract. That question has been fought out in Congress many, many times. I do not believe this door should be left wide open, as the Senator from Minnesota suggests, as it is in this provision. There certainly should be some limitation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does the Senator suggest a limitation? It is left to the board and the Postmaster General to fix a proper rate of compensation for carrying the mail, and they are permitted to take into consideration the development of a route.

Mr. LENROOT. It authorizes the board and the Postmaster General to give an outright subsidy, does it not?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; you may call it so.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that the section should be passed in this form?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; if no one is going to make any objection to it.

Mr. LENROOT. I am objecting right now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator suggest some limitation, then? The committee considered it pretty fully, and we thought it was a wise provision to aid in the accomplishment of the great purpose we want to accomplish. Will the Senator suggest a limitation that he thinks ought to be placed on it?

Mr. LENROOT. I will suggest one limitation, but I do not know that it will be effective. In line 7, after the word "contracts," insert the words "within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress." Then there would be some limitation at any rate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I accept that amendment to the amendment. I think that is a very good limitation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] proposes an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will report.

Mr. NELSON. I rose to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, or the Senator from Washington, if he can give us any information as to what rates are allowed by the United States postal authorities for carrying mail? Is there not a limitation, or is it left entirely optional with the Post Office Department?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think there is a regular pound rate or ounce rate.

Mr. LENROOT. There are specific limitations as to speed of ship, and so forth.

Mr. NELSON. Ought there not to be a similar limitation in this section?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think we are paying out very much, if any, money under the act of 1891. That is the act under which we used to pay money for speed of ships, and so forth. But we are paying out a little over $3,000,000 a year for the carrying of our foreign mails, and $2,500,000 of that sum is paid to foreign ships. It is at so much a pound, and there is a limitation in that.

The purpose of this provision is the carrying of our mails in our own ships. I do not assume that the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General will act recklessly in a matter of that kind, but I think the limitation proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is a very excellent one. I assume that under it they would have to make their recommendations to Congress as to what they think they ought to make contracts for for carrying certain mails. Then it would be for Congress to approve such contracts and make the appropriation. So I think they would have an absolute limitation.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to ask the Senator another question. I agree with him in the proposition that our mails ought to be carried by American ships. There is no dispute about that, but I would not want the American ships to mulct us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; neither would I.

Mr. NELSON. I would suggest that while you require the Government to ship its mail in American ships, you also require that it shall be done at the same rate that it can be carried for in other ships. Otherwise you will have no limitation. If you leave it as it is now, it will be a stark, open subsidy, absolutely under the control of the Postmaster General and the board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that if we would leave it that way the foreign ships would carry the mail; they would underbid our ships.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator misunderstood me. Let the mail be carried in American ships by all means, not in foreign ships, but give no larger rate of pay than we can get it done for in foreign service, unless you want to grant a subsidy.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not scared at a subsidy. I want to build up these routes, and I expect this to be used for largely in the building of regular steamship lines or routes where there are none now, and where there would be no bids. I think the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment covers the situation absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 28, line 7, after the word "contracts," insert the words "within the limits of appropriations made therefor by Congress."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I move to strike out all the section, after the word "documented," in line 25, page 27.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. On page 27, line 25, after the word "documented," strike out the remainder of the section, down to and including the word "rate," on line 8, page 28.

Mr. LENROOT. If this amendment to the amendment is adopted, it will still leave the direction to the Postmaster General, in so far as his discretion permits, but still within the limits of compensation now provided by law, to have all the mails of the United States carried upon American ships, but it will take away from the Postmaster General and the board the right to grant a subsidy. Of course the amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted does protect the situation to some extent but not fully, because if Congress makes an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the carrying of foreign mail, it would still be possible for the Postmaster General to enter into a contract with one steamship company for carrying one-half of the mail and paying them the entire $3,000,000 for it.

I do not believe that the matter of subsidy should be settled in this bill. Certainly there was no thought upon the part of anyone I know of in connection with the consideration of any of this legislation that we would go into the matter of ship subsidies.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I wanted to ask the Senator where his amendment is to be applied?

Mr. LENROOT. It strikes out all of the section after the word "documented," in line 25, page 27.

Mr. REED. The Senator proposes to strike out all the rest of the section, including the amendment which the Senator just offered?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. REED. So the bill in that case would not provide for carrying the mail at all?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; it would leave the direction to the Postmaster General, under the limits of compensation now fixed, to give preference to American ships for the carrying of the mail.

Mr. REED. What is the object of the Senator in offering an amendment and having it agreed to, and then moving to strike it all out?

Mr. LENROOT. It is a very ordinary way of perfecting an amendment, to relieve the objection to the amendment as proposed as much as possible, although one is not in favor of the proposition as amended. It is a very common practice.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have here a statement from the Postmaster General showing that the total amount paid for United States and foreign closed mail in steamships in 1919 was $3,195,770.40, and of this there was paid to foreign lines $2,350,609.25. That has no special bearing upon the proposition presented by the Senator from Wisconsin, but I wanted these facts to appear in the RECORD.

Now, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to. I am not going to take any special time in discussing it. I believe that we can leave the matter clearly to the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General as to what is necessary to be done in order to build up mail routes and transportation routes by sea, and especially with the limitation put in the section by the Senator from Wisconsin, which is in substance that no contract of that kind can be made until after they have submitted their estimates to Congress and Congress has made the appropriation for it. I know that both the subcommittee and the full committee, when this matter was under consideration, had in mind the necessity of doing something of this kind in aid of the American merchant marine. We did it purposely and with the intention of taking a step that in our judgment would encourage development along these lines. I shall not take the time of the Senate further.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I agree with the statements made by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. The subcommittee in considering the bill had in mind the fact that it might be necessary, in order to insure the operation of routes to certain parts of the world, to arrange for proper mail pay for carrying the mails—you may call it what you like, mail subvention or mail subsidy or mail assistance or anything else.

This Nation has invested over $2,000,000,000 in building up a merchant marine.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Three billion dollars.

Mr. CALDER. Yes; $3,000,000,000 in building up a great fleet of merchant vessels. We are going to have some difficulty in maintaining that fleet and operating it in competition with other nations. It is an old story, Senators may say, but now our money is in it. We must protect our investment even if it is necessary to put in a little more to keep it going. I am sure the people of this country will gladly give a little more to American ships to carry the American mail than we give to foreign ships for the same business. For one, I shall go that far.

I believe that with the first amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], to which I am not objecting, we are amply protected from excessive mail rates, but I hope the amendment which he now offers will not prevail. If it does, I believe it will seriously impair the value of this legislation, which after all is proposed for the purpose of maintaining the American merchant marine on the seas.

Senators know that previous to the European war we carried just a little over 8 per cent of our foreign trade in American bottoms. We were unable to secure an American fleet until the people were awakened by the Great War to the Nation's need of it. Now we have it. Let us not let the expenditure of a little money, such as the amount that will be required by this section, stop its continuance.

I have always believed that if in the 20 years preceding the war we had spent $25,000,000 a year, or a total of about $500,000,000, we would have had a merchant marine when the war came on.

We did not do it. Some Senators, particularly from the Middle West, did not realize the situation as those of us who represent the States bordering the Atlantic and Pacific did, so we missed the opportunity. When the war came on we had to spend these vast sums of money, which would have been unnecessary if we had previously appropriated a reasonable sum over a period of years.

This is one of the best sections of the bill, and it will be destroyed if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the bill, and especially in this section of the bill. The history of this Government from the beginning shows that it has been impossible for us to maintain a merchant marine on the seas without some help from the Government. If we could control the matter entirely ourselves we could avoid subventions, but when we go upon the open seas to compete with the world we have got to fight the world on the basis on which it fights.

The question is historic. After the Revolutionary War, when we had won our liberties and our freedom as a Government, we still were under the control of British commerce, because Great Britain controlled the ships on the seas. The first tariff act that was ever passed by the American Congress contained a clause, written by James Madison, providing for a discriminating duty of 5 per cent in favor of goods brought into this country in American bottoms, sailed by American seamen. That act was modified from time to time. It was renewed during the term of President Jefferson, and a bill was signed by Jefferson imposing discriminating duties in favor of goods imported in American bottoms. Such a policy was necessary in order that we might build up an American merchant marine, and the result proved the wisdom of the legislation, for at the time these discriminating duties were originally passed we, practically speaking, had no merchant marine; but by the time Jackson became President of the United States our merchant marine controlled the seas.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know whether or not the Senator thinks we have reached the section with reference to the abrogation of certain treaties.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I understand the motion is to strike out the provisions of the bill in regard to compensation for carrying American mails.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I merely desired to draw the illustration.

When the present tariff law was passed the House of Representatives placed in the bill a discriminating duty in favor of American ships. The Senate modified it so as to meet treaties in force at that time. I believe if that modification had not been made by the Senate there would have been inaugurated an upbuilding of the American merchant marine which would have saved us many hundreds of millions of dollars which we had to expend during the recent war. The provision did not become operative because of those treaties. That difficulty is sought to be remedied in the pending bill, and I am in entire agreement with the Senator from Washington in his efforts in that direction.

However, it is clear, Mr. President, that if we do not discriminate in favor of American shipping, although we have built the greatest fleet this country has ever known, the day is not far distant when that fleet must anchor in the harbors of the United States and remain there because of the competition of foreign shipping manned by seamen who sail the ships at very much less wages than those for which American seamen can be employed.

More than that, almost every great nation of the world with whom we must compete to-day is paying subsidies or granting subventions to its own merchant marine. To-day British ships that sail through the Suez Canal receive a subvention, by way of a mail contract, that equals the toll they pay in going through the canal, giving them a distinct advantage over our ships, because we have no such subvention.

I think that any effort to prevent this Government from giving a reasonable subvention, by way of a mail contract, to American ships, if it is carried out through the terms of this bill, will result in a few years in the American ship not being able to compete with its foreign competitor, and the passage of this bill will have been in vain. It is a condition that confronts us and not a theory. It is no new matter. We have tried it out for years and years, and the American ship has been driven off the seas because the conditions of competition have been such that we could not meet them. One of the reasons why I am so heartily in favor of this bill is that it seeks to give an opportunity for the American ships, which we have built at great cost, to live and to serve the commerce of this Republic. I therefore hope that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this section is another illustration of Congress absolutely yielding its functions and duties to a subordinate body. Congress seems to have gotten so much into the habit of doing so during the recent war that it proposes to continue along the same line during times of peace.

Prior to the war no Senator would ever have dreamed of delegating to any board or to any commission the powers that are proposed to be delegated by this section. We have had many subsidy bills before Congress; we have a mail subvention law upon the statute books now; but Congress has always undertaken to retain to itself the function of determining the details of such subvention and not delegate unlimited power to a subordinate body. If Congress now, in time of peace, is going to continue to delegate its powers without limitation or restriction, there is no Senator upon this floor who will have any right to criticize the executive department of the Government for taking to itself the administration not only of executive powers but of the legislative powers of the Government as well.

I have before me the present mail subvention act, in which Congress went into great detail in classifying the ships, in prescribing the speed of the different classes, and the compensation to be given to the different classes. There are several sections in which Congress legislates upon the subject. If we are going to provide mail subsidies, Congress ought to take up the subject, and if it is necessary to amend the present act Congress ought to amend it and not delegate to the Shipping Board or to the Postmaster General the unlimited power to do so. If ship subsidies are necessary, Mr. President—and we had much testimony before the committee that they were not; that under present conditions American ships could compete and would continue to be able to compete with foreign ships—they ought not to be provided in this way. If a ship subsidy is ever needed to maintain the American merchant marine, it should be provided upon the proper, practical, scientific basis, by ascertaining the difference between the cost of operation of American ships and like foreign ships, and apply the subsidy fairly to overcome the difference in cost of operation.

There is no Senator who need deceive himself as to what will be attempted under this provision. Shipping lines, through one means or another, will try to secure favors and privileges. We had such a situation during the war in connection with getting ship contracts, and the same condition will follow, if there be no restrictions imposed, with reference to securing mail subsidies. It ought not to be permitted; Congress ought not to delegate any such broad and unlimited power; it ought not to allow the people's money to be taken out of the Treasury without restriction, except as a subordinate body may deem proper, and used for the granting of subsidies. If subsidies are necessary, the subject should be taken up separately, and Congress should act upon the details of the legislation and the methods by which the subsidy shall be granted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, just a word. The act of 1891, to which the Senator from Wisconsin has referred, has been practically a dead letter. We secured, I think, four ships under that act soon after it was passed, and we never obtained any more.

Mr. LENROOT. Was that because the compensation was not large enough?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think so.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, the remedy is to amend that act and increase the compensation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But we do not know that we would provide the right amount then. The trouble in a matter of this kind of Congress going into details is that it can not work them out right; it can not work them out to meet the situation as it may develop. The Shipping Board and the Postmaster General will know all the details; they will know the needs of particular routes and particular lines, and they can determine far better than we can what amount is needed and what ships should be paid in order to accomplish the purpose that it is desired to accomplish. We would have to take their judgment very largely, it is true; but whenever we attempt to work out the details of legislation of this kind, to accomplish a purpose of this character, we defeat our own ends.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is mistaken in saying that the Shipping Board will submit their estimates to us as to what they propose to give to a certain line. Congress is to make an appropriation of a lump sum for the purpose of carrying our foreign mail, and, with the amendment which has been adopted, the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General together may take the entire sum and give it to one company, and then ask for more by way of a deficiency.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it that when they submit their estimates of appropriation they will submit a statement as to the purpose for which they desire to expend the appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I should like to make a suggestion by way of illustration that is familiar both to the Senator from Washington and to the Senator from Wisconsin, for we were serving together in the House of Representatives when the bill was passed to establish rural-mail delivery routes. When that service was in its experimental stage, as the shipping mail service is, we provided for a blanket appropriation, leaving it entirely to the discretion of the Postmaster General to be expended until the service should develop to a point where we had from actual experimentation acquired sufficient information to establish fixed routes. The same thing applies to the shipping service. It is now in an experimental state, and will be so for some time to come; but when it works out and we ascertain what can be done and what can not be done, we then can do what we did in reference to the rural-mail routes—establish a fixed compensation. We could not ever have established the rural routes in this country if Congress in the beginning had attempted to lay down hard and fast rules; and neither can we accomplish by such a procedure the object desired to be attained in this instance.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will yield, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator contend that there was any subsidy to anybody in connection with the establishment of the rural routes in this country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly there was no subsidy; and I do not claim that there is a subsidy under the provisions of the pending bill. We made the appropriations then to pay men to ride around in buggies and deliver the mail. We are proposing now that an appropriation in lump sum be made to allow the mail to be carried by men who sail on ships.

You may say that it is a subvention—it is certainly not a subsidy—but I am not captious about the word. I do not care what you call it. The word does not bother me. The cases are alike. When you established the great rural-route system of this country you knew that you could not lay down hard-and-fast rules. You gave an opportunity for experimentation, and you established a great system. The only way in which you can establish a great system in this case is to allow the opportunity for reasonable experimentation, and when that is accomplished the facts will probably be before Congress, a decade from now, to establish hard-and-fast rules.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator has covered just the ground that I expected to cover.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not he intends to bring it to a vote to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not expect to get the bill to a vote to-day. I should like to get as far along with it as possible; but several sections have gone over until to-morrow.

Mr. REED. So that there will be no vote to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Not on the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, while I am on my feet I simply want to say that if I have any conception of this bill at all, it is one of very great importance. It ought to be considered with deliberation and care.

I apprehend that the great majority of the Members of the Senate are situated with reference to this bill much as I have been. Their attention has been directed to many other important measures which have absorbed their time and their energy. For my part, I have had no opportunity to study the bill at all, although I have been working to the limit of my strength. Other Members are just as busy as I am. We are trying to get through with the business which must be transacted in order to reach a recess or an adjournment at an early date. Consequently we have crowding here the various appropriation bills, the great question of declaring peace, and other problems that ought to receive the most studious investigation and the fullest debate.

I hope that this bill will not be rushed through. For my part, I have not made up my mind about it, because I have not had the opportunity to study it. I have heard of one or two measures in it which, if they have been correctly stated to me, demand very careful thought. I think the question just now raised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is a very important one. It may be that we have arrived at a time when the Democratic Party must abandon its long-time policy of refusing to vote subventions or subsidies—like the Senator from Alabama, I do not care which term is used—for the purpose of promoting American shipping. I do not want to take that step without mature consideration.

The sale of these vessels is a very serious question, the price we are to receive, the control of the vessels after they have been sold. I very much question whether a plan has been devised that will keep these vessels within the control of the United States. The inclination of my mind has been never to sell any of them, if they were good and serviceable craft, but either to run them under a department of the Government, or to charter them under such terms and conditions that the Government of the United States can always be certain that the policy of the United States to maintain a merchant marine and trade routes can be indubitably effectuated.

After some experience in drafting contracts and undertaking to place restrictions upon sales, I have arrived at the general conclusion that you never can effectively control anything unless you hold title to the property in question. Title can be preserved if the vessels are only chartered or leased; but if they are sold—sold to American companies—who shall say where the control of those American companies will ultimately go?

We have expended this vast sum of money in building vessels. We ought to see to it, without any question, that as the result of it all the United States shall have one of the greatest, if not the greatest, merchant marine afloat.

I have heard of another proposition in this bill—that it is proposed to extend the coastwise laws so as to cover into the coastwise business the trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands. I have not read that section of the bill, but let me ask the chairman of the committee if I am correct in that?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. So that the trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands will be confined exclusively to vessels plying in the coastwise trade, and other vessels, commonly known as deep-sea vessels, will not be permitted to handle the business between the United States and the Philippines. Is that correct?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, the deep-sea vessels of the United States will be able to handle it, but not the deep-sea vessels of foreign countries. The deep-sea vessels of the United States will be able to handle it. Every ship under the American flag can handle the trade between the Philippines and the United States.

Mr. REED. Then the Senator was not correct in his first statement; that is, he did not understand me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I meant.

Mr. REED. Coastwise business is coastwise business. A vessel engaged in the coastwise trade does not do deep-sea business, and a vessel engaged in deep-sea business does not do coastwise business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator, I think, is mistaken in this, or, rather, I got the wrong impression from him. Ships in the coastwise trade of the United States can engage, if they desire to do so, in the ocean or foreign trade of the United States, and American-built ships in the foreign trade can also engage in the coastwise trade; but, of course, the needs of the ordinary coastwise business are such that they do not do so. The extension of the coastwise laws to the Philippine Islands, however, would permit every American-built ship to engage in that trade, both ocean-going and the ordinary coastwise ship.

Mr. REED. I remember the modification the Senator mentions, because it was brought about by an amendment to the coastwise shipping laws with which, I believe, I had something to do, but it had escaped my attention for the moment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that I have discussed this coastwise provision both yesterday and to-day. I will just state briefly that, to my mind, one of the great benefits that would come from putting the Philippines under the coastwise laws would be the development of fine ocean-going ships that would be necessary in that trade under the American flag.

Mr. REED. Yes; but it might have some other effects. It might have a very disastrous effect upon the business of the United States with the Philippine Islands; for if you establish a high rate between the Philippine Islands and the United States the trade of the Philippine Islands may go to other countries, and in our efforts to build up a ship line we may destroy a national commerce. So I think the question is one requiring a good deal of thought and care. I am not passing on it. I will not state my own conclusion for the moment, but I am stating that it is a serious question.

The question has been raised here in the debate in the last few minutes of turning the control of this entire business over to a shipping board and allowing the Shipping Board and the Postmaster General to fix rates for postage. The suggestion has been made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that that business ought to be done by the Congress.

The countersuggestion is that Congress can not do business of that kind, and the Shipping Board must be endowed with plenary power.

Mr. President, I have not seen anything about the Shipping Board's performances up to date to lead me to the conclusion that we ought to confer any more powers upon that board. The more I see of Government boards established in Washington the more I think of county boards of supervisors, as they exist in the various States.

We witnessed the spectacle of this Shipping Board proposing to sacrifice these vessels. They were arrested at the suit of a private citizen of the United States, Mr. Hearst, and if he had not intervened I suppose the entire American fleet would have been sold almost at junk prices by this time. I understand that the decree of the court sustaining the injunction has been made final. With that staring us in the face, it is proposed to confer additional powers upon that same board. The personnel is not identical, but the board is the successor and, in part, composed of the same personnel as the board which proposed to sacrifice these ships.

I am not in favor of giving that sort of an organization any more power. Some plan ought to be devised to keep these ships in the ownership of the United States. If, then, it is desired to charter them or, to use the more common expression, lease them, that can be done under such terms and conditions as that the United States can compel the public service to be accommodated and benefited; but I believe any other plan is likely to prove very abortive.

Mr. President, there is too much government by boards in this country. The attempt has been a failure in every instance, as far as I know. We governed the railroads and had the poorest service ever rendered in the history of the United States; we lost a billion and a half dollars in the transaction, and we are not through yet with the bills that are still coming forward, and many of which will ultimately have to be paid.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the position of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that Congress ought to keep the control, and that where Congress yields a control it should do it under fixed rules which command the agents of the Government to follow its policy and to keep within certain bounds and limits.

What is the character of the men we are getting on these boards? Who are they? They are absolutely unknown men, and in many instances they are put in positions where they control matters of almost vital importance to the Republic. The Interstate Commerce Commission is to be enriched with some new blood. The handling of the great problem of the transportation of the mightiest Nation on earth, a problem practical in every detail, is in part to be turned over to a gentleman who has distinguished himself in organized labor, and in part to another gentleman who has enjoyed the seclusion of a study in a college. That is not the way practical business men and practical men of affairs undertake to arrange for the general management of very great enterprises. It used to be the boast of railroad managements that in the majority of instances the man enjoying the powers of control over a great railway system had frequently begun in the humblest of capacities, as an employee, and had learned the business by hard labor and application, covering a long period of years, until familiar with every detail of the great work to be undertaken. Knowing every mile of the stretch of track, acquainted with the business to be transacted through carriage, and with the financial operations necessary to sustain the vast enterprise, this employee had at last reached the pinnacle of management.

Now, we propose to put in a position to control the destiny, not of one railroad but of all railroads, not of one line of transportation but of all lines of transportation, controlling in the aggregate the destiny of the Republic itself, so far as its commercial development is concerned, men utterly unacquainted with the business of railroading and at the same time unacquainted with the other duties falling upon them, to-wit, the semi-judicial duties of determining according to the rules of law and evidence great questions brought for decision and adjustment. What I have said now of the Interstate Commerce Commission applies with tenfold force to many of these other boards and tribunals.

So I hesitate to turn three thousand million dollars' worth of ships over to a board, and then turn the board loose to do as it pleases. I think this bill requires debate and study, and for my part I shall give it all the time I am able to give it. I hope the chairman of the committee, in charge of the bill, will be prepared to ask for a recess, and that we may have some days for the consideration of the measure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we will do the best we can. I know the Senator from Missouri has been engaged in other work, and I know that other Senators have been so engaged. I know that the Commerce Committee spent about three months or more on this measure. It spent two months in having hearings, and a month or two in considering the terms and details of the bill. Of course, we do not ask other Senators to take our judgment or our views with reference to it. We know how we have to take other problems very much as other committees have worked them out; but so far as I am concerned, I want every Senator to give all the time he can to the study of this measure. We want the help, aid, and counsel of all Senators who can give it attention. However, I hope that we shall be able to put the bill through as soon as we can, of course after proper consideration.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 12, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 11, 1920.

DIRECTOR OF THE BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Roy S. MacElwee, of New York, to be Director Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce, vice Philip B. Kennedy, resigned. (By promotion from (First) Assistant Director of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 11, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

"Know ye that the Lord He is God; it is He that hath made us, and not we ourselves; we are His people, and the sheep of His pasture."

Help us, our Father in heaven, we beseech Thee, to accept life as a precious boon and give us the courage to live day by day to the moral and spiritual code which Thou hast written indelibly on the tables of the heart—to be honest, sincere, pure, noble.

"To love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.

"This is the first and great commandment.

"And the second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," is pure and undefiled religion, all speculations of men to the contrary notwithstanding. Illustrated in the life, character, and precepts of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the subject the gentleman desires to extend his remarks on?

Mr. REED of West Virginia. I spoke briefly on the peace resolution, and on account of sickness I did not get it in within the five-day limit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, and I desire that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the bill S. 2448. The Clerk will read the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 10.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed by the House insert the following: "the sum of $10,000"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Col. William A. Simpson: That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, Col. William A. Simpson, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of brigadier general on the retired list.

"SEC. 2½. Col. Robert H. Peck: That Col. Robert H. Peck, Eleventh Infantry, Regular Army, who, under the authority of the act approved July 12, 1912, was, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed a captain of Infantry, United States Army, to take rank at the foot of the list of captains of Infantry, be, and he hereby is, restored to the position on the lineal list of majors of Infantry of the Regular Army which he would have held had he not been out of the service; that is to say, to a place on the lineal list of majors of Infantry just above that occupied by Maj. H. E. Yates. But nothing in this act contained shall entitle the said Robert H. Peck to back pay or allowances."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the House insert the following:

"Credit in the accounts of Col. Jesse McI. Carter: The accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Col. Jesse McI. Carter, Cavalry, United States Army, the sum of $352.23, disallowed against him on the books of the Treasury.

"SEC. 6½. Omer Germain Paquet: That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit the reenlistment in the United States Army, at the grade held by him at the time of his dishonorable discharge from the service, of Omer Germain Paquet, formerly a quartermaster sergeant; and the said Omer Germain Paquet shall, for the purposes of computing continuous service, for ascertaining the rate at which he shall be paid, and for retirement, be considered to have served continuously from the date of his last enlistment."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 8. William Shelby Barriger: That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, William Shelby Barriger, who enlisted in the Regular Army on September 15, 1900, and who rose to be a first lieutenant of Cavalry, at present temporary major of Quartermaster Department, a captain of Cavalry, to take rank at the foot of the regular list of captains of Cavalry: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act: Provided further, That the total number of captains of Cavalry is increased by one for the purpose of this act."

And the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 9. Capt. J. C. Garrett: That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, J. C. Garrett, formerly a captain of Cavalry, to take rank as if he had remained continuously in the service."

And the House agree to the same.

ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: The amendment by the House proposed to pay Frank Barber a sum of $5,000 in lieu of the proposal of the Senate to permit him to receive compensation from the War Risk Insurance Bureau. The conference committee, being unable to agree as to which provision was most desirable, finally compromised by raising the sum to be paid Barber to $10,000.

On No. 2: This amendment by the House would strike out the provision placing Col. William A. Simpson on the retired list and insert in lieu thereof a provision for the relief of Col. Robert H. Peck. The conference committee decided to restore the provision affecting Col. Simpson and to accept the House provision for Col. Peck.

On Nos. 3 and 4: These two amendments merely correct the spelling of Maj. Daly's name.

On No. 5: The Senate conferees accepted this amendment which proposes to place Maj. Daly on the retired list with the rank of first lieutenant instead of major as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 6: The amendment by the House struck out the provision for the relief of Col. Carter and inserted one to permit the reenlistment of Omer Germain Paquet. The conferees decided that the claim of Col. Carter was just and should be paid. The Senate conferees accepted the House amendment regarding the reenlistment of Paquet, the Senate already having passed a bill providing for the same purpose.

On No. 7: The Senate conferees accepted the House amendment, a provision authorizing the appointment of Capt. Garrett, the House having inserted an amendment accomplishing the same thing at the end of this bill.

On No. 8: The Senate conferees accepted the House amendment striking out this provision.

On No. 9: The conferees on the part of the Senate accepted this House amendment for the appointment of John Elmer Wright to the rank of first lieutenant and his retirement immediately thereafter in that grade.

On No. 10: The conferees on the part of the House receded from this amendment. The conferees concluded that in view of the fact that a former bill concerning Harry Graham, which would accomplish a purpose similar to the proposed measure, had been vetoed by the President, it would be unwise to include this provision in the bill and thus imperil its chance of passage.

On Nos. 11 and 12: The conferees on the part of the Senate accepted these two amendments, the Senate having already passed similar provisions.

THOMAS S. CRAGO,
ROLLIN B. SANFORD,
J. W. WISE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the conferees ought to state the real facts in their report. Have the conferees given their real reasons about Harry A. Graham? They would intimate to this House that they are passing this up because they believe that by such action they will expedite the passage of this legislation, whereas I have good reason to believe that the conferees did not want this legislation passed, and I agree with them in the conclusion that they have reached on a later investigation of that matter. Is not that the fact?

Mr. CRAGO. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that that is probably true as to the personal attitude of some of the conferees.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is the attitude of every conferee who has given this matter investigation, is it not?

Mr. CRAGO. That may be true, too.

Mr. BLANTON. But we are leading the House and the Senate to believe that the House wants this legislation passed by the report of the conferees.

Mr. CRAGO. Not necessarily. We struck it out of the bill because we believed it was not fair that, regardless of the merits of this individual case, these other officers should be penalized by having the matter held up by retaining the Graham case in the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. If I were a conferee and had come to the conclusion which I have come to, and the conclusion to which the conferees have come, that this legislation ought not to pass, I would come up and say so.

Mr. CRAGO. Members will have that opportunity when the individual bill comes up.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I want to take any further time in explanation of this bill. It has been thoroughly explained to the House several times, and if there are no further questions I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman explain just what the conference report does that he asks us to agree to? I did not hear it clearly.

Mr. CRAGO. Yes. The conference report, as shown by the statement, changes the amount that we are to pay to this English officer, who is totally blind.

Mr. GARD. Is that the officer who was injured by an explosion while instructing troops of the United States?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. GARD. How much is that increased?

Mr. CRAGO. That is increased to $10,000. The situation regarding that is briefly this: It was proposed to put him on the list of beneficiaries of the War Risk Insurance Bureau. That would have established a precedent that we did not want to establish at this time, and for that reason we gave him a lump-sum appropriation. The committee figured that eventually that would amount to about the same to him, so far as money is concerned, as would be allowed one of our own officers under similar conditions. An officer in our Army would get $100 a month and $20 for attendance, and on his death his widow would get $25 a month so long as she remained his widow, and so much for each child. Under this provision we settle with this officer in full, and we enable this officer, who has a wife and children, to provide himself with a little home, and we give him some recognition on the part of our Government for his great sacrifice.

Mr. GARD. And the House recedes, as I see from the statement, from the amendment which includes Capt. Graham?

Mr. CRAGO. We thought it best to do that; yes. That is what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was talking about. We did not want to endanger the bill under the circumstances.

Mr. GARD. The amendments that the House put in are agreed to by the Senate?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. GARD. So that the only one that the House recedes from is Capt. Graham's restoration to the list?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes; except as shown in the report or statement.

Mr. GARD. That is receded from by the conferees?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of cooperative live-stock shipping.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of cooperative live-stock shipping. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13870, the sundry civil appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13870) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDSPETH: On page 157, line 8, after the figures "$2,600,000," strike out the semicolon, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated for the Immigration Service shall be expended until the Secretary of Labor has allotted to the Director General of Immigration a sufficient sum to enable the Director General of Immigration to adequately equip the border patrol guard along the border of the United States and Mexico, so that said border patrol guard shall be in sufficient numbers to prevent the entry into the United States of undesirable aliens and undesirable persons prohibited from entering this country by law."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that this amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I should like to cite the Chair to a case directly in point, found in section 3997 of Volume IV of Hinds' Precedents, where a similar limitation was held to be in order by Chairman Dalzell, of Pennsylvania.

Also to section 3997 of volume 4, where Chairman Lawrence, of Massachusetts, ruled in order a limitation similar in all respects with this one on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Also to section 3999 of the same volume, where a point of order by Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, against precisely this kind of a limitation was overruled by Chairman Boutell, of Illinois.

Also to sections 4000, 4002, 3939, 3940, and 3941 of the same volume, where almost identical limitations on appropriation bills were admitted under the Holman rule.

Mr. GOOD. While this amendment starts out as a limitation, yet after we finish the first sentence it provides for an enlargement of the expenditure, requires the adoption of a plan that will mean that more money shall be expended, and that the Secretary of Labor shall not expend any money until he increases the service, and in the end that will require an additional appropriation. That is the substance of it. That can not be called a limitation. The gentleman is simply putting his amendment in a little different form than the amendment he offered last night, which the Chair held out of order. Simply to start out with a limitation does not cure the evil of the gentleman's amendment. The evil is found in the fact that this amendment still directs the Secretary of Labor to do just what the gentleman's former amendment directed him to do, and the words of limitation entirely disappear when we read the remainder of the amendment. It is not a limitation at all, but a direction, just as clear and plain and direct as his former amendment, which the Chair ruled was a change of existing law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The trouble is that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations seems to be out of line with the decisions of four chairmen who have passed on this question.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, not at all. Each limitation must stand upon its own bottom, and the trouble with the gentleman from Texas, I fear, is that when he sees the word "limitation" he jumps at the conclusion that it is really a limitation, whether the words that follow the words which are a limitation on the appropriation amount to an enlargement of the appropriation or of the force. This pretended limitation is a camouflage.

Mr. BLANTON. The trouble is that, unfortunately for the distinguished gentleman, this proposed amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. HUDSPETH] has been passed on by a very prominent parliamentarian, who sat at that desk for years and gave parliamentary advice to very distinguished speakers.

Mr. GOOD. That may be, but sometimes very distinguished parliamentarians make very grave mistakes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] is in the form of a limitation. While consideration must be given to the form of the amendment proposed as a limitation, for the purpose of determining whether it is in fact a limitation, still the question whether it is a limitation or not must in the last analysis be determined by whether it is a negative upon the appropriation or an affirmative direction addressed to the discretion of the officer for whose department the appropriations are made.

While the pending amendment is in the form of a limitation applying to the entire appropriation, it in fact undertakes to direct the discretion of the Secretary of Labor in a matter in which he now has full discretion.

The Chair thinks that the question involved in this limitation is similar to the question decided under paragraph 3957 of Hinds' Precedents, which is stated as follows:

The limitation must be upon the appropriation and not an affirmative limitation of official functions.

On April 24, 1900, the Post Office appropriation bill being under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. W. T. Crawford, of North Carolina, offered to the paragraph appropriating for inland transportation by star routes the following amendment:

Of which sum $50,000 shall be used, under the direction of the Postmaster General, in supplying temporary service to the newly established offices in cases where the establishment of star routes is contemplated.

Mr. Eugene F. Loud, of California, having raised a point of order, the chairman held:

It is not a limitation upon the appropriation; it is a limitation upon the functions of the Post Office Department. It takes away from the Postmaster General that discretion that he now has and is, therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, obnoxious to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The present occupant of the chair thinks that the precedent which he has just cited is applicable to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of laws against alien anarchists: For the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes," approved October 16, 1918, and acts amendatory thereof, including salaries and expenses of officers, clerks, and employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence, supplies, rentals, deportation expenses, and all other expenses incident to the enforcement of said laws, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $300,000; and the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose, contained in the "second deficiency appropriation act, fiscal year 1920," is continued and made available during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That these sums may be supplemented, if necessary, by specific allotment from the foregoing appropriation for "Expenses of regulating immigration" upon the written order of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 157, beginning on line 24, strike out the paragraph down to and including line 15 on page 158.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to save this $300,000. It is absolutely useless and a waste of time and money for us to appropriate $300,000 on this item, when all we have to do is to go to any Member of Congress who has investigated this department and learn that Louis F. Post, the Assistant Secretary of Labor, the very officer in this department into whose hands you place the expenditure of this $300,000, is in league with the anarchists themselves, and releases them faster than the Attorney General can apprehend them.

Mr. LAYTON. May I interrupt to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Is not that an indictment against the President of the United States?

Mr. BLANTON. Do you know that makes me tired when I hear that assertion, when we are convinced that an officer of this Government is an anarchist. It is simply "passing the buck." If you do not believe that fact exists, ask the chairman of the Republican Committee on Immigration, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Wait a minute, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman from Texas must not put words into my mouth.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman believe that he is an anarchist?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have to take his word for it, and he says that he is not.

Mr. BLANTON. Has not the gentleman from Washington been convinced that he has been shielding anarchists?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. When the gentleman gets through with the floor I will take the floor and make a statement.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I can cite the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH]; he is not weak-kneed. He will tell you that Louis F. Post is an anarchist and has been shielding anarchists, because he has a resolution in here to expel him, and it has been before the Rules Committee for days. And it would have been reported if the anarchists' lawyer, Ralston, had not been up before the committee to stop it.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I would like to get this matter straight. Why does not the President act?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, why does not Congress act, I will ask the gentleman. Why "pass the buck"?

Mr. LAYTON. You can not "pass the buck"; it is the President who should act if he has an official whom he believes to be an anarchist. Therefore the gentleman's statement is an indictment of the President as being in favor of anarchists.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell you, if I thought that Congress was sick in bed and had been for some time I would not appeal to you. I believe you fellows over there are sick; you have got some kind of a malady because you do not act. But you are not sick in bed and have not been confined in bed for months, and therefore I am not going to the President in this appeal, but I am going to you, because you have the right, you have the power, you have the authority, if your knees do not weaken. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAYTON. Then the gentleman's conclusion is that we have a Government that is acephalous?

Mr. BLANTON. No; the gentleman is a distinguished physician; he has attended other men in this Nation who have been sick. That is one incident of human life, to get sick; and the gentleman from Delaware ought to know that better than anyone else. Are you going to condemn a man because he is sick? Are you going to condemn a man because good health has left him by reason of strenuous service to his country? It possibly might overtake some of us some day.

Mr. LAYTON. Suppose the captain of a ship is taken sick; who takes his place?

Mr. BLANTON. The next one in power. If the captain of this ship is sick, you are the next in power; but you will not act. Why do you not act? Congress has the power. Why do you not act?

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman admit that the President is incompetent to act as President?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; I do not admit any such thing. Oh, take the whole bunch of your party and combine you all together, and, absolutely well, you have not got half the ability that that sick man in the White House possesses right now.

Mr. LAYTON. Then, why does he not act?

Mr. BLANTON. Because he is sick.

Mr. LAYTON. And he can not act?

Mr. BLANTON. He will act when he gets well, and he will act in such a way that he will make you all sick when he gets well. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can not agree on time for debate on this paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment which proposes to strike out the paragraph for the enforcement of the law against alien anarchists. You will not get anywhere by striking out the appropriation of what little money we have. I dislike to hear any Member stand here on the floor and actually charge an officer of the Government with being an anarchist. I dislike further to have any Member put such words in my mouth. We all know that a resolution is being considered in the Rules Committee which might lead to a resolution of impeachment. Every Member of this House knows that impeachment charges are not lightly made; that they are of the highest privilege, and must be handled with dignity and the greatest fairness. To bandy the word "anarchist" about and charge it against any officer of the Government is to do just what that officer charges that Congress has done in its immigration laws; he charges that the law makes the word "anarchist" a verbal brickbat. I do not think the law uses the word in any such way. I think Mr. Post has read into the law what he should not have done.

I do not want my valiant friend from Texas to charge me with being weak-kneed simply because I want any part that I may have in the inquiry to be a fair one. The work of the Immigration Committee will go on. There is much yet to do in that committee, regardless of what may be done by the Committee on Rules.

I do say that in my opinion the Assistant Secretary is too sympathetic with attorneys for revolutionary alien clients who strive day and night against this Government. The Assistant Secretary is reached by personal visit or by telephone or otherwise, and in such cases the deportation warrants of such aliens are held up and very often decisions reversed after the statement has been made that the alien should be deported. The decision of the Secretary of Labor is supposed to be final, but it is not, apparently. In some of these cases no new evidence is offered.

We may get a few deportations of aliens of the anarchistic classes some day. On the Buford last December went 241, all properly deported. About 20 more have been sent. A few more are ready to go. Some one will really represent the Government one of these days and more will go.

It was presumed that on next Saturday a party of Russians would pass out of New York on a vessel for Odessa. Lo and behold, however, the ship that sails that day is not a ship of the United States, but is a carrier which goes only to Constantinople, and there the authorities would have to transship these deportees to Russia. Strange as it may seem, whatever Government rules at Constantinople now declines to have these alien anarchists who have been picked up in the United States within the limits of Constantinople for a single day. We have had many difficulties through the hairsplitting of our laws in getting these anarchists up to the point of deportation, and now they are not to go. Perhaps they will be released on nominal bond, for that has been a custom.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have seen it stated in the public press, and I want to ask the gentleman as to the truth of it, that the Russian government has offered to pay the expenses of all of the ships necessary to take the undesirable Russians home.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not know what the gentleman means by the "Russian government."

Mr. KING. Any government that is in control there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. These anarchists themselves, these members of the Russian Workers, who start their platform by saying "We are anarchists; we are atheists; we are revolutionists," appeal to their representative to this Government, Ludwig Martens, who himself is being held on a deportation warrant, the final decision on which is not yet made, it having been postponed one or two times. They say he will take them free of charge. I hope our Government will be able to send Mr. Martens and all the rest of these Russian agitators, revolutionists, and communists, who have avowed themselves openly to be anarchists and against this Government, back to their own Russia.

Mr. KING. Has any government in Russia offered to pay the expenses of the deportation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, they say so; but I do not think so.

Mr. VAILE. If this appropriation for expenses of deportation be stricken out, could we give a better excuse, then, for complete failure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It would be complete failure.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Why is it necessary to deport these anarchists via Constantinople to Odessa? Why not send them by the northern route and deliver them into a port of Russia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think as a matter of economy they are trying to find some commercial vessel sailing to some port in Russia. What I want to say to this membership is this: In my opinion, the whole immigration system is in a wretched state. I am not sure but that we will have to ask authority for a select committee to be appointed by the Speaker to sit during any recess that we may have for the purpose of rewriting the entire immigration and naturalization laws. I believe that to be necessary. It would be quite a heavy task. It is charged that these immigration laws are a crazy quilt, patched up, and they are, and it is a fact that in all of the immigration laws we have written we have marched up the hill rather stiffly, and then put a little loophole in whatever we have done sufficient for some officer who is not in sympathy with the law to find a way to escape it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that so far as the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization have gone under the resolution giving them the power, we have found that the law is now sufficient and ample, but that the main thing is that there shall be more men to assist in its enforcement?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Very largely so. If the gentleman will excuse me, I want now to call attention to this fact: This whole thing is a lump-sum appropriation. You have heard the appeal that a certain sum should be set aside for the protection of the Mexican border. That sum is needed. A similar sum is needed for the protection of the Canadian border. Yet out of this total sum comes the payment of all of the immigrant inspectors we have. At the port of New York 85 per cent of all the immigrants come in, and, in my opinion, there is at that port an entirely insufficient and underpaid number of inspectors. When an inspector quits in any port of the country it is almost impossible to fill his place. Inspectors must be men of high character; they have to be men with some understanding of the immigration laws. Further, the public is misunderstanding the whole deportation procedure. You will find the cry put up that men are being railroaded out of the country, and that cry is based upon the belief by people that every man held for deportation is entitled to a trial by jury, a full court trial. That is not the law at all. He is entitled to a hearing before the inspector.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Did the gentleman hear the statement of the attorney representing Mr. Post before the Committee on Rules?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FESS. He makes the open charge that the Department of Justice is gathering up a lot of people on nothing more than mere suspicion, and that is a serious charge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I discussed that yesterday briefly, but I think in the bulk of those cases that the Department of Justice secured from the Department of Labor proper warrants on which to make arrests. They made arrests, however, in the form of raids, and where they gathered up many that they wanted with the Department of Labor warrants, they gathered also others with no warrant. The congestion was such that it took some time to sort them out and release them.

Mr. FESS. There is no necessity for more law, is there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Perhaps not, but I think that we would benefit by having as law the bill that this House passed by unanimous vote in the middle of last December, in which we made it a deportable offense for an alien to circulate revolutionary literature; that is, literature preaching the overthrow of this Government by force and violence. I can not see why an alien should be permitted to do that. I have a book here full of the stuff they actually distributed, and it is criminal. We hear this discussion of philosophical and other kinds of anarchists, and here they are. Here is some of their philosophical group, and then they are pictured here altogether, the good and the bad. There is Tolstoy, the fine one, from their standard, and here is Johann Most, the vicious one, all grouped together, all for revolution; and all of them in the United States who are aliens are deportable without any "ifs" or "ands" about it, Mr. Post to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. FESS. How do you know how to differentiate the good from the bad in literature?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. You can not. If the literature openly advocates the overthrow of this Government by force and violence and aliens belonging to the Communist Party, the Communist Labor Party, the Socialists, or any other party, distributes that literature, that can be made by this act of ours an overt act sufficient to warrant deportation, but until we do that we are not clearing up the situation in the United States in my opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope this amendment will be defeated.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, this is an important matter and I think some of the matters ought to be cleared up, and I ask that I may have five minutes on this particular subject.

Mr. GOOD. I think we have thrashed over this matter pretty thoroughly and——

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman this: I am painfully disappointed in the statements made this morning in regard to the Immigration Service.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be permitted to speak for five minutes in addition to the time already agreed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to speak for five minutes notwithstanding the unanimous consent already agreed to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Committee on Immigration have had this entire subject up for the last three months and more. We have held hearings here in Washington, New York, and elsewhere. We have had many men before the committee in regard to our immigration laws, and in regard to our naturalization laws. We have had inspectors from the Mexican border, from Tia Juana down to Brownsville; we have had inspectors from along the eastern coast and inspectors from the Canadian border that are in that part of the country as representatives of the United States Government; also from Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, and elsewhere. I want to say to the committee that there is no question that there has been no one able to point out before that committee an imperfection in the law whereby we can not deport and dispose of these anarchists if we want to do so. The question is that we have not sufficient men in the service. Their compensation has not been sufficient. Along the Canadian border from Maine clear out to the Pacific Ocean it is shown that they can come through by the trainload without apprehension, and along the Mexican border there is no doubt from the unquestioned testimony that men can come over now at all times, anarchists and otherwise, because we have not enough inspectors along the line to guard it. The same way with regard to those who land on the vessels, and by personal inspection of the committee it has been demonstrated to us, so that no one can say to the contrary, that what we want is more inspectors there to do that work.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I would rather not. I desire to state this, and if I have any time I will yield to the gentleman. So the question that comes up is the question of more men to do the work. The question is of more men to assist in gathering together these men who are violating the law who are in this country, and no man yet has been able to say before that committee, from the very best lawyer in New York down, who by cross-examination has had to admit before that committee there are upon the statute books laws whereby we can have public hearings and whereby an arrest is made under the law, whereby an opportunity is given the party for a full and complete open hearing with counsel to represent him in every proceeding from the start to the finish, from the arrest of the man to the final determination of the Secretary of Labor. We do not need to change the law; all we want is more men to enforce it. Now, as to the question of the deportation of the anarchists there can be no question but what many, many men have been arrested and have been turned loose who should not have been. The Secretary of Labor rendered a proper decision relative to the deportation of anarchists, and that should be determined under that decision.

Some 10 days ago our committee ceased functioning and if we had gone on and continued going on under the authority given by this House for the subpœnaing of witnesses and swearing them we would have been able to bring before the House and bring before this department a sufficient presentation that these men would be continued to be sent abroad, as they should be, and there would be no fault in the law. Secretary Wilson's decision upon the question is ample and sufficient. He says if these men have violated the law, he says if they belong to organizations which teach anarchy and the destruction of property, teach the assassination of public officials and the overthrow of this Government, why should not they be deported? There is no need of camouflaging; there is no need of making a political question out of this. It is simply a question of enforcing our laws; but we have not enough money and we ought to appropriate it instead of striking out that which is already in the bill, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of our present laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and I desire to insert in those remarks a statement made by Mr. Parker, under investigation before our Committee on Immigration, showing the cause and the charge against the 249 reds who were sent from this country last December. It has not been published, and I think the country ought to know the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including the material to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how long is that?

Mr. RAKER. It is, I think, about six pages. It shows——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of printed hearings?

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand the position of the gentleman from Texas who makes the motion. On yesterday a motion was made to increase the appropriation to the Attorney General to arrest the reds and the alien anarchists in the United States by $500,000, and the gentleman from Texas voted for the amendment.

Now, under the law, after there is once an arrest, the question of the trial and judgment is all turned over to the Department of Labor, and out of this appropriation the trial proceeds to judgment, and the Secretary of Labor renders the judgment. Now, the gentleman would have them arrested, thrown into jail without any appropriation for their trial or deportation when they are found guilty.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. That would be certainly a useless thing to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The reason I am willing to give money to the Department of Justice and not to the Department of Labor is that I have full confidence in the integrity of the Department of Justice and not in the other.

Mr. GOOD. But what the gentleman would do would be simply to waste $500,000 by giving it to the Department of Justice, because no beneficial result would flow from it, if we stopped with the arrest. Now, I think there is a very healthy sentiment on both sides of the House with regard to this whole question. If there is a man here, I do not care on which side of the House he sits, who is not in favor of a vigorous enforcement of this law, I do not know who he is. I think there is a feeling on both sides of the House, quite generally, that the Assistant Secretary of Labor is not performing his full duty in this regard. Now, we appropriated $750,000 for the trial and deportation of alien anarchists in a deficiency bill, and on April 22, when the department came before the Committee on Appropriations asking for this appropriation of $600,000 for deportation, they had expended only $45,000 of the $750,000 and incurred obligations, they estimated, of approximately $170,000. That was on April 22 of this year.

Now, certainly this department is not functioning very vigorously along this line, but the position of the committee was that this law should be enforced, these alien anarchists deported, and whether Mr. Post is to be entrusted with the enforcement of the law next year or not I do not know, Congress does not know, but the committee was positive of one thing—that every red-blooded American in favor of the enforcement of the law and the deportation of every alien anarchist in the United States should go forward with that work, and that ample funds should be provided for the purpose. That is the reason for the appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Instead of striking it out, would it not be better to give more to the department, and would not the striking of this out destroy the usefulness of that department?

Mr. GOOD. I think we have appropriated all that is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Would it not destroy the usefulness of this department at this time?

Mr. GOOD. It would have, of course, some money of the regular appropriation to carry on deportation work; but it would have no money to carry on the work at all on a plan commensurate with the undertaking of the Attorney General. And the two things go hand in hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAKER and Mr. MANN of Illinois demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 1, noes 93.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refund of immigration due erroneously assessed and collected from J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co. at San Francisco, Calif., $200.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I interrupt in order to ask the gentleman from Iowa with reference to this $200 item of refund to J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co. How does that get in the sundry civil bill, and why do not J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co. take the usual course if this has erroneously been paid?

Mr. GOOD. It is one of those cases, a rather unusual case, where the reimbursement could not be made without an appropriation. The case, as I recall, is of an illiterate alien. It was thought that this alien was of a class that should be excluded, and, proceeding upon that assumption, the steamship company was fined $200. It subsequently developed that the alien was not of that class and was entitled to enter the United States, and now it is necessary to reimburse the steamship company for the actual amount of the fine that was paid.

Mr. BEE. I am not questioning the justice of the claim; but I have in mind, as a member of the Committee on Claims, bills pending before the committee that have been there for years, on the question of refund of taxes, and the gentleman from Michigan has one for the refund of a fine. I just wondered why J. D. Spreckels & Bros. Co. did not take their course through the Committee on Claims and have a bill introduced for their relief instead of providing for it in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. GOOD. I am advised that in cases of this kind, where a collection had been made through mistake in judgment—an erroneous collection—reimbursements have always been carried on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATURALIZATION SERVICE.

For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization, provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (Stats. L., vol. 37, p. 736), and May 9, 1918 (Stats. L., vol. 40, pp. 542, 548, inclusive), including not to exceed $50,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street car fare on official business at official stations, together with per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for such per diem together with actual necessary traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; telegrams, verifications of legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; not to exceed $13,400 for rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia where suitable quarters can not be obtained in public buildings; carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 765), and in accordance with the provisions of the sundry civil act of June 12, 1917; and for mileage and fees to witnesses subpœnaed on behalf of the United States, the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $525,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the compensation of assistants to clerks of United States courts.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the following portion of the paragraph. On page 159, beginning with line 23:

And for such per diem together with actual traveling expenses of officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia.

For the reason that it is new legislation and unauthorized by law. I call the chairman's attention to the fact that the per diem traveling expenses are fixed by law. This is an attempt to enlarge it and leave it unlimited, without any amount fixed even, and to let them be confined to whatever may be termed actual traveling expenses, without any limitation on them whatever. There is no law for it, and it is unauthorized.

Mr. GOOD. This does not change the law. The general law provides that the limit shall be a per diem of $4, and not to exceed $5 actual expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that this amendment does not limit it to $5.

Mr. GOOD. That is existing law. There is nothing in this provision that gives them the right to exceed what is provided in the general statute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is clearly an appropriation. Money under the law could not be paid out of an appropriation. This is merely an appropriation, and the money that is expended must be expended under the law. This does not change the law.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is law for it, there is no need for this appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes. There is need for appropriation. This is merely descriptive of the purpose of the appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman is a good lawyer, and he knows that under the provisions of this clause, as written, it would not be limited necessarily to the $5 a day as a maximum.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, of course, this is merely descriptive of what the $525,000 at the end of the paragraph is for. It does not enlarge the law or change the law, and without the language the $525,000 could not be paid for per diem expenses as the law provides, because there must be an appropriation as well a law for the payment of the money. This does not change the law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the law provides as follows:

On and after July 1, 1914, unless otherwise expressly provided by law, no officer or employee of the United States shall be allowed or paid any sum in excess of expenses actually incurred for subsistence while traveling on duty outside of the District of Columbia and away from his designated post of duty, nor any sum for such expenses actually incurred in excess of $5 a day.

Now, we are not changing that law. This appropriation, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is just descriptive of the purpose for which the money can be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair was under the impression, when the point of order was first raised, that the purpose of this language was to repeal the law which limits the actual expenses which may be allowed to an officer of the Government while traveling on official business to $5. On careful examination of the provision the Chair is of the opinion that the provision to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order does not change the existing law, and would not authorize the allowance of traveling expenses in excess of the amount fixed by law, but is simply an appropriation of an amount for the purpose of payment of the expense which is authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, under the construction placed upon the law by the Chairman, the department would necessarily be guided by it, and therefore I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 160, line 14, after the word "prescribe," strike out the figures "$525,000" and insert "and the requirement in section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 596), that an alien shall file a certificate of arrival from the Department of Labor with the clerk of the court at the time of filing a petition for naturalization, is hereby repealed, $520,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. The point of order is that it is new legislation. The law now requires, under the fourth section of the act of June 29, 1906—Thirty-fourth Statutes at Large, part 1, page 596—that the party on application for naturalization shall present a certificate of his landing, and this would repeal that. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which came in here some time ago, carried an amendment of that kind, and the Chair held it out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do. By the adoption of this amendment we would save at least $5,000, reducing the amount from $525,000 to $520,000. It would do away with the proposition of requiring every applicant for citizenship to produce a certificate of arrival.

I hold a letter in my hand from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, dated April 30, 1920, showing conclusively that at the port of New York at the present time there are 10,000 such applications that can not be acted upon, and that they are behind at least five months in acting upon them. They are behind at Montreal several months, and at various other ports the same regrettable condition prevails. I may also add that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has reported a bill, H. R. 13646, which repeals the certificate-of-arrival provision; and by the adoption of this amendment we would relieve at least a dozen clerks from doing this useless work and at the same time save $5,000. The newspapers and others interested in having aliens become American citizens, including the Bureau of Naturalization, are all in favor of the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] inserts the following provision in the paragraph under consideration:

And the requirement in section 4 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. L., pt. 1, p. 596), that an alien shall file a certificate on arrival, from the Department of Labor, with the clerk of the court at the time of filing a petition for naturalization is hereby repealed, $520,000.

To this proposed amendment the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] makes the point of order that it is new legislation and therefore not in order on an appropriation bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] contends that the amendment is in order under the Holman rule, because it reduces expenditures. The Chair thinks that the Holman rule, properly construed, so far as it relates to amendments offered by a Member on the floor, only permits legislation in the sense of legislation reducing the number or salary of officers of the United States or the compensation fixed by law to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States to such officer, or by reduction of the amounts of money carried by the bill; that the Holman rule does not contemplate the repeal, or make in order amendments which in effect repeal, the substantive provisions of law.

The Chair is aware of the fact that the opinion he is now rendering is in some respects not in line with the decisions which have recently been rendered by chairmen of the Committee of the Whole. The Chair will not at this time undertake to go into those precedents. The Chair is of the opinion that an amendment repealing substantive provisions of law is not in order under the Holman rule. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Department of Labor on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a letter from the Secretary of Labor. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, April 30, 1920.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: In response to your letter of the 27th instant to the Commissioner of Naturalization, I beg to say that the delay in furnishing certificates of arrival for naturalization purposes is not due to any congestion in this work prevailing in the Bureau of Naturalization. For some time past that bureau has kept this line of work in such a state of currency that applications for certificates of arrival are handled by it on the date of receipt, or at most one or two days following. The delays are at ports of entry, where they are caused by apparently unavoidable congestion of other work.

To illustrate the state of arrearage in certificate of arrival work at Ellis Island, I may say that applications for such papers which the Bureau of Naturalization referred to Ellis Island in December, 1919, are now being received back with the required arrival certificates. This degree of arrearage has existed for many months past. I have at present no way of accurately stating just what congestion in this work exists at Ellis Island, but I would estimate that the Ellis Island immigration authorities now have on hand about 10,000 applications for certificates of arrival. These consist of applications received at that port from the Bureau of Naturalization, commencing from the early part of December, 1919.

Another port where a similar degree of arrearage exists, although not in the same proportion as regards numbers, is Montreal. At the other large immigration ports, such as Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, the delay in furnishing certificates of arrival is comparatively slight and not sufficient to suggest ground for complaint.

Very sincerely, yours,

LOUIS F. POST,
Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the offices at Washington, D. C., including purchase of blank books, maps, stationery, file cases, towels, ice, brooms, soap, freight and express charges; telegraph and telephone service; printing and binding; and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the foregoing, and necessary to collect loans made to corporations and associations, $20,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out the last word. I notice under this heading which carries this $20,000 appropriation there is an item for printing and binding. The gentleman will remember the very large book which this Housing Corporation got out—an illustrated book with fine steel engravings in it, and so forth. It must have cost a great deal of money. Is the chairman going to permit that to be done over again?

Mr. GOOD. If the chairman of the Committee on Apropriations could stop some of this useless printing and binding he would certainly do it. That is not the only department of the Government that has engaged in this practice. One newspaper has sent me the dope that it received in one week from all the departments of the Government. Here it is. Most of the letters unopened. They say they do not open them.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman is going far afield from the subject. I am confining it to this Housing Corporation, which got out this very large illustrated book with steel engravings in it. Is that going to be done over again this year out of this $20,000?

Mr. GOOD. At the time they got out that book they had unlimited funds. I do not think they propose to engage in any printing of that kind. It was the intention of the committee that the printing and binding and other expenses should necessarily be very limited. The Housing Corporation is a liquidating proposition. There is a bill now in conference——

Mr. BLANTON. Then if they go beyond the liquidating proposition in this printing and binding, they will go beyond the express will of this Congress?

Mr. GOOD. They certainly will. They certainly would not be warranted in going to any expense in republishing the book to which the gentleman refers, or anything like it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is there no way in the world to stop the departments from running their printing presses?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know. There ought to be. Here is one publication entitled, "Preface to a Report of the United States Food Administration, by Herbert Hoover, April, 1920." Here are three copies of it received by one newspaper on one day, all printed on a very expensive calendared paper. Here are other reports, from all the departments, coming to this one newspaper every week. They say they do not read them, do not open them; that they throw them in the wastebasket; yet these Government clerks, 100,000 of them, are here in Washington, and it must be necessary to keep a great many of them just sending out this useless stuff.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know that half the country newspapers protest against receiving these things at all.

Mr. GOOD. Certainly, and they are objecting to the useless waste of paper in this way, which deprives them of the paper they would like to have to publish their little papers.

Mr. BLANTON. Can we not stop it?

Mr. GOOD. It is an administrative proposition. The Congress can not run the legislative branch and the administrative branch too.

Mr. BLANTON. If we cut off this $20,000, they would not have the $20,000 to spend.

Mr. GOOD. The United States Housing Corporation have about $60,000,000 worth of property. They are selling that property, and selling it on payments. There is a good deal in the way of notices and things of that kind that must be sent to buyers, and for that purpose they must have a fund.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is not always so easy to control these printing expenses. We may cut down the appropriation. Very recently some of the departments sent in deficiency estimates for appropriations and said that they were absolutely essential, that they must have additional money in order to be able to print the necessary data from day to day; things that ought to be printed, things that everybody believes ought to be printed. We can not specify in an appropriation bill in every case just what documents shall be printed with the money appropriated. This sort of extravagance in printing is not chargeable to any political administration. It is just the natural tendency and desire of men who wish to put into print something that has emanated from their brains—or lack of brains—and it is not entirely confined to administrative officers; because the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that that feeling pervades even the sanctity of this Chamber, and sometimes I have suspected that it has even reached the person of my beloved friend from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I admit it. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the best medium on God's green earth with which to reach the people of the United States, because it is absolutely uncensored, and the newspapers are not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. People do not read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The newspapers which receive the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a rule, throw it in the wastebasket without taking off the cover, and nearly everybody else does.

Mr. BLANTON. The people are beginning to read it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD because he has so much in it.

Mr. BLANTON. And the best things I ever read in it are speeches made in fights conducted on the floor by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, they were good; but I did not take the trouble to read them.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, on this subject of printing unnecessary documents the statement has been very properly made that Congress is not always responsible for what the heads of the executive departments print; but I want to take this occasion to call the attention of the House to the fact that each day there is sent to the membership the House Calendar, which, in my opinion, contains quite a good deal of unnecessary matter. Since I have been a Member of the House, the Sixty-sixth Congress is the first Congress in which that has been done. Heretofore we got our calendars over at the House document room or down at the desk whenever we wanted them. Now, I have no complaint to make at the custom of sending out the House Calendar to the offices of Members, but in that calendar is printed an index of bills. The whole document makes 108 pages daily, of which only 30 pages are devoted to the House Calendar and the other seventy-odd pages consist of an index that is printed from day to day, and is practically a reprint every day.

It is a waste of 30,000 pages of good white paper every day, and it occurs to me that a more businesslike and sensible method could be devised for printing the calendar. It is absolutely unnecessary to print this index of bills oftener than once a week. The printing of those 70 pages every day is nothing but waste and should be stopped. I made this suggestion to the Clerk of the House some time ago, but he has not seen fit to make any change. I hope those in charge of the printing of the calendar will devise some method to stop it. The item, of course, is not so very large, so far as money is concerned, but I am opposed to waste in any form, and the instance I have pointed out is a conspicuous example of it, and it is right under the nose of Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the calendar used to be printed three times a week. I always thought myself that that was a sufficient number, but the House at one time concluded that it ought to have the calendar printed every day, and it has been printed every day. Now, the most valuable part of the calendar is the index.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. It occurs to me that the index printed in the calendars is practically identical with what is known as the weekly or monthly compendium compiled under the direction of Mr. Loomis of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Which I think is practically valueless.

Mr. BLACK. One or the other ought to be discontinued; it looks to me like an exact duplication. The House is free in complaining about duplication in the Government departments. Let us stop it in our own printing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are not a duplication at all.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman from Illinois admit that they are substantially a duplication of each other?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will be frank with the gentleman and say that I have at different times casually examined Mr. Loomis's publication. It is of no value to me whatever and no value in my office. The calendar is. The daily calendar is carefully examined every day in my office. If it was only published once a week I would get along, as far as I am concerned. An index to do any good must be up to date. There is where Members look to see the status of legislation. Every day we are asked in letters, and so forth, concerning the status of various pieces of legislation. If a bill has been reported to the House or passed by the House the index in the calendar gives the information. That is the way I acquire my information; I do not know how others get theirs. I do not believe in duplication of work. I think if we had a calendar printed two or three times a week it would be sufficient.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In view of the great experience of the gentleman and the great respect I have for his opinion, I want to ask him whether he thinks it would be worth while to undertake some method of notifying Members a little in advance of the business which is to be transacted the following day?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not possible, any more than it is possible in court. In court they give notice of the cases that will be called on a certain day, and yet frequently I have had cases on call for three or four weeks without being reached.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have found that in other legislative bodies—of course, the analogy may not be a strong one between the procedure possible here and that of other bodies—that such a practice obtains. For instance, in the French Assembly there is a notification given the evening before of business to be brought up at the next session, and so in Germany, and so in a modified way in England.

In 1861 there was a commission appointed in England by the House of Commons to revise the rules of that body, and on that commission were such men as Disraeli, Palmerston, and Bright. They brought in a report stressing it as something of the greatest importance that the House should know in advance the business to be transacted at a particular session, and then adhere to the program. I have thought that something of that kind might be devised here.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think it is possible, although I am free to say that I am not caught by surprise at anything that comes up. I think I can tell, as a rule, a day or three days ahead what is coming up better than the men that bring it up.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I say a word further, because I am extremely anxious to get the gentleman's opinion? I think in the extra session we acted on 21 matters under rules which were brought in by the Committee on Rules. The matters referred to in those rules, with a single exception, were taken up immediately on the adoption of the rules.

I do not see how anybody could have known in advance, unless he was in the confidence of the Rules Committee or in the confidence of the leaders of the majority who are largely responsible for the course of business in the House, what was coming up. It seems to me it might be understood that a matter to which a special rule pertains should not be taken up, except in case of emergency, until, say the day after the rule is adopted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman proposes a method of killing time. Take this case that we have to-day. Here is the sundry civil bill. The majority leader said the other day that we would finish it last week. I did not think that we could finish it before the end of this week. Both of us are mistaken. It comes up to-day with 30 pages unread. It might have been finished at 2 o'clock. Then what are you going to do, adjourn or go to something else?

Mr. BLANTON. Go fishing.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman's time extended 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I want to remark that the gentleman from Illinois owes it to the House to get up some day and make a full exposition of how he learns so much about the business of the House. I have been industrious, but not as industrious as he has.

Now, as to the matter in controversy, why not have a bulletin board at the corner of the desk, like they have in churches. Somewhere about the pulpit they have a board on which a statement is made of the hymns that they are going to sing, in large letters, so that everybody in the congregation can see what they are. I do not see why that could not be done here. The Rules Committee ought to be compelled to give 24 hours' notice every time it brings in a rule.

They bring it on the House suddenly, and the House does not know a thing on the face of the earth about what is in the rule—no one except the Rules Committee, and several of that committee do not know it, for some of them do not attend the meetings. One must go to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to find out when he is going to bring this rule up. Every day 25 or 30 men will come to me, or pass where I am sitting and ask me what is going to come up to-morrow, or when a certain thing is going to come up. I do not know, and there is no way of finding out. I go over and ask Mr. MONDELL, and he does not know. I do not think there is any intentional effort to keep the House in a fog about what is coming up, but people ought to have fair notice because they are interested in some bills and not interested in others.

Take the "chicken-feed" business, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] terms it, which comes up on Unanimous Consent Calendar day. Half of the Members in the House do not care three whoops about it, and they do not want to be dragged over here and kept here. A few make a specialty of it, as the gentleman from Illinois does. He knows what is coming up on the calendar and what he is going to do about it. He already has his amendments fixed, and he will get hold of a fellow here and worry him nearly into insanity, and then finally state to him that if he will accept his amendments, which he already has typewritten, he will not object to his bill. In order to get the bill through in some shape, the man interested in it will accept any amendment on earth that the gentleman from Illinois suggests.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And they are always good ones.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Most of them are good ones. I admit that. The records of this House for the last 10 years will show that the gentleman has had more bills through and more amendments put on bills than any 10 other men in the House. He pursues that course, and he ought to get down here and explain how he does it, so that somebody else can have as much information as he has, if that is possible, which I doubt.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not ask five minutes to explain how I do it, but I do ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], one of the ablest Members of the House, suggests that in other parliamentary bodies they are able to tell in advance what is coming up for consideration. That is frequently done in State legislatures, where bills are called on the first, second, and third reading, and it is not difficult to determine. There is no other Government in the world that has our form of irresponsible executive government. It is not difficult in other parliamentary bodies, where the executive consists of members of the legislative branch of the government, who have control of legislation, so long as they have the confidence of the chamber and remain in power, to tell what is coming up. When they lose power they go out of office. They determine what is coming up, and it is not difficult to do so. In this body there are a good many different committees, many of them of practically equal influence, and there is a constant strife between members of committees in this House who have reported bills as to which bill shall be taken up in preference to bills reported from other committees. There is no call of the calendar in this House, and if there were, we probably never would get through business. The only calendar that is called is the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and that is an entirely different thing from calling the calendar as it is usually understood. We have our form of government, with no centralization of authority in the legislative branch, and there can not be as long as we have our present form of Government, and there will always be this strife of effort on the part of Members and committees to have considered first the bills in which they are interested. You never can tell very far in advance how that will come out.

Whenever there has been any centralization of authority in this House, there has been an outcry against it. Take the cry of "Cannonism" in this House a few years ago. The former Speaker of this House, Mr. CANNON, had working under him, not an autocratic organization at all, but the smoothest working legislative machinery that has ever been known in this House. There was not very much controversy. Men were given an opportunity. More legislation was enacted during that period than during any other period of Congress, but there was an outcry against it, as there will be shortly against the power of the Committee on Rules, which constantly will seek to assume additional control of the House. Whenever you get this centralization of authority, you get with it the fight against it, because those who are not given preference are opposed to it. There are a great many bills on the calendar now that gentlemen want to have passed. Most of them ought never to be passed, but the Members who are interested in them want to get them considered. You can not tell very far in advance just the minute when something will come up, but there is one thing you can all do, if you will. You can all be prepared for the bills in which you are interested whenever they do come up, and that is not a difficult thing to do. That is what I do. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations made herein under the title "United States Housing Corporation" shall be available for expenditure by the agency or agencies of the public service having jurisdiction of the affairs of the said corporation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph beginning on line 23, page 161, and ending on line 2, page 162, as being unauthorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The bill has passed both Houses which terminates the activities of the Housing Corporation. It transfers to the Treasury Department the function of winding up this establishment. All that is intended here is to make the appropriation and permit this appropriation to follow the transfer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman admitted just a few moments ago that this Housing Corporation has in its possession millions of dollars' worth of property and cash.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but we have provided that that shall not be available, and as the cash comes in it must be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. But this particular paragraph provides that the appropriations made herein under the title "United States Housing Corporation" shall be available for expenditure by the agency or agencies of the public service having jurisdiction of the affairs of the said corporation.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that when we drew this provision it was not known, and I do not personally know now, just what the conferees have agreed to as to the agencies that will be intrusted with winding up the affairs of this company.

Mr. BLANTON. When this bill becomes a law there will be no need for this clause, will there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and that is just the reason it is put in.

Unless this provision is carried if we turn over to the Secretary of the Treasury the duty of winding up the United States Housing Corporation, he will have approximately $50,000,000 worth of collections to make and will have no funds to hire clerks unless this appropriation follows it.

Mr. BLANTON. If this clause goes in, has not this Housing Corporation authority under it to expend all——

Mr. GOOD. No; Congress has provided that the receipts shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and we must appropriate——

Mr. BLANTON. Then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said that the pending bill proposing to repeal the act creating the Housing Corporation provides that all these buildings throughout the country shall be turned over to the Treasury Department.

Mr. GOOD. I said activities.

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, activities. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the House bill provided that the Plaza buildings—the Government hotels—should be put under the Public Buildings Commission. The Senate bill provides that these buildings shall be put under the Treasury Department along with the balance of these war buildings throughout the country. I may add that we are to have a conference with the Senate conferees at 3 o'clock this afternoon on that question and on two or three other questions of difference between the two Houses. Of course, I have no idea what agreement is likely to be reached, because we have not yet had a meeting of the conferees and have discussed the subject only informally and briefly. If the Housing Corporation, as proposed by the Senate amendment, is to be continued until June 30—and in view of the lapse of time I think now that this should be done—and these Plaza buildings are transferred to the Treasury Department, as proposed by the Senate, and continued for another year, I take it that the provisions which this sundry civil bill contains for the force necessary to conduct that work for the ensuing fiscal year is perhaps not in excess of what the work will require, although I have not gone into that in great detail. I understand that the gentleman from Iowa has had extensive hearings on the question and understands the whole situation, and I am willing to trust his judgment on it, so far as I am personally concerned on that point.

Mr. GOOD. I thank the gentleman for the correction.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to continue the investigation touching women in industry, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $75,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph as being legislation on an appropriation bill and unauthorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

Mr. GOOD. There was carried in the current appropriation $40,000 for this service. This is one of the war-time services which was continued under the bill which was reported out last year.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is no law authorizing this.

Mr. GOOD. There is no law authorizing it, but there is a bill that has already passed the House creating this very department——

Mr. BLANTON. And hung up at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the Senate has not acted upon it; but here is a force already at work, and I am told they are doing good work. The committee went into this matter somewhat in detail in regard to the work that that bureau, headed by women, attempting to help solve the problems of women——

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the chairman if he wants to save time, he knows it is subject to the point of order——

Mr. GOOD. I do.

Mr. BLANTON. And I am going to make it eventually, but if he wants to save time, unless he wants to make a statement——

Mr. GOOD. I was in hope I might succeed in removing any objection the gentleman might have, but if it is a useless thing, of course——

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think the gentleman can convince me on this and the two subsequent items. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF NEGRO ECONOMICS.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to deal with the problems of negro workers and their relations to white employers and white workers, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $15,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation and unauthorized by law.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman reserve it so that we can understand what is meant——

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve it for a moment, but I can tell the gentleman what is meant by it. This department is sending these negro organizers down into my colleague's State and States like Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, and the Carolinas to unionize negro farm workers, unionize negro cooks in your pantry and kitchen, to insist on their charging wages up to $75, $80, $90, and even $100 a month and to work only 7 and 8 hours per day. This is what is known as "negro economics." [Laughter.] I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I assumed that perhaps the same ruling that was made last year in the employment service would apply to this, but I want to say to the gentleman from Texas, if I may digress just a minute, that there were some very learned negro gentlemen who came before the committee, men with college educations, who plead for this appropriation asked for by the Secretary.

Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. GOOD. Just a minute. Now, I want to give their point of view. The committee after weighing the matter decided to give something. Now they felt this way. The Government has a department here that has a large appropriation for the Indian. We recognize the Indian. We recognize the Indian Service in the United States; and we have a large bureau in the Department of the Interior dealing with the Indian. Now the colored men say, we are advised by these men, and I will say to the gentleman I know very little about the problem——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman let me give him some information? I know something about it.

Mr. GOOD. That the colored man was not recognized, and it was felt that his efficiency could be improved, that his usefulness could be extended, that his power to produce could be made more generally effective if he felt that he was some part of the Government in some way so far as the people of his own race was concerned. Now, the Secretary of Labor has the right, it seems to me, to create in his department a sort of bureau of this kind. He could employ these men, but he does not do it, and he comes to the Congress and wants to know whether it is the will of the Congress that he should do it, and the committee felt that this amount of money might well be expended for this race and felt that if they could extend their usefulness and their power and their production by being recognized, the committee was willing to grant that recognition.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Every single negro in my district, and there are lots of them, is my friend and will go the limit for me, and I want to say to the gentleman that the Secretary of Labor has already had for two years employed in his department one negro, whom he calls Director of Negro Economics, drawing a salary of $4,380.

He calls him "Doctor" So-and-so, trying to form a basis for that kind of a salary. And he has another negro down there, whom he calls "Assistant Director of Negro Economics," who has been drawing a salary of $1,740 with the bonus. I stated what they have been doing in the South a moment ago and what they have been doing in the Southwest, and I want to say that they have been stirring up strife and animosity in this race of people against the best friends they have on God's green earth, and I am not in favor of spending this money for the purpose of stirring up strife.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] said, I think it fair to say that those who appeared before the committee in support of this appropriation disclaimed any such object or intention as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has outlined. They based their claim entirely upon what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] has stated, upon the idea that if some recognition, whether it be great or small, was given to the negro population of the country, it would promote a better feeling of good will on their part, and that this particular work was devoted to stimulating the efficiency of the negro, in stimulating his desire to save and to purchase a home, and promoting his general welfare. And they put it upon the idea that it was not only a service to the negro worker, but a service to the white employer, because it served to make the negro more efficient and more industrious and more anxious to render the best service.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there is a corresponding bureau for white economics?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the whole department is devoted to that.

Mr. BLANTON. It is white and negro together. It is not exclusively white.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It was the contention that, although it was a small appropriation, it was a special recognition of the negro worker.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield first to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. Aside from prejudices of all sorts, the question of the millions of that race that are in our country, the fact that they are here and a part of our body politic seems to me to be a good argument why we should do something to improve their condition, because, as a matter of fact, from the standpoint of economics they are a very important factor even in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct. And this appropriation is very small and would simply provide for a very limited force here in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Tennessee knows that every dollar that is appropriated by this Government for economics or under that head is appropriated for every colored man just as well as for every white man.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. They are not segregated. And the gentleman will further agree with me, I believe, when I say that if you keep these directors of negro economics out of Tennessee and out of Texas and out of Mississippi, the Negro race will be a great deal better off, and they will have a great deal more friendship exhibited to them by the white people.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That may be entirely true, but I do not think the record will sustain the gentleman in his contention that any such disturbance as he refers to in Texas is brought about by this service.

Mr. BEE. There is nothing in Texas along the line the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has referred to, but there is the disturbance caused by bringing in these men from New York and elsewhere, to teach different doctrines and who are not under the department of economics at all. Nothing of the former kind has happened in my district.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. I can show the gentleman articles from one of the Denison papers and letters from Texas that set forth that state of affairs exactly.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think these three provisions, commencing on line 8, page 162, ending with line 9 on page 163, fall within the same class concerning which the House, as I recall, has on former occasions had a decision. The first ruling was on the provision providing for the Employment Service, and the ruling was made by the then presiding Chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], in which he held that the Employment Service was not within the contemplation of the provisions of the act creating the department. Subsequently the committee followed the ruling with regard to that when the bill was again considered. I have not examined closely into that ruling. The House having twice acted upon the matter, I am not inclined to urge the reversal of that ruling, especially in view of the matter that provision can be made without it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the present Chairman a moment ago overruled the decision of a former Chairman at this session concerning the Holman rule, and it may be that the present Chairman might have a very different opinion concerning the proposition involved here from that of the Chairman who ruled upon the subject before. The general language of the law creating the Department of Labor and defining in a way, at least, the purpose of the department, is sufficiently broad in its very comprehensive terms to include all these items in the bill and a thousand more. When the matter was up on the question of the ruling in reference to the Employment Bureau before, it was the ruling of the Chair, practically, at least, that this general language in the beginning of the law creating the department was not a sufficient foundation upon which to predicate by an appropriation act the creation of new divisions or bureaus in the Department of Labor not otherwise provided for by legislation. And it was a close question. I am not going to argue it with the Chair whether it ought to be ruled one way or the other, but if the Chair happens to be familiar with the proposition, happens to entertain a different view with reference to the organic act of the department, I think it is perfectly proper for the Chair to express that view and follow it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair hear one word further from me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the attention of the Chair to the rule that has been expressed by the Speaker of the House on various occasions, that where a ruling has been made in the committee, unless there is some very great and good reason why that rule should be changed, the Speaker should follow it in the House. This precedent, made by Chairman GARRETT, which has been cited by the Chairman of this committee, has been followed, sustaining this point of order to just such items made on two different occasions in this Congress in the committee, the Speaker upholding it after we got back into the House. I think, under the circumstances, this Chairman not having any very great reason for changing the rule twice expressed by the Committee of the Whole and twice followed by the House will not see fit to change it at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The provision of law creating the Department of Labor, and bringing within the Department of Labor the activities of the Government which previously affected the relations between employers and employees particularly, and labor in general, are very broad. If the provision now under consideration is construed in such a way as to authorize the creation of a new bureau in the department, the Chair is of the opinion that the paragraph is not in order. The Chair thinks the paragraph is susceptible of this construction. The Chair is inclined to think that the language of the paragraph under consideration goes somewhat beyond the authority which is granted in the act creating the Department of Labor; and in view of the further fact that the matter has been held not to be in order, as the Chair understands, upon previous occasions, the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

To enable the Secretary of Labor to foster, promote, to develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, to advance their opportunities for profitable employment by maintaining a national system of employment offices in the several States and political subdivisions thereof, and to coordinate the public employment offices throughout the country by furnishing and publishing information as to opportunities for employment, and by maintaining a system for clearing labor between the several States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official station together with their per diem in lieu of subsistence, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, supplies and equipment, telegraph and telephone service, and printing and binding, $225,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. It is new legislation upon an appropriation bill, and unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. For the reason given in the preceding decision of the Chair, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that, the paragraph having been stricken out, there is nothing upon which to base his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE.

Statement of appropriations: For preparation, under the direction of the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives, of the statements for the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, showing appropriations made, new offices created, offices the salaries of which have been omitted, increased, or reduced, in definite appropriations, and contracts authorized, together with a chronological history of the regular appropriation bills, as required by law, $4,000, to be paid to the persons designated by the chairmen of said committees to do the work.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLACK. I wish to refer to the need for the work of an employment agency; and although we have passed that item, I would like to take this occasion to refer to the industrial conference that was appointed by the President some time ago to investigate the industrial relations of capital and labor. In this connection I do not want to be understood as criticizing the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] for making the point of order, because that is his right under the rules of the House, and I have no criticism to make of any Member exercising his right. But I think that one of the most important activities that the Department of Labor can have is a properly organized employment agency to cooperate with and coordinate the employment agencies of the several States and municipalities.

This industrial conference that the President appointed some time ago had for its chairman Mr. W. B. Wilson, the Secretary of Labor. Mr. Herbert Hoover, I believe, was the vice president. Attorney General Gregory, of my own State, was a member, and other well-posted men in the economics and industry of the country were members of that conference. I would like to take the opportunity to read an extract from the report of the conference. This is what it has to say with reference to the employment agency:

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT CLEARING HOUSE.

The problem of unemployment is aggravated by the fact that at the present time there is no adequate method for mobilizing such a so-called labor reserve as, in spite of all efforts to reduce unemployment, may at any given time actually exist. At the present time there are many labor reserves but no mobilized reserve. The creation of a Federal Reserve System in banking has mobilized and coordinated the Nation's credit reserves. Under such a system the Nation can transact a larger volume of business on a given capital and credit than would be attainable under a system of separate banks acting individually in their localities. Similarly the country's productive capacity can be increased by the creation of a unified system of labor exchanges, making what is in effect a single labor reserve that can be drawn on by industry in any part of the Nation.

The conference recommends establishing a system of employment exchanges, municipal, State, and Federal, which shall in effect create a national employment service. The employment problem is in the first instance a local problem. The first objective must be the placement of local men in local establishments in order to keep as large a number of the employees as possible at home with their families. But no purely local approach to the problem is or can be effective. Labor surplus and labor shortage exists side by side within the country at the same time, although not necessarily within the same State. Carpenters or machinists may be out of work in Chicago at the same time that there is a demand for such artisans in Pennsylvania.

Perhaps more important is the constant problem of bringing labor from the towns and cities to the farms, both locally and in times of great seasonal demand for farm operations when the need of the farmer requires the more extensive transfer of labor from both his own and neighboring States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Department of Labor has any useful function to perform at all, and certainly no one would deny but that it has, it is to assist in the problem of unemployment. We have expended millions of dollars in developing the industries of the country from the purely material side of it, but there is a disposition, a dangerous lethargy on the part of the country, to overlook the human element in industry.

Not long ago I read an incident of two prominent men of industry who were viewing the great Niagara Falls, and one of them looked at those great waters plunging over the precipice with a roar of mighty power and said, "There is the greatest source of undeveloped power in the United States." The other prominent man of industry by his side said, "No; the greatest undeveloped source of power in the United States is the man power of the United States." I think that he was right. We are striving for a spirit of cooperation between capital and labor in order that the production of the country may be increased, and without that cooperation we can not have an increase in production. One of the best means to do that is to minimize unemployment.

I do not favor the establishment of local Federal employment agencies. That is not contemplated under the appropriation that was contained in the bill. What was in contemplation was that the Federal Employment Agency should cooperate with the 12 or 15 States that have their own employment agencies, and then with the chambers of commerce in the different cities that have taken up this work so as to have a clearing house for the work.

Now, I understand that at the present time there is very little unemployment in the United States. I dare say that there has been no time in the history of our Government when there was more universal prosperity and less unemployment. But we can not expect those conditions to continue indefinitely. They will not continue indefinitely, and therefore we ought to have in this Department of Labor, when the time of unemployment does come that is sure to come in the course of time, some agency that can keep in touch with the different sections of the country. We ought not to wait until it rains to begin to cover our house.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, beginning with its initial issue, the Olden Advance devotes each week several columns to vicious attacks against me. Who is paying for it? Could its editor, Don H. Biggers, afford it without pay? Where did he get the $250 about which he has written so many of you? Note the following letter just received:

CLYDE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION.

CLYDE, TEX., May 7, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: I wish to advise you that Mr. Don H. Biggers, previously of Lubbock, Tex., has been owing the Clyde Growers' Association $62.79 since 1917. The present manager, Mr. O. S. Maggart, and the previous manager, Mr. Carl C. Grubb, have repeatedly asked him by letter to settle, and he ignores their requests. The farmers who compose the association have shared in the loss. We still consider "our" Congressman "honorable."

Yours, R. O. CARNES.

After all, Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising that a newspaper editor who will beat fruit and vegetable farmers out of $62.79 worth of their produce and refuse to pay them, is yet able to devote each week columns of his space to attacks on me, and make $250 special deposits in banks, when the radical leaders now after my scalp have bragged about the unlimited funds they will expend to defeat me. For these radicals leaders, Mr. Chairman, want the farmers to get just as little as possible for their products.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that three items, women in industry, division of negro economics, and the employment service, went out on points of order.

I very much regret that the gentleman felt called upon to make the point of order. I simply want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I feel entirely confident that before we adjourn these services will be provided for.

Mr. BLANTON. Probably the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] now has a hip-pocket rule ready.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it will require any hip-pocket rule. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has stated what I think is the mind of the Committee on Labor, and I believe that before this session ends we will have completed a bill to take care of these three important items. I think they are important. I do not think they should have gone out on a point of order. I think the passage of this bill will make it impossible for them to be stricken out on a point of order again.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CANNON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution to provide for the preservation and maintenance of the records of the Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries; and

S. J. Res. 161. Joint resolution to exempt the New York Barge Canal from the provisions of section 201 of H. R. 10453.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9944) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept on behalf of the United States the donation by Sedgwick Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of its memorial hall property in Bedford, Taylor County, Iowa, for Federal building purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2448) for the relief of certain officers of the United States Army, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Public Printer: Public Printer, $6,000; purchasing agent, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,750; accountant, $2,500; assistant purchasing agent, $2,500; cashier and paymaster, $2,500; clerk in charge of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the Capitol, $2,500; private secretary, $2,500; assistant accountant, $2,250; chief timekeeper, $2,000; paying teller, $2,000; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 10 of class 4, 13 of class 3, 12 of class 2, 10 of class one, 15 at $1,000 each, 11 at $900 each, 1 $840; paymaster's guard, $1,000; doorkeepers—chief $1,200, 1 $1,200, 5 assistants at $1,000 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; delivery men—chief $1,200, 5 at $950 each; telephone switchboard operator, $720; 3 assistant telephone switchboard operators, at $600 each; 7 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $153,930.

Mr. PELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PELL: Page 165, line 20, after the word "paymaster," strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000."

Mr. GOOD. I reserve a point of order on the amendment. Does the gentleman wish to speak on it?

Mr. PELL. I just want about two minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. PELL. I thank the gentleman very much. This man who is now cashier and paymaster is named Wilver, and he has been on the job for 20 years and is at present in charge of an expenditure of over $20,000,000 a year. He not only does his own work regularly—the work that he is paid for doing—but he also does a great deal of night work, for which he is not paid at all, and I am informed by the members of the force over there that if they happen to be sick he will come around to their homes personally and see that they get their money. His record is excellent, and I think he deserves this slight increase. He now gets $2,500 with the $240 bonus, making $2,740, so that the $3,000, which carries no bonus, is only an advance of $260 a year, which I think he well deserves. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The salary is fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman from New York changes existing law by increasing the salary of an officer whose salary is fixed by law, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For public printing, public binding, and paper for public printing and binding, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Customs Appeals, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Pan American Union, the Executive Office, the United States Geographic Board, and the departments; for salaries, compensation, or wages of all necessary employees additional to those herein specifically appropriated for (including the compensation of the foreman of binding, the foreman of printing, and the foreman of press work, at $3,000 each); rents, fuel, gas, electric current, gas and electric fixtures; bicycles, electrical vehicles for the carriage of printing and printing supplies, and the maintenance, repair, and operation of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer (not exceeding $1,500); freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service; furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses, stationery, postage, and advertising; directories, technical books, and books of reference, not exceeding $500; adding and numbering machines, time stamps, and other machines of similar character; machinery (not exceeding $100,000); equipment, and for repairs to machinery, implements, and buildings, and for minor alterations to buildings; necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; and for all the necessary materials and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work, $5,783,710.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee about the item of indexing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It seems to me that that is an awfully expensive proposition.

Mr. GOOD. As I recall the testimony, it shows that the indexing of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is now being done for $1.25 a page. The price paid in the last Congress, I think, was $1.50 a page. There has always been more or less controversy with regard to it. It is a matter primarily with the Joint Committee on Printing. That committee has charge of that work. That committee is attempting to bring about some reforms in the matter of printing. To what extent it will succeed is, of course, somewhat problematical. I have a letter from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIESS], a member of the Joint Committee on Printing, in which he says that the total amount paid to the indexer in 1918 was $14,807.82, and in 1919, $13,844.98; that out of this the indexer has to pay the salaries of his employees and other expenses. At the present time I understand there are three or four indexers and other employees. The assistant superintendent of documents at the Government Printing Office, of whom we made inquiry in the hearings as to what it would cost if the work was done at the Government Printing Office—you will find his testimony on page 2372 of the hearings—stated that it would require four indexers and three other persons in addition to the indexers to do the work. Of course, if it takes seven persons, $13,000 is not an excessive price to pay for the indexing. It would cost more than that if we had to pay by hiring persons and putting them on the pay roll.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes; but during the last six sessions of Congress it had cost $149,603, an average of over $25,000 a session, which seems to me to be pretty good pay.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations with reference to this item:

For the Patent Office: For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, and labels, exclusive of illustrations; and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indices, $575,000.

I notice several places in the bill where the Government is carrying appropriations for engravings and different kinds of printing. Has the committee considered the advisability of the Government doing its own work in this regard?

Mr. GOOD. All of the printing is done, of course, at the Government Printing Office. The engraving is done outside. As I recall, the Commissioner of Patents wishes to equip a separate engraving establishment to engrave the designs, trade-marks, and things of that kind.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman will notice that that is just one item, $575,000, or more than half a million dollars a year that we are paying to outside concerns.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; not at all. A very small part of that is paid for the engraving. That is for the entire printing of the weekly issue of patents, designs, and trade-marks, as well as the Official Gazette, and the weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indices.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Since we have down here the best Printing Office in the world, why is not the work done there?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, that money is largely expended at the Government Printing Office. Only a small part of it is expended outside.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. That is not my information.

Mr. GOOD. That is the fact.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I am asking for information.

Mr. GOOD. The engraving work is done outside, but not a line of printing is done outside. This is the appropriation for the printing of the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, and labels, as well as the Official Gazette, and practically all of that is expended at the Government Printing Office, and that is true with regard to the other items. If the gentleman will turn back to page 168 he will find that we carry for printing and binding an appropriation of $5,783,710. That is the total amount carried in this item for printing and binding. Now, that is distributed $2,000 for printing the congressional proceedings, debates, documents, and so forth——

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. If those are the facts, they are different from what I understood; and I was informed by one who ought to know that most of the $575,000 is left to outside people who make the engravings and illustrations for the Patent Office. It is quite a large item. I have not the figures here at hand, but I understand we pay outside parties for the engravings and illustrations.

Mr. GOOD. The Government Printing Office does let out the photolithographic work, the engraving work required for the production of certain trade-marks and labels. But when it comes to printing they are turned over to the Public Printer. The Government owns no plant for this process of photolithographing and engraving.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Why not?

Mr. GOOD. Because there has never been any appropriation for it and there has never been any authorization.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There was some criticism of the administration of the Government Printing Office in the discussion on the second deficiency appropriation bill. In view of what has been said, I have felt that something should be said relative to the Public Printer and the administration of his office, and I requested Mr. Russell Beene, the efficient and capable statistician of the Printing Office, to furnish me with some facts and figures covering a period of a few years past in the administration of that office.

What are the facts with regard to the operations of the Government Printing Office during the present administration? I call attention to the hearings, which contain a table of comparative production which covers the past nine fiscal years, divided into three-year periods, the last three years of the former administration and the first three and the last three years of Mr. Ford's management of the office as Public Printer. It shows a total product during the nine-year period of $71,673,009, and of this amount the last three years, 1917, 1918, and 1919, carry more than 46 per cent of the whole; in other words, within less than 3 per cent of that of the combined product of the six preceding years, 1911–1913 and 1914–1916. Some big figures of printing production are to be found in this table. Of a total of 37,189,000,000 printed pages, the output of the office for the past three years was 17,927,000,000, in excess of 48 per cent of the total for nine years, and as compared with 7,884,000,000 for the years 1911–1913. The bound publications total 10,353,000, round numbers, for the past three years, as compared with 4,310,000 for 1911–1913, or 52 per cent plus compared with 21 per cent plus in a total of 19,784,067 bindings for the nine-year period.

The paper cost entering into the product of the office totals $18,489,439.85, and of this amount approximately 64 per cent was consumed during the past three years, and is 127.59 per cent in excess of the total for the three-year periods 1911–1913 and 1914–1916 combined. The production of the office, all operations combined, has increased since 1915 more than 70 per cent in volume. It appears to be creditable management that with this increase in production the actual expenditures for the three-year period 1917–1919 for the office of the Public Printer for the clerical force and the watch force combined—that portion of the appropriation carried under legislative—was $186,612.13, as compared with $187,128.36, or $516.23 less than it was for the three-year period 1911–1913, and shows a reduction from 3 per cent plus to less than 1.72 per cent for this item of overhead charges for the total expenditures of the office for the periods in question. These figures obtained, though the expenditures of the office of the superintendent of documents were not taken into consideration, and notwithstanding the fact that the product computed for 1911–1913 includes $517,260 for postal-card paper—the Printing Office was furnishing paper and printing the postal cards at that time—and $700,000 for excess charges on account of scale prices to Congress and the departments, which was reduced 5 per cent and 2½ per cent additional and made effective during 1914–1916; in other words, the charges to Congress and the departments as carried in this table of comparative production referred to would have been $1,217,260 greater for 1914–1916 had the Printing Office continued to buy postal-card stock purchased by the Post Office after 1914 and had the scale of prices for work produced remained the same as it was from 1911–1913.

I am informed that while in 1918 the Printing Office reached its peak of production on account of the war, and notwithstanding the drastic action of the Printing Committee in its curtailment of printing authorized by law, the production of the Government Printing Office for the present fiscal year will vary but slightly in money cost to that of 1918. There has been an advance in wages of the principal trades throughout the office of approximately 40 per cent, and the cost of paper is uprecedented and continues to climb with each succeeding day. Newsprint paper purchased by the Public Printer at 2.3 cents per pound in 1911 now is almost unattainable at a figure less than 12 cents per pound. An appropriation made for printing and binding at this time of $12,000,000 would not more than suffice for an equal production in volume of printing, as compared with an appropriation of approximately $6,000,000 prior to 1915.

We are appropriating vast sums of public money for the various activities of the Government, scientific research and the gathering of trade statistics, and so forth, and to deny funds to the Public Printer for the printing of this departmental data is "locking the stable after the horse is stolen." There undoubtedly is much printing that is a waste of money; on the other hand, a great deal more printing of the right sort might be done that would bring 1,000 per cent returns to the country if it could be had in the volume that it should be had.

The total expenditures on account of allotment and repay printing for the present fiscal year will approximate $13,000,000. Of this amount, printing and binding alone will carry an excess of $12,000,000; holiday appropriation, $357,394; leaves of absence, $558,000; and legislative, $212,190. It is evident from these figures that the estimates submitted for 1921, totaling $9,138,635, with increased wages, increased cost of paper, materials, and supplies, are minimum figures, and if not provided the result will be the usual clamor, as we have witnessed this year, for deficiencies.

The committee, in its wisdom, reduced the printing and binding estimates of the Public Printer for the present fiscal year $2,385,000. To date deficiencies approximating $1,786,000 have passed the House. The original estimates of the Public Printer have been exceeded by the granting of special repay funds. Indirect appropriations or funds available from the departments for printing, known as repay money, has been provided in excess of $4,500,000. I am advised by officials of the Government Printing Office that it would be much more economical for the Government to have the appropriations made under the allotment plan rather than the repay plan. The work under these circumstances could be apportioned during the year in such a way that there would be a greater uniformity in production and a corresponding saving. What is known as slack periods in the various branches of the office could thus be minimized.

The Printing Office is a great factory, and to secure maximum production at a minimum cost the Public Printer should not be placed in a position where he does not know whether the departments are going to be furnished with the necessary funds to pay for their printing. Until the past two years Congress has provided funds according to the Public Printer's estimates, and as soon as we departed from that program more or less confusion has necessarily resulted.

Contending that the increase in the volume of work thrown upon the office force by section 11 of the legislative bill, requiring that all printing should be done at the Government Printing Office, made a reduction of the office force impracticable, the Public Printer shows, on page 2220, that the number of bills rendered for eight months of the present fiscal year compared with a similar period for 1915 were 46,216 and 35,196, or an increase of 31.31 per cent this year. Repay work or printing not provided for in allotted appropriations has increased the past four years from $703,524.30 to $5,171,568.28, or 635.094 per cent.

The following extract from the second report of the Provost Marshal General to the Secretary of War pays a high tribute to the efficiency of the Government Printing Office:

> The printing of this quantity of forms was a task of such proportions as to tax to the utmost the Government Printing Office. This institution, however, responded admirably to the unprecedented demands made upon it, and some remarkable records were made. The most notable of these was the printing of forms of all kinds for the registration, classification, and mobilization of the registrants of September 12, 1918. This immense task was performed during a period of 50 days. Several records for quantity and speed made during this time deserve special mention. Fifteen million questionnaires were printed in 34 days. Fourteen and one-half millions of one-page leaflets were printed within 60 hours after the presses were started, at an average hourly production of 240,000 copies. Thirty-two and one-half million registration cards were turned out in eight days; and numerous other achievements could be mentioned. Historians of the future, in recording the many wonderful deeds to the credit of the Nation during this war, should not overlook the assistance rendered by the Government Printing Office in raising the National Army; and this report would not be complete without an acknowledgment of the manner in which that establishment performed its portion of the work.

So far we have been dealing with the production. Taking up finances, I note from examination of the Public Printer's report that the Public Printer has not spent all the moneys coming into his possession and which he might have spent had he been inclined to any other course than that of conscientious and economical handling of Government money, and note that the average sum reverting to the Treasury from all appropriations under the Public Printer for the period 1911–1913 was $217,360.66, for the period 1914–1916 the average turned back to the Treasury was $153,362.85, while for the last three fiscal years, 1917 to 1919, inclusive, an average of $951,390.94 available funds were turned back into the Treasury. During the fiscal year 1919 the Public Printer refused to expend $2,282,747.46 Government funds, and that unusual amount, an amount in excess of combined reversions to the Treasury of the 10 previous years, was saved to the taxpayers of the country. Now, to this $2,282,747.46 that reverts unexpended for 1919 add $384,606.77, miscellaneous receipts—receipts from sales of waste paper and other miscellaneous sources which were also deposited in the Treasury—and you have a grand total of $2,667,354.23, more than ten times—more than 1,000 per cent—in excess of the average of the 10-year period preceding. These facts should be worth considering when we withhold from the Public Printer and those officials under him who are entitled to it that recognition due them.

I append the following:

Comparative statement of the productive operations for the fiscal years 1911–1913, 1914–1916, and 1917–1919, covering the most important items entering into printing and binding.

[2] Decrease per cent.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1921 any department or independent establishment of the Government ordering printing and binding from the Government Printing Office (other than that specifically provided for by allotment) shall advance to the Public Printer 90 per cent of the estimated cost of the work at the time the order is placed and upon completion of such work shall pay to the Public Printer a sum sufficient to complete payment of the actual cost thereof. The sums so advanced to the Public Printer shall be placed to the credit of the Government Printing Office on the books of the Treasury Department and be subject to requisition by the Public Printer.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 168, line 12, after the word "Printer," insert the words "upon written request"; and in line 17, strike out the words "Government Printing Office" and insert in lieu thereof the words "appropriation public printing and binding."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. REAVIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 10, 1920:

H. R. 6750. An act to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported;

H. R. 12460. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Maine into the Union;

H. R. 12824. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union;

H. R. 13139. An act for the sale of isolated tracts in the former Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak.;

H. R. 8314. An act to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering;

H. R. 9615. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct an error in an Indian allotment; and

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution to correct an error in the wording of the appropriation of $71,000 made in the act approved July 9, 1918, and to authorize the Secretary of War to pay said sum to respective parties entitled thereto.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Department of Agriculture, including not to exceed $47,000 for the Weather Bureau, and including the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, and in pursuance of the joint resolution numbered 13, approved March 30, 1906, and also including not to exceed $250,000 for farmers' bulletins, which shall be adapted to the interests of the people of the different sections of the country, an equal proportion of four-fifths of which shall be delivered to or sent out under the addressed franks furnished by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, as they shall direct, $725,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this item carries an appropriation for printing the farmers' bulletins. I notice that the farmers' bulletins recently—and I do not know how recently—all have on the front page illustrations which, in my judgment, mar the beauty and usefulness of the bulletins, and undoubtedly are rather expensive. They do not add anything to the bulletins. They do not add anything to the knowledge contained in the bulletins, and for the life of me I can not see why the Agricultural Department wants to spend its money on useless cover illustrations rather than in useful printing. If they were fine illustrations, like some magazines have on the covers, it might have some beneficial quality of beauty, but they are not. It is just a waste of money.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think the illustrations are calculated to attract the attention of the farmers to whom they are sent, and that that is the primary purpose, with a view of getting them interested to the extent that they will read the publication?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think so. A farmer who will not read one of these bulletins except upon the basis of the illustration will not make use of the bulletins. The illustrations do not illustrate what is in the bulletins. It is just a pure extravagance without any beneficial result whatever. I read all the farmers' bulletins, and I suppose other Members do. They have an entertaining quality, but I never pick up a new one without feeling ashamed that there should be such poor illustrations and such a waste of money in making them.

The Clerk read as follows:

In addition there is appropriated for the operation, maintenance, and extension of water works, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, during the fiscal year 1921, the necessary portions of such sums as shall be paid as water rentals or directly by the Government of Panama for such expenses.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a table showing the activities of the commission to determine the mineral claims, about which I asked a question of the chairman the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

WAR MINERALS RELIEF COMMISSION.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE PANAMA CANAL.

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal and Canal Zone, including the following: Compensation of all officials and employees, including $1,000 additional compensation to the Auditor for the War Department for extra services in auditing accounts for the Panama Canal; foreign and domestic newspapers and periodicals; law books not exceeding $500, textbooks, and books of reference; printing and binding, including printing of annual report; rent and personal services in the District of Columbia; purchase or exchange of typewriting, adding, and other machines; purchase or exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; claims for damages to vessels passing through the locks of the Panama Canal, as authorized by the Panama Canal act; claims for losses of or damages to property arising from the conduct of authorized business operations; claims for damages to property arising from the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal; acquisition of land and land under water, as authorized in the Panama Canal act; expenses incurred in assembling, assorting, storing, repairing, and selling material, machinery, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal which are unserviceable or no longer needed, to be reimbursed from the proceeds of such sales; expenses incident to conducting hearings and examining estimates for appropriations on the Isthmus; expenses incident to any emergency arising because of calamity by flood, fire, pestilence, or like character not foreseen or otherwise provided for herein; per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence when prescribed by the Governor of the Panama Canal, to persons engaged in field work or traveling on official business, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914; and for such other expenses not in the United States as the Governor of the Panama Canal may deem necessary best to promote the maintenance and operation, sanitation, and civil government of the Panama Canal, all to be expended under the direction of the Governor of the Panama Canal and accounted for as follows:

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That, beginning with the fiscal year 1921, the Federal Farm Loan Board shall, as soon as possible after the close of each half of each fiscal year, levy upon the Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks, in proportion to their gross assets, an assessment equal to the amounts expended from all appropriations on account of salaries (including any additional compensation) and expenses of the board and its appointees and employees for the half of the fiscal year then closed. The board, in making such assessment, shall assess exclusively against either class of banks such expenses as may be incurred exclusively on behalf of such class. Such assessments shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that as new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) The director, with the approval of the President, shall appoint and fix the compensation of such employees and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, other supplies, and necessary expenses of the office as may from time to time be provided for by Congress. All employees in the bureau whose compensation is less than $5,000 a year shall be appointed from lists of eligibles furnished by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 181, line 12, after the word "regulations," strike out the period and insert the following: "Provided, however, That honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be given a preference in the making of appointments."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that this should be read by sections, and that the reading of the provisions has not been completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from California that the bill is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. That is the law now, and I do not believe we ought to adopt it at the present time. The items in this provision are just the same items that were in the bill that passed the House. The amendment the gentleman from New York is offering is simply a restatement of existing law.

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. It is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, should not the entire section be read before it is open to amendment or objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from California that appropriation bills are read by paragraphs, and while this is substantive legislation, it is a part of the appropriation bill.

Mr. RAKER. Then the first paragraph has been passed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SIEGEL) there were—ayes 11, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Is this budget legislation here the same legislation that the House passed recently, which went over to the Senate?

Mr. GOOD. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAR. 12. The comptroller general shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees in the department as may from time to time be provided for by Congress, and perform all other duties of a head of an independent Government establishment. All such appointments, except to positions carrying a salary of $5,000 a year, shall be made from lists of eligibles furnished by the Civil Service Commission, and in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations. No person appointed by the comptroller general shall be paid a salary in excess of $5,000 a year, and not more than three persons appointed by him shall be paid a salary at that rate. Until March 5, 1921, no person who at the time of the passage of this act holds office as one of the six auditors referred to in paragraph 10, and who in pursuance of paragraph 11 is transferred to the accounting department, shall be removed from office or have his compensation reduced, except for cause. All officers and employees of the department, whether transferred to the department in pursuance of paragraph 11 or appointed by the comptroller general, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by the comptroller general. The comptroller general shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the department.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 188, line 19, after the word "regulations," strike out the period and insert: "Provided, however, That honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be given a preference in the making of appointments."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAR. 13. The comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds and shall make to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the accounting department containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt and disbursement of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures. He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as the committee may request. The comptroller general shall specially report to the Congress every expenditure or contract made by any head of a department in any year in excess of the appropriation to such department and in violation of law.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, on page 189, line 14, the word "containing" is misspelled. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be directed to correctly spell the word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, also on page 185, at the end of line 15, I move to strike out the letter "a" and insert the word "are."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 185, line 15, after the word "Treasury," strike out the letter "a" and insert the word "are."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. In paragraph 12 it is provided that the comptroller general shall perform all other duties of the head of an independent Government establishment. I do not know just what is meant by the head of an independent Government establishment, but I would like to ask whether this is a suggestion that the comptroller general shall perform the duties of a member of the President's Cabinet?

Mr. GOOD. Not at all. It was intended by creating this office that it should be as near to the legislative branch of the Government as it is possible to put it. If it could be practically an arm of the Congress, it would perhaps be better, but under our form of government it was not thought that such a plan could be devised, and the best we could do was to make it an independent establishment answerable to Congress and to Congress alone. Therefore it was made an independent establishment. There never has been any intention or thought of this office being a department with a Cabinet head.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, it is created as a department.

Mr. GOOD. As an independent department.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All departments are independent, and they are the only ones that have heads. Commissions do not have heads—that is, in the singular. I did not know whether this contemplated that this department should have a head who would have the same duties to perform, which, of course, are extralegal, as the head of one of the departments of the Government, where he is created a Cabinet officer.

Mr. GOOD. It was not intended to give him that position.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am satisfied with the gentleman's explanation. It could only be done by the President calling him in?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent at this point to insert in the RECORD a statement made on the budget by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a statement by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a memorandum prepared by Prof. W. F. Willoughby, a director of the Institute for Government Research and a writer on economics, who has been for years a student of Government problems. I think that this memorandum which has been prepared will be of very great interest to the Members of the House and that it is a real contribution to the subject of budget legislation. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to insert it in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, coming from the source it does, I take it that it is all right, but some of these scholarly gentlemen from whose pen some documents have come have been inoculated with a little too much socialism of late. This is absolutely free of that, is it? Has the gentleman read it?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. So far as I know it is. I have read it. It is a discussion of the budget system.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The memorandum referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE STATUS OF THE PROPOSED BUREAU OF THE BUDGET.

(By W. F. Willoughby.)

In proposals now pending before Congress looking to the establishment of a national budget system, substantial agreement has been reached regarding almost all of the important features of the proposal, except that in relation to the status and location of the bureau of the budget which it is proposed to create for the purpose of handling the detail work to be done in the preparation of the budget for submission to the Congress.

In respect to this feature opinion is sharply divided between the two principles of having this bureau constitute a special agency directly attached to the office of the President, and of having it constitute a special service within the Treasury Department and subject to the general direction and control of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Institute for Government Research, as a result of its study of the budgetary systems of other countries, and of the special character of the problem in our own country, due to the character of our political system, is strongly of the opinion that the first-named principle should be followed. The reasons leading to this opinion are as follows:

1. The primary purpose sought in seeking to have the National Government go upon a budgetary basis is that responsibility for the preparation of a definite, complete, and consistent financial and work program should be placed squarely upon the President. Anything that would tend to obscure or lessen this responsibility should be avoided. It is believed, therefore, that if responsibility for the preparation of the budget is placed, in the first instance, upon the Secretary of the Treasury, this responsibility, in the eyes of the public at least, will rest rather with the Secretary of the Treasury than with the President.

It is true that the President is responsible for the acts of the Secretary and that the budget as prepared will go forward as the President's budget. Nevertheless, the fact will remain that the budget in its details will represent the work and judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury and the President's responsibility will be the secondary one of accepting this budget, or at best of revising it in the general features only. This will be well known by the public, with the result that it will not hold the President to the same accountability for its proposals that it would if the preparation of the budget were made his direct, affirmative act.

A budget system should be viewed from its political as well as its purely administrative aspects. It has been repeatedly pointed out that the National Government will not have an economical and efficient administration until the voters of the country demand it. It is thus highly desirable that the matter of efficiency and economy be made a political issue; that is one of the tests that will be applied by voters in exercising their electoral function. This can only be attained by making the President directly responsible for his financial and work program. As ex-President Taft has expressed it, the preparation and submission of the budget should be the supreme act of his administration by which the voters are to judge regarding both his proposals and the manner of their fulfillment. The President is the only administrative officer who is elected by the people and is thus the only administrative officer who can be held directly responsible politically.

2. Again, the advocates of a budget system seek by this change in our methods of financial administration to accentuate the responsibility of the President as the head of the administration, or, to express it more directly, as the general manager of the Government as a business corporation. At the present time he has this responsibility only in a most general way. Only in slight degree do the people now hold him directly responsible for the details of administrative organization, procedure, and activities. With the responsibility squarely placed upon him for formulating a budget, he will be compelled to make known in a formal manner his opinion as to what the Government should do and the character of organization that should be provided for its accomplishment. If the bureau of the budget is located in the Treasury Department this responsibility will be shared with, if it is not deemed to be primarily that of, the Secretary of the Treasury.

3. In connection with the foregoing it is important to appreciate that a budget is essentially a work program, as well as a financial proposal. Advocates of conferring authority in respect to the preparation of the budget upon the Secretary of the Treasury fail to give due weight to this fact. Their tendency is to look upon the work of preparing a budget as little more than that of revising estimates of expenditure needs as formulated in the first instance by bureau and departmental heads. They have in mind merely the work of paring down estimates. It must be apparent that the really important thing is the determination of what work shall be undertaken and the scale on which it shall be prosecuted. Responsibility for making decisions of this kind can only be properly placed upon the President. This point was excellently stated by Prof. Cummings in a debate on the relative merits of the Good and McCormick bills at the annual meeting of the American Political Science Association held at Cleveland, Ohio, on December 30, 1919. Replying to those who had spoken in favor of the McCormick proposal that the responsibility for the preparation of the budget be placed on the Secretary of the Treasury, he said:

"I feel a good deal of diffidence in presuming to differ with the gentlemen who last spoke, but I think I must differ with all three of them. I think that they make their fundamental mistake in viewing the budget as a financial measure. It is a financial measure simply incidentally. Your budget is your program of work; it is your administrative program, and the administrative program is up to the President, the chief executive officer, and not up to any financial man. The finances are entirely matters of detail and entirely matters that are purely incidental, and the total amount in your budget should not be fixed by your estimated revenues but by your estimated needs, which is an administrative thing and not a financial thing. You should not take the amount of revenue you raised last year and say 'our budget can not exceed that, no matter what our needs are.' You have got to take your needs first, get them to the point where you are sure they are needs, and then dig up enough revenue to carry them into effect. What does our Government exist for? To give service; not simply to cut down expenditures or to spend money; that is an important part of its program but it is incidental to taking care of its needs. Now, your administrative program certainly does not belong with the Secretary of the Treasury, it belongs with the Chief Executive."

The formulation of a work program, which is the important feature of a budget, in a word is a responsibility of the President, and this responsibility must be direct. It must, moreover, be exercised in direct conjunction with the formulation of the proposals for the means by which this program is to be financed. If the President is to make decisions in respect to what shall be done and the Secretary of the Treasury to determine the amount of money to be asked of Congress with which to put such decisions into effect, the result will be to divide responsibility between the President and the Secretary of the Treasury. If the latter should really exercise his powers in a positive manner we would have in effect two business managers for the Government.

4. The preparation of a budget, moreover, means something more than passing upon the work, proposals, or programs of the heads of departments. It also means the determination of the particular service or department that shall be intrusted with the performance of an activity once decided as advisable. It is submitted that the only administrative officer who can properly do this is the President. He is the only administrative officer who is the recognized superior of all other administrative officers and whose decision will, as a matter of course, be unhesitatingly acquiesced in. It is impossible to believe that the heads of departments will be equally willing to accept the decisions of the Secretary of the Treasury who, since the organization of our Government, has had only coordinate rank with their own. Ex-President Taft, in discussing this point before the House Select Committee on the Budget, put this matter in this way. He said:

"Now, I think it would be a mistake to place this under the Secretary of the Treasury for the reason that the Secretary of the Treasury is running one of the departments. The Secretary of the Treasury runs one of the departments of the Government, and he is like the Secretary of any other department. If you select the Secretary of the Treasury as the officer to consider the estimates of the other departments, you are going to get into difficulties. Members of the Cabinet are not different from other people, and the pride of department, pride of bureau, and of all the things under them serve to make them all human. Now, the President is the head of the Government, so far as the Executive is concerned, and what he says is more likely to go than what the Secretary of the Treasury says."

It is significant that, with the single exception of Mr. Glass, the Secretary of the Treasury, this position was strongly indorsed by all the witnesses who appeared before that committee who had had practical experience in the conduct of the administrative affairs of the Government—Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy; Mr. Henry S. Stimson, former Secretary of War; Mr. Charles D. Norton, former private secretary to President Taft; Mr. Arthur P. Davis, Director of the Reclamation Service; and Judge W. W. Warwick, Comptroller of the Treasury. This is the opinion of the present chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, Mr. JAMES W. GOOD, and his predecessor in that position, Mr. Swager Sherley. The former, arguing this point, in an address delivered before the Illinois Manufacturers' Association in Chicago, January 9, 1920, said:

"Who shall prepare the budget is a question frequently asked and one that a group of men commissioned to work out a budgetary system for the United States are trying to solve. The more I study the problem the more thoroughly do I become convinced that there can be but one answer to this question. The President is responsible in the main for the work of his administration. He is the only official in the Government who is elected by all the people. He appoints the members of his Cabinet and subordinate officials. The President, and the President alone, can bring about a harmonious working together of his official family, and to him should be committed the responsibility for the preparation of the budget. To give one of the members of his family the power to regulate and control all the activities carried on by the other members of his official family is unnatural and unworkable. For the next 25 years the big political questions in this country will center, not around questions of the coinage of silver or the tariff, but rather around the big business problems of economy and taxation. If this be true, the great act of every administration for the next quarter of a century will be its financial program, and at every general election the electors will be called upon to pass judgment on the economy and efficiency of the administration then in power.

"Of course, the President can not perform this monumental task in person. He must be given a staff of his own choosing upon whom he can place the utmost confidence and who will do the work and prepare for him a budget in accordance with his plan and in harmony with his views. Congress must create a machine by which he can do the work. But the budget when prepared must be the President's budget. The responsibility must be his, and his alone, and the act must be his act. If duplications exist in the services and the budget provides for their continuance, or if waste and extravagance find a place in the estimate of appropriations as contained in the budget, the President will be responsible if they are included in his program. For that responsibility he and his party must answer in the succeeding election."

The testimony of Mr. Swagar Sherley, the predecessor of Mr. Good as chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, is equally to the point, and is all the more significant in that it represents a reversal of the opinion first held by him. In his testimony before the House Committee on the Budget, he said:

"My thought, in the past, has been that the Secretary of the Treasury should be made the true premier of the Cabinet, and as Secretary of the Treasury should be charged with the function of revising the estimates of his colleagues, but the more I think about that the more I have come to doubt the wisdom of such a provision. The advantages of it are that Congress could very clearly and very directly make it his duty. The Secretary of the Treasury is more peculiarly the officer and agent of the Congress of the United States than any Cabinet officer, and Congress would clearly have the power to require him to perform these functions. But there is necessarily engendered, through such procedure, a friction between that Cabinet officer and other Cabinet officers that might very seriously impair the usefulness of his work and the harmony that ought to exist between executive officers so intimately related, and I have, therefore, rather been led to the belief that the President should be given the facilities for having brought to his attention a consideration of the estimates submitted by the various heads, and that he must then, at the Cabinet table, have determined, under his direct supervision, this question of revision of the estimates of various departments by the Cabinet officers.

"It is very difficult, it seems to me, to give primacy in the true sense to any member of the official family of the President, and, after all, the responsibility rests upon him, and his hand should really be the guiding hand to determine what involves not only a question of expenditure but, through expenditure, the question of administrative policy in the highest sense.

"I have come, therefore, rather to the opinion that it would be desirable to place under the President a sufficient corps of assistants to enable him to acquire the information that he desires and to perhaps put at the head of that an officer whose title and relationship would be such as to plainly indicate that he was the particular, confidential, close executive officer of the President. If you simply make him a bureau chief in the ordinary acceptation of that term, you will obtain the irritation of all the Cabinet officers at dictation from a bureau chief, in a sense, even more marked than if you made the Secretary of the Treasury or some other Cabinet officer the medium for performing this work. But if you make him, so to speak, the close, confidential agent of the President who brings to the President the information whereby the President, in turn, brings to the Cabinet the data that enables them as his advisers to determine the question, I believe that it would be possible to bring about the harmonious cooperation so necessary for a real reform, for back of any machinery, back of any possible plan, must be the desire on the part of the Executive and his official family to work out the result."

The contrary opinion of Mr. GLASS should be viewed in the light that he undoubtedly had in mind chiefly the work of revising estimates in the sense of cutting down the amounts of money asked, and that he was in a position where it was but natural that he should seek to promote the influence of the particular department of which he was the head.

For the reasons that have been given, it is believed that it will be difficult, if not impossible, for the Secretary of the Treasury effectively to pass upon the proposals of his colleagues at the Cabinet table. It is to be apprehended, therefore, that if the attempt is made to confer any such power upon him he will exercise it in either a timid or perfunctory manner.

5. A further objection to placing authority in respect to the preparation of the budget in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury is that the Treasury Department is now one of the biggest spending departments of the Government. Overhead or general direction and control, such as is contemplated by a budget system, should be exercised by an officer or organ which is not itself a spending department. The advocates of conferring budgetary power upon the Secretary of the Treasury have sought to meet this objection by proposing that the Treasury Department be stripped of all of its nonfinancial services. This, however, would only partially meet the needs of the situation. The department would still have the administration of a large number of very important and expensive services—the Customs Service, the Internal Revenue Service, the mints, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the supervision of national banks, etc.

In this connection it is desirable to distinguish clearly between financial functions which have to do with general or public financial affairs and those which have to do with direction or control of the expenditure side of Government operations. At the present time the functions of the Treasury Department are exclusively of the first kind, if exception be made of the audit of public accounts, which latter function, it is now very generally argued, should be transferred to an independent office reporting directly to the fund-granting authority—Congress. The two classes of functions are wholly dissimilar and confusion in respect to them is due only to the fact that both are designated as financial. Giving to the President a bureau of the budget directly attached to his office would thus in no way lessen the present sphere of activities or importance of the Secretary of the Treasury. To put the bureau of the budget in the Department of the Treasury would mean that one of the biggest spending departments of the Government would be controlled by itself.

6. It has been urged in support of the proposal that the bureau of the budget be located in the Treasury Department that this is the system that obtains in Great Britain, a country which it is acknowledged has an exceptionally efficient budgetary system. Examination, however, will show that this is not a fact. The British treasury, notwithstanding its name, is not a department for the collection, custody, and issue of public moneys, the administration of the public debt, the collection of the revenues, or, indeed, for the performance of any of the important tasks having to do with the direct handling of the financial affairs of the Government. All these matters are handled by other services, known as the revenue services, the commissioner of the public debt, the Bank of England, etc., which are only nominally under the treasury, in much the same way as are all the other spending departments of the Government. The treasury itself, properly speaking, is nothing but a general organ of overhead administration and control having as its primary and almost its sole function the general control of the revenue and spending departments. It has, in a word, practically the status and functions that it is believed the bureau of the budget should have if made an independent service directly under the direction and control of the President. Thus the report of the exceedingly able select committee on national expenditure of the British House of Commons, which made a thorough study of the English budgetary system in 1918, criticized severely the one or two instances where the treasury department had itself undertaken the performance of governmental tasks, and said:

"We believe that the Treasury can not fully exercise its powers of control if it is itself a spending department, and we recommend that the direct responsibility for old-age pensions, which now rests with the board of customs and excise, a subdepartment of the treasury, should be transferred as soon as may be to another department."

A study of the British system would therefore tend to support the position that the bureau of the budget should have this independent status rather than that of having it made a subordinate service under one of the spending departments.

Even were the foregoing not true, the differences between the political systems of England and the United States are such as to render it practically impossible to make our Treasury Department function as does the British Treasury. Almost from time immemorial the British Treasury has been recognized, both inside and outside of the Government, as having a status not only distinct from but superior in authority to the other departments. The history of our Treasury Department has been the reverse of this. For the last hundred years the other departments have looked upon themselves and the Treasury Department as coordinate members in the President's Cabinet. It is almost impossible to conceive of their changing their attitude in this respect, and unless they do it is futile to seek to have the Secretary of the Treasury perform in a really effective manner the function of overhead supervision and control that is of the very essence of the powers of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer.

7. The only affirmative objections that are brought against locating responsibility for the preparation of the budget directly upon the President and in giving to him his own service through which he may meet this responsibility are that the director of such a bureau would either become a sort of super-Cabinet administrative officer or would have a standing that would not enable him courageously to pass upon and revise the estimates of Cabinet officers, and that the President would not have the time to discharge the additional duties thus placed upon him.

In respect to the first, it is of the utmost importance to appreciate that the proposal to create a bureau of the budget under the President does not carry with it any grant of power directly to that service. All grant of power is made directly to the President. The bureau of the budget will be merely the executing agent of the President. It will be the President who will make the decisions. He, and he alone, is in a position to assert his opinion and will over Cabinet officers. The bureau will thus have as its functions merely the raising of questions to be passed upon by the President, and the taking of the necessary steps to insure that decisions once made are carried out. The position of the director of the bureau will thus be strictly analogous to that of the present Private Secretary of the President. The latter will in effect have two private secretaries, one to assist him in handling his general political and personal affairs, and the other to assist him in the discharge of his duties as administrator in chief of the Government. No question can thus arise in respect to either the director of the bureau of the budget becoming an official superior in authority or power to the members of the Cabinet or being in a position where he can not act independently and vigorously in the way of bringing before the President matters affecting the efficiency of the organization of the administrative branch of the Government for the performance of its duties or the relative importance of demands made by the several subdivisions for the grant of funds.

In respect to the second, it is, of course, to be recognized that all the detail work of securing and maintaining records and information regarding the organization or activities of the Government, the justification for the demands made to engage in new activities, or to expand those already under way, the receipt and analysis of requests for funds as they originate in the several services and departments, and the final compilation of the budget, will be performed by the bureau of the budget, no matter where it is located. The President will thus be called upon merely to pass upon specific points that are raised by the bureau as the result of its examination of the estimates as received by it and its special study of administrative problems. It is believed that the President will, in normal times at least, have abundant opportunity to do this work. Both President Taft and his former private secretary, Charles D. Norton, in their testimony before the House Select Committee on the Budget stated unhesitatingly that he would. Thus Mr. Taft, addressing himself directly to this point, said:

"Now it is asked, Can the President do it? Yes; he can do it if you give him the assistants and the machinery with which to do it. If you give him a budget staff such as the Good bill gives him and have that staff made up of competent and expert men who know how, he can devote time to deciding questions that are critical in respect to policy, as the budget shall disclose. When there is a question as between a department and the budget staff as to whether something shall be cut down in the departments, the President would be there to act as final authority and to decide. He is thus backed up by the budget staff if he agrees with them, or by the department if he thinks they have gone too far and cut too much to the quick. Now, the budget is to contain: First, an estimate of the regular income; second, of the revenue and the method of raising it, or so much as the plan of expenditures may require; and, third, the estimates of expenditure with all of it based on the showing of prior years. It is to be the financial working plan of the Government; it is to be the financial review of the state of the mint; and it will contain the personality of the President. It will contain a résumé of his views as to the policy of the Government in every important field of finance, and that will draw to it a great deal of the Government's policies of all kinds.

"Of course, it will involve great labor on the part of the President in determining what those policies should be, but it will be something that he has got to meet; it will be something that he has got to take a part in; and while he has many duties, there will be no duty more important than this."

In practical operation the system would work about as follows: The bureau of the budget, in compiling the estimates, would, for example, find that there are three distinct services of the Government engaged in performing hydrographic and marine survey work—the Coast and Geodetic Survey, making surveys, preparing charts, etc., for the coasts of the United States and its dependencies; the Lakes Survey of the War Department, making marine surveys and preparing charts for the Great Lakes; and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, copying or otherwise reproducing charts of other countries and making special surveys in outlying waters. It would be the duty of the director of the bureau to raise before the President the question as to whether this system of having three distinct services for performing identically the same character of work was a proper one, and whether it would not be more efficient and economical to have all this work done by a single service. The President is the only officer who properly can pass upon a question such as this, involving, as it does, the activities of three separate departments. He could either act upon the recommendation of his director of the budget, or, what is more likely, following the British practice, provide for the appointment of a joint committee, composed of representatives of the departments affected and his own Bureau of the Budget, to consider and report upon the matter before making his final decision.

8. To sum up in a few words the position taken by the advocates of placing direct responsibility for the preparation of the budget upon the President and of giving to him his own service, independent of any of the administrative or spending departments, through which to meet this responsibility, is that a budget after all is but a tool of administration, the means to an end. The real thing sought is to bring about a situation where the President will really and effectively discharge his duties as general manager of the business corporation. That this will mean added duties and responsibilities for the President is, of course, evident; but until these duties are discharged, not merely occasionally, but currently, it is futile to expect that efficiency and economy in the administration of public affairs that the stockholders of any large corporation demand as a matter of right of their executive officers. The system advocated thus means not merely that the President shall once a year perform the important act of submitting his financial and work program, but that he shall currently throughout the year discharge in a more direct manner the duties of a general manager as regards the control of all subordinate services. Only as he does this will he be in a position intelligently to formulate his budget when the time comes. At the present time the President has no agency through which he can keep in close touch with administrative affairs. The bureau of the budget which it is proposed to give to him will furnish such an agency, and it must be evident that no agency located within one of the spending departments could possibly perform these duties in an equally efficient way.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return now to page 50 of the bill, to an item that we passed over, commencing with an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the paragraph passed over, together with the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for unmarked graves of Union and Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, February 3, 1879, and March 9, 1906; continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of civilians interred in post cemeteries under the acts of April 28, 1904, and June 30, 1906; and furnishing headstones for the unmarked graves of Confederate soldiers, sailors, and marines in the national cemeteries, $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MCKEOWN: Page 50, line 12, after the period insert a new paragraph:

"For furnishing headstones of durable stone or other durable material for the graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war with Germany in national, city, town, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy yards, and stations of the United States, where on account of the financial condition of relatives or other circumstances no headstone can be erected, $50,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think a point of order was reserved to the amendment. Since that paragraph was under consideration I have read the matter, taken it up with Maj. Lemly, who has charge of this division, to see what the situation is. I doubt very much if they really have the power to do what they claim they are doing. I think it will be necessary to have legislation to buy headstones, if that is determined by the Congress, to place over the graves of the soldiers of this war whose bodies are returned and placed in private cemeteries or in cemeteries outside of national cemeteries. Now, they would have authority under the provision of law for the purchase of headstones in national cemeteries, but Maj. Lemly advised the committee that the department proposes to work out this matter and come to the Congress with a concrete proposition in reference to it. The committee has reported all the department asked for, $100,000. Whatever may be the will of the Congress in the matter, of course, will be the will of the Committee on Appropriations. That is to say, if the Congress shall enact legislation to provide headstones to be placed over the graves of these soldiers, no matter in what cemeteries the bodies may be interred; if that legislation be enacted, why, of course, the appropriation will be forthcoming, so I trust the gentleman will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman, does not he think it will be necessary to amend the language, even though we do not appropriate any additional money? Does not the gentleman think that the language proposed in the paragraph ought to be amended, after the word "marine," in line 3, to include "soldiers, sailors, and marines of the war with Spain and the war with Germany"? I do not believe that language, while they may give it that construction——

Mr. GOOD. They say they are doing that very thing, and the language is broad enough.

Mr. McKEOWN. I know, but I think it is a dangerous policy to permit a department to be forced to construe language in order to meet a condition that arises. I think the Congress ought to give full authority in its language, so that the department will not be inclined to make a forced construction. I would like to withdraw the amendment and offer an amendment to include those words in line 3.

Mr. GOOD. Well, now, if the gentleman will read the language carefully he will see that this includes:

And other burial places under the acts of March 3, 1873, February 3, 1879, and March 9, 1906; continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of civilians interred in post cemeteries under the acts of April 28, 1904, and June 30, 1906.

I will say this to the gentleman, I do not know what the will of the Congress is with regard to this matter, and I do not believe the gentleman knows, and the Congress ought to go into it first and then appropriate afterwards.

Mr. McKEOWN. The amendment which I propose now does not propose to add an additional dollar to the appropriation. It simply makes it so they can use it if they have the money, and I think it ought to be put in.

Mr. GOOD. What I am afraid of in making amendments on the floor in matters of this kind is that we may do something so that the Department will say that they can not expend the money in the procurement of headstones. Now, they say they can secure headstones and have been securing headstones not only for the soldiers of the Civil War and the War with Spain but for soldiers of the war with Germany. That being the case, it seems to me that the administrative officers having decided that question, I would look with some disfavor upon amending it until I know the matter has been submitted to the administrative officers for fear we might make a worse mess of it.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is the very thing that I am complaining about, that we ought not to permit a department to make a strained construction of language which is plain and which does not apply and does not include these soldiers, but we ought to so say so that they will not have to make a strained construction.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it not a fact that this money must be expended in accordance with certain acts of Congress named in the paragraph?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; I take it that is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, any amendment which the gentleman offered would not affect those acts of Congress, would it?

Mr. McKEOWN. Well, if they are using the money now, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, and applying it to the soldiers of the War with Spain without any special act of Congress, why, it would certainly cover that situation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not know how it is used now, except as stated by the gentleman from Iowa. Congress has passed special legislation upon this subject several times, and this paragraph in the bill making the appropriation authorizes these things in accordance with certain acts of Congress. That is all they can do, it seems to me. The legislation is on the statute books.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think that some provision should be made to take care of the soldiers of the last war, those of the late war with Germany, in marking their graves as well as the others?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, it may be that some provision ought to be made, although I doubt very much the desirability of offering to pay a fixed sum of money to the relatives of every one who died regardless of the need for it.

Mr. McKEOWN. But my provision covers wherever the financial condition of the relatives is such that they can not construct a monument.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the amendment which the gentleman sought to propose and withdrew.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And offered in place of it language which does not cover that, and I doubt whether the suggested amendment now would do any good or make any change because the appropriation is to be expended under the provision of certain acts of Congress.

I do not recall just what they are. I am frank to say that. I do not think we could enlarge it without legislating.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment inserting a new paragraph and to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MCKEOWN: On page 50, line 3, after the word "marines," insert the words "soldiers, sailors, and marines of the War with Spain and of the war with Germany."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up further time of the committee. I think that legislation ought to be enacted, and I think the demand is very clear. If the gentleman is going to make a point of order I will say that I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, of course, can not concern himself with the merits of the gentleman's amendment. The Chair has examined, so far as he has been able, during the informal debate that has just taken place, the law with reference to the placing of headstones at the head of graves of soldiers and sailors of the United States. The Chair finds that there is authority for the purchase and placement of these headstones, so far as soldiers who fought in the Civil War are concerned, but is unable to find any authority for the purchase and placement of headstones of soldiers or sailors of the late World War. The Chair therefore thinks that the amendment is new legislation and is not in order upon an appropriation bill, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 65, to the item beginning on line 3.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the item passed over, and the pending amendment to the same.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this item was not passed over. I just want to offer an amendment striking out the word "Aqueduct," in line 3, and insert in lieu thereof the word "Georgetown," so as to make it conform to the amendment offered on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:
